CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FIFTIETH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

power to take steps for the reduction of the surplus. They misrepresented the amount of the surplus in their Presidential convention of 1884, as I will show; but if there was any one thing which they stood pledged to do it was, immediately and without delay, to adopt measures for the reduction of this surplus accumulation in the Treasury.

We have waited here now more than two years and a half, nearly three years, for some bill to come to us looking to a reduction of revenue, and we have wondered why its coming was so long delayed. It has not come yet. Nine long weeks have passed since we have been told that there was a condition of the Treasury which might any day precipitate financial disaster and ruin, and no bill has been introduced, so far as my knowledge extends, looking to a reduction of this surplus.

This is not a Republican administration. It took a good while for the people to get over the idea after the last Presidential election that this was not a Republican administration; but it is a Democratic administration, and if money has been allowed to accumulate in the Treasury and no effort has been made and no step taken for the reduction or the attempted reduction of that accumulation in the Treasury, the burden is not upon us; it is upon the party in power.

What reason can be given for this delay in the past, what reason can be given for this delay to-day, if it be not that the accumulation of money in the Treasury and our annual surplus income is being used, and deliberately used, to force Congress into a destruction of the protective system of the country? Why refuse appropriations for the needs of Government? Why refuse payment of its just obligations? Why has the party in power constantly resisted necessary expenditure? Why have we had no bill passed for fortifications, none for coast defenses, none in the last year for the improvement of our rivers and harbors? Why, unless there has been a desire and a deliberate purpose that this surplus should accumulate until it could be held out to the country and the world as a menace to the business interests of the country with the recommendation that it must be reduced only by such change of our tariff laws as, I say, will result in the total abolition and discontinuance of the protective system?

Another thing, Mr. President. In less than three years we have a debt falling due of $230,000,000; on the 1st of January, 1891, bonds of the Government. Why not try to pay it in advance? Why does not this Administration try to anticipate the payment of that debt? What would be good financiering for a business man if he had money on hand which he had no use for, and had a debt falling due at a distant date? Would it not be to go to his creditor and say, "I have money on hand which I have no use for; you have a note against me falling due in future; I wish to make some arrangement with you whereby I can take up that note now." Why has not the Government done so? It would have made money by the transaction. It will make money if it will adopt that policy now instead of the policy of allowing the money to accumulate in the Treasury and in National Banks until the debt falls due.

Take a 4 per cent. bond. The 4 per cent. bonds are due in 1907. If the Secretary of the Treasury were to buy those bonds he would practically make $500 on each $1,000 bond, over allowing the money to remain in the Treasury and in the banks, and paying the interest until the bonds mature. Twenty years' interest on a thousand-dollar bond is $800, is it not? And it takes to pay the bond at maturity and the interest until maturity, $1,800. It can be bought in the market now certainly for $1,280, and that makes a saving to the Government on the transaction of $520. Why should the Government insist upon this money lying idle in the Treasury rather than attempt to anticipate the debt of the Government? If one-quarter as much time had been spent in attempting to devise some fair plan by which an arrangement with the creditors of the Government could be made for the anticipation of the debt which should be satisfactory to them and profitable to the Government as has been spent in conferences to try to devise some scheme for striking down the industries of this country, that arrangement could long ago have been perfected.

If the mysterious agents who have been flitting between the importers of New York and the White House and the committee-room of a body which I may not name here had turned their attention to negotiations between the Government and its creditors, there would have been no difficulty in arriving at some arrangement by which the debt of the Government could have been anticipated, and the Treasury relieved of its accumulation; but there would have been no opportunity then to insist that the protective system of the country must be stricken down.

But the President says there is doubt about the authority of the Government to do this. Let us see what he says. I want to read it, for it is a remarkable claim—remarkable in view of the practice of the Government and his own practice in regard to other matters. He says:

> In the present state of legislation the only pretense of any existing executive power to restore at this time any part of our surplus revenues to the people by its expenditure consists in the supposition that the Secretary of the Treasury may enter the market and purchase the bonds of the Government not yet due at a rate of premium to be agreed upon. The only provision of law from which such a power could be derived is found in an appropriation bill passed a number of years ago, and it is subject to the suspicion that it was intended as temporary and limited in its application, instead of conferring a continuing discretion and authority.

Pretense indeed! What is this reasoning but pretense? Here is the provision in the appropriation bill referred to. It is not injected among the appropriations in the bill, which is the sundry civil appropriation bill of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes. It is not injected into the appropriations, but it constitutes a section by itself. I will read it:

> SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury may at any time apply the surplus money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as he may consider proper, to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds: Provided, That the bonds so purchased or redeemed shall constitute no part of the sinking fund, but shall be canceled.

There could be no language framed which could be any more explicit to show that that was a continuing authority; and yet the Secretary of the Treasury, as I must assume, by the direction of the President, bought out of last year's revenue bonds for the sinking fund and charged it to last year's revenue, so that there might appear to be $113,000,000 excess of revenue this year, when if he had charged it to this year's revenue there would not have appeared to be any such excess of income.

I undertake to say that in my belief a good lawyer can not be found who would say to the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Treasury that there is any question about the right and power of the Secretary to purchase bonds under that provision of law. If there had been a real hearty disposition on the part of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury to relieve the Treasury from this accumulation of money, I believe that it would have been done. Why do I believe so? Because they neither of them hesitate to obey a law which exists only upon appropriation bills when it suits their purposes and their needs to do so. When they desire to act under an appropriation bill they have no "suspicion" whatever of its validity, and they do not talk about "pretense," and "supposition," and "suspicion" in relation to such acts.

Did it ever occur, I wonder, to the President when he was writing this message and talking about the "suspicion" that he could not buy bonds under this existing authority, because it was put on an appropriation bill many years ago, that month by month he himself is drawing a salary at the rate of $50,000 per annum instead of $25,000 per annum, when the only provision for that was upon an appropriation bill passed "many years ago?"

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] inquires whether I really think he would take the money. I think he is drawing it with great precision and regularity, probably on the first day of each month, notwithstanding the fact that the only authority for it is to be found in an appropriation bill passed many years ago, as much open to the "suspicion" that it was intended to be temporary as is the act for the purchase of bonds which he does not think he can execute. This was the appropriation bill of March 3, 1873, to be found in the seventeenth volume Statutes at Large, page 485. In the executive appropriations of that bill I find this:

> For compensation of the President of the United States, $25,000.

In the legislative appropriations I find this:

> That on and after the 4th day of March, 1873, the President of the United States shall receive in full for his services during the term for which he shall have been elected the sum of $50,000 per annum, to be paid monthly.

If it had been the case of the purchase of bonds, attention would have been called to the fact that the same bill was inconsistent in its two provisions, and that the one under which the $50,000 salary was to be drawn was put not upon the executive appropriations, but upon the legislative appropriations.

We all know how that bill was passed. We know that with it was passed the other bill which was called "the Salary Grab." We know that the next year as soon as Congress could get together it repealed the provisions of that bill so far as it related to Senators and Representatives, and yet there is nothing in this circumstance which indicates to the President of the United States that there is any "suspicion" whatever that that clause was not intended as a continuing authority to draw the increased salary.

Let us take another appropriation bill. I am trying to maintain this proposition, that when the Secretary of the Treasury wants to do a thing and when the President wants to do it they are not troubled because the authority is found on appropriation bills. There is a little trouble in the Treasury Department. They have undertaken to try to keep the currency pretty well inflated until after November next, and it has been pretty hard work to do it. The national-bank circulation has been rapidly withdrawn, and the only way of meeting it has been twofold—one to put all the money in the Treasury into the national banks to loan out to the people, and the other to issue silver certificates in small denominations as fast as it could possibly be done, and I think I am not mistaken when I say they are running presses night and day to do that now, or if not they are asking for more presses to meet the demand. Where do they get the authority? On the appropriation bill for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and they have no authority since June 30 of last year to print and issue these notes except that which is contained on an appropriation bill. I will read it:

> And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to issue silver certificates in denominations of one, two, and five dollars, and the silver certificates herein authorized shall be receivable, redeemable, and payable in like manner and for like purposes as is provided for silver certificates by the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal-tender character," and denominations of one, two, and five dollars may be issued in lieu of silver certificates of larger denominations in the Treasury or in exchange therefor upon presentation by the holders, and to that extent said certificates of larger denominations shall be canceled and destroyed.

Compare the language of the two provisions. Is the authority for the issuing of silver certificates any more express than the authority for the purchase of bonds? Not a particle. There was an old story that I read in my childhood in which a man said it made a good deal of difference whose ox was gored; and it makes a good deal of difference with the President and Secretary of the Treasury whether they want to do a thing or whether they do not want to do a thing.

But the President says that there is a great danger that if he did attempt to relieve the Treasury by the purchase of bonds, the wicked holders of bonds would combine and run up the premium on them unreasonably.

In considering the question of purchasing bonds as a means of restoring to circulation the surplus money accumulating in the Treasury it should be borne in mind that premiums must, of course, be paid upon such purchase, that there may be a large part of these bonds held as investments which can not be purchased at any price, and that combinations among holders who are willing to sell may unreasonably enhance the cost of such bonds to the Government.

And yet the statement was made with the recent knowledge that $27,684,283.55 of bonds, both fours and four-and-a-halfs, had been purchased in open market by the Secretary of the Treasury without enhancing the price one dollar. Why not try it again under this authority? Why not keep on at least until these wicked holders do make this combination and enhance the price upon these bonds to an unreasonable extent? There is but one answer, and that is this accumulation of money in the Treasury is put there to frighten the people of the United States to give up the protective system. Suppose more specific authority is requested—and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] I see does not quite follow the recommendations of his commander-in-chief in this respect. He thinks with me, that no better use can be made of idle money than to apply it to the payment of future debts. It is one thing to praise the President to the skies, and it is another to state that on the whole, after all, Senators are not willing to follow his recommendations in all respects. But why is it, if it is desired that this should be done, if the President and the Secretary of the Treasury are anxious to relieve the Treasury of its "congested" condition, why is it that no bill giving to the Secretary of the Treasury specific authority for that purpose is pressed in this body, to say nothing of the other body of Congress? I think there is no constitutional provision against the introduction and consideration of such a bill in this body. It is not a revenue bill. Any Democratic Senator who has desired during these long nine weeks, or who desires to-day, that the Secretary of the Treasury shall have authority to purchase bonds which is not open to "suspicion" can bring in a bill to that effect and press it on the consideration of the Senate and it will not take a great while to pass it.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me to interrupt him for a moment to call his attention to the fact, which he may have mentioned without my hearing it, that the Secretary of the Treasury, in purchasing bonds, himself fixed the price of every single bond purchased?

Mr. PLATT. And he can do it in the future.

Mr. PLUMB. Therefore, that did not open any door whereby combinations could be effected, because he named the price at which the Treasury would buy the bonds.

Mr. PLATT. What man has done man can do; and if the Secretary of the Treasury has once purchased bonds without any possibility of the price being enhanced, it is fair to presume that he can do it again.

Mr. PLUMB. And in the same connection, the price of both those classes of bonds which the Secretary purchased at his own price immediately declined after his purchase was concluded.

Mr. PLATT. And have not been higher since, unless for an exceptional day.

Mr. PLUMB. They have been lower since, all the time.

Mr. PLATT. I have already said that a reduction of our annual income, unless it is far below the current needs of the Treasury, will do nothing towards relieving this "congested" condition.

I now come to this question, How much reduction of the governmental income is necessary or wise? My argument would be stronger, if possible, more conclusive, if I were to adopt what is the general understanding throughout the country as to the President's recommendation, and the Secretary of the Treasury's recommendation, and argue upon $100,000,000 reduction; but I want to be fair. I wish this country to understand that there is no need of $100,000,000 reduction, and that it can not be made with any wise regard to the condition of the national finances. As I said, the President's figures have carried the idea that it ought to be $113,000,000. The Secretary of the Treasury, with this debt which I have spoken of staring him in the face, proposes a reduction below the current needs of the Government. Let us see what the surplus annual income is in fact. I take a number of years, and the figures bring to mind some most remarkable statements made both in the Democratic Presidential convention and by the Secretary of the Treasury in past reports.

The surplus income of the Government, deducting from its receipts what it is obliged by law to pay and no more, was for the year ending June 30, 1885, $17,859,735.84; for the year ending June 30, 1886, it was $49,405,545.20; for the year ending June 30, 1887, $55,567,849.54.

Those have been the actual figures of Government receipts over Government expenditures by law. Then we come to the field of estimate. The estimated amount for the year ending June 30, 1888, is $66,182,214.52; estimated for the year ending June 30, 1889, $56,469,206.74. No $113,000,000 surplus revenue there, but there is something there to which I wish to allude.

The convention which nominated the present Executive was held in June, 1884. It said this:

Surplus taxation of more than $100,000,000 has been yearly collected from a suffering people.

And the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Manning, thought it important enough to quote in his annual report for the year 1886; but in the very year which followed that declaration the surplus revenue of the Government was but seventeen million and odd dollars. It is said that a lie will travel leagues while truth is putting on its boots, and we have never been able to overtake that false statement made by the convention which nominated the present Executive, and it will be repeated next fall on every hustings by Democratic orators.

What was it the next year? The next year it was $49,405,545.20, the year ending June 30, 1886; and yet that very same year in his report to Congress the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Manning, said that our surplus taxation was $125,000,000 a year, and emphasized it by giving it a display heading in his report.

It has been said sometimes in excuse of this that they did not reckon the sinking fund and the amount expended for the necessary purchase of silver for coinage as obligations of the Government; but is there any man in the Senate who will stand here and say that the law which provides for the sinking fund is not just as much an obligation of the Government as that the Government should pay the interest on the public debt? There is no excuse for this misstatement and misrepresentation of the surplus taxation, as it is called, in the United States.

So, then, I say that the utmost that taxation can be reduced without imperiling the financial condition of the country is $60,000,000. That is the outside. It ought not to be more than $55,000,000 even upon the policy which the Democratic party seem to have adopted of the administration of the Government economically and penuriously. I would reduce less even than that. I would expend more. My experience in life has taught me, and somewhat painfully taught me, that it is not a pleasant condition to be in and that it is not good business for a man to be in a condition where he has no money in his pocket except that which he must pay out for his daily expenses. That man is not very well off financially. What is true of the man is true of the United States. The idea of reducing so that there shall be no money in the Treasury, depleted entirely, run from day to day and hand to mouth, using its daily receipts to meet daily expenditures, is a policy which is entirely unwarranted by any sound financial theory.

But I would expend more, Mr. President. I might say, in passing, that when the President sent us that message representing an accumulation of $55,000,000 in the Treasury, he might have been told that that was there because duties on manufactured goods had been reduced and the revenue thereby increased, and because previous Congresses had refused to make the necessary expenditures for Government. I would expend more. I would have a little patriotism instead of so much penuriousness. I would have some coast defenses. I would not be longer at the mercy of foreign powers, at the mercy of England, whose system it is sought to engraft upon our republican institutions. I would have a navy built as if we intended to have a navy, and not in the pottering way in which it has been going on under this Administration, and I would have reasonable appropriations for internal improvements.

I would have, even if I do not think very much of our foreign representation, our diplomats, our ministers, our consuls, enabled to represent this country abroad in a respectable manner, to say the least, and I would pay them enough so that they could do so. I would have an American policy. I am sick and tired of going to any other land for the policy of this great Nation. We are large enough, strong enough, cultivated enough, to have a policy of our own, to have manners and customs of our own; and we ought to be proud to have them. If it were possible I would have an American policy, and whatever was reasonably calculated to extend and develop and foster that American policy and give us a foothold amongst the nations and respectability everywhere befitting the condition of a free republic I would spend money for.

I would pay the debts which the Government owes, the ascertained debts of the Government, which are being pressed upon the Departments and upon Congress, some of which have been adjusted and ascertained and which are just as much debts against the Government as any ascertained debt can be against an individual. I would stop this cheese-paring policy in all that relates to necessary expenditures and the enlargement in all that relates to personal services and salaries. But I agree to the necessity of some reduction.

But, Mr. President, the more you reduce taxation on the President's plan the more completely you destroy the protective system. Assume that we are to reduce taxation annually only $60,000,000, and that to be alone on raw materials and manufactured goods; that is practical free trade. It is absolutely free trade on raw materials. Here are the figures. I have a table of dutiable raw articles and the revenue obtained from them, and I will put the whole table in the RECORD. It amounted last year to $12,419,699.

Dutiable raw materials and the revenue obtained from them.

Coal-tar dyes	$522,686
Potash	104,716
Soda	1,448,263
Coal	581,000
Copper ore	108,096
Hemp	194,136
Manilla	626,895
Jute	393,788
Sisal grass	493,751
Hay	184,351
Hops	217,917
Iron ore	525,193
Marble	229,672
Salt	706,324
Lumber	867,849
Zinc	88,900
Wool	5,126,108
Total revenue	12,419,699

The proposition is to get that amount of reduction, $12,000,000, by putting raw materials on the free-list. There is no question about that being free trade—no pretense, I think, that that is revenue reform. It is revenue destruction. There is no pretense that there is to be a revenue tariff on raw materials. There is to be none. That leaves $47,500,000, if we are going to reduce $60,000,000, to come off protected manufactures. How much do they pay now? I quote from the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], whom I think I can rely upon as authority:

Let us now turn from raw materials to manufactures. The imports not on the free-list, or classed by me as luxuries or raw materials, are articles partially manufactured for use as materials for manufacture, and manufactured articles ready for consumption, of the value of $218,052,246, which pay as duties $84,034,090.

That is all we get from them. Now, understand the proposition. From the duties on these manufactured articles wholly or partly manufactured, we propose to take off $47,500,000, if the recommendations of the President are to be in any wise complied with. They furnish now but $84,000,000. More than half of the income derived from these articles must be swept away in some way, the President tells us. You would naturally suppose that a 50 per cent. average reduction would about accomplish it. If it would, a 50 per cent. average reduction, as every Senator knows, would be a reduction below the protective point, and protection would be gone.

Reduce pig-iron to $3.36 instead of $6.72, steel rails to $8.50 instead of $17, and all other iron and steel duties in the same proportion, and what becomes of that American industry? I do not overstate it when I say that there would be scarcely a furnace left in the United States, or a mill for the treatment of iron. But a reduction of 50 per cent. upon those $84,000,000 which have been collected from manufactured articles will not accomplish the result. The knife must be plunged in deeper than that to get the reduction, for there is not a student of political economy in the junior class at one of our colleges who does not know that a reduction of duty upon manufactured articles, until you get down to the point where there is no protection, increases the revenue rather than diminishes it.

One thing which has been alluded to before, the reduction of the duty on worsted goods and on worsted yarns, is an illustration, which the Secretary of the Treasury himself acknowledges, of the truth of this fact, that even a substantial reduction of tariff duties only serves to increase the revenue. It is the revenue that the President claims that he wishes to have disposed of, and I thank the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] for telling the truth in this respect. He said:

No sane man can suppose that more revenue could be obtained from these articles by increasing the duties thereon. Common sense teaches that the only way to do that would be to lower the duties to the point where the importers could afford to compete. The proposition is too plain to require elaboration. It will hold good as to every item on the dutiable list on which the duty is now above revenue point. It can not be otherwise.

Then again he said:

Small as was the reduction on wool by the act of 1883, the increase of duties received on wool itself and four articles of its manufacture in three years was $11,465,503, under that law.

And so with many other items in the tariff lists; but these will suffice as illustrations of my position.

Is it possible that the President of the United States is the only person in the United States who does not understand this? I can not assume that to be possible. If he does understand it, then the conclusion is inevitable that to obtain the reduction which he says we must have in the income of the Government by the reduction of tariff duties such reduction must be more than 50 per cent. Whether ignorant of this or not the result is the same—the absolute destruction of the protective system. I note his disclaimer:

It is also said that the increase in the price of domestic manufactures resulting from the present tariff is necessary in order that higher wages may be paid to our workingmen employed in manufactories than are paid for what is called the pauper labor of Europe. All will acknowledge the force of an argument which involves the welfare and liberal compensation of our laboring people. Our labor is honorable in the eyes of every American citizen; and as it lies at the foundation of our development and progress, it is entitled, without affectation or hypocrisy, to the utmost regard.

To whom does the President allude when he uses the words "affectation or hypocrisy?"

The standard of our laborers' life should not be measured by that of any other country less favored, and they are entitled to their full share of all our advantages.

I note what the President says about the reduction of duties upon manufactured goods not being to the disadvantage of the laboring men of the country; but if I saw a man digging away the barrier which held back the great waters of a mountain reservoir, and he told me that he only intended gentle irrigation and benefit to the valley below, I should pay very little attention to what he said in that respect. And when I find the President of the United States insisting upon a methed of tax reduction, as he is pleased to call it, which must result in destruction, it does not relieve the situation that he tells me that it will not in any way work to the disadvantage of the laboring men of this country. It is a good principle in law, and it is a good principle anywhere, that a man must be held to intend the consequences of his acts; and the President of the United States must be held to intend the consequences of his recommendations.

Why not make this reduction elsewhere? Why not reduce by repealing internal-revenue taxation? Because the protective system would be left in force in this country. War taxes! There is one tax that is absolutely a war tax, and that is the internal-revenue tax. The tariff tax, if it were a tax, existed to some extent before the war. I think, indeed, that, all things being considered, it is not much higher now than it was before the war; that has been elaborated somewhat by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]; but I can not stop for that. The war tax of the country is the internal-revenue tax. Why not repeal that, or as much of it as is necessary to get the required reduction?

It is a tax upon our own productions, be they tobacco or corn. It is a tax that operates unequally, and yet the President of the United States says directly that nobody objects to that; and this great accumulation, this surplus of money, must pile up in the Treasury rather than touch the internal-revenue tax! How is it that this war tax, about which we have heard so much, has all at once become so sacred? Why not repeal the tobacco tax? Everybody knows that thereby we can reduce our annual income $30,000,000, or within a fraction of that amount. Why not take off the tax upon alcohol used in the arts? To say the least, there will be $10,000,000 more—$40,000,000. And then if you must get as much reduction as I have been talking about, why not take the rest off sugar; 25 per cent. off sugar will take off $15,000,000 more in round numbers. Or, if you do not want to repeal the whole tobacco tax, if you want to treat the entire internal-revenue tax as a whole and will not touch sugar, why not take half off from tobacco and from whisky? What reduction will you get? Fifty-six million nine hundred and twenty-nine thousand seven hundred and eighty-eight dollars and sixteen cents. There is but one answer. If there is the fear of this accumulated surplus in the Treasury which there seems to be, and no necessities for a coming Presidential campaign, and reduction of revenue was the only thing to be aimed at, it would be and could be easily accomplished by dealing with the internal-revenue taxation of this country.

Now, sir, let me inquire whether there is to be any attempted reduction of taxation, and if there is, is it to come along the lines recommended by the President, or is it to come along some other line? I want the Democratic party to follow their leader; I want them to obey their commander; I want them to take off the mask and let us have a square fight on this issue. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] devoted an hour or two to criticisms upon the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and he devoted a minute or two to telling us what sort of a measure we were going to get for the relief of the Treasury and the relief of our taxation. I quote:

But, Mr. President, both the internal and external tax systems will be treated as a whole.

Is that the recommendation of the President? Are the free-trade Democrats in this Congress going to attempt to play that game, and then go to the country claiming the President to be a free-trader, and that that is the issue in the next Presidential campaign?

The tax on tobacco will, I do not doubt, be reduced or wholly repealed; of this I shall be glad, and my vote on the subject will be governed by what I deem to be the fairness of the general revision.

That is safe, to say the least. And now, coming from a State which has more interest in the protective system than the State of Connecticut has, I find this as the only allusion to the interests of his State:

Iron and coal and the wool and other products of labor and of care and of enterprise will not be sacrificed in this revision.

It is pretty hard to find a free-trader who is not to some extent a protectionist for the matters in his own State. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], who lauds the President and says he stands with both feet on the message as a platform, does not want any free ore for Alabama; and I venture to say that the Senator from West Virginia does not want any free coal for West Virginia or free iron ore.

They will stand as other industries of the country stand, subject to their fair share in the benefits of whatever the system may be as revised, and bearing, as they ought to bear, their fair share of the burdens of the common lot.

Is the President to be deserted by his party leaders in this Congress? Are not his recommendations to be followed? Is not the recommendation of the Chief Executive equivalent to a command?

We know what the President means. He means free trade. Let us see what free trade means. It means, first, financial disaster. But that is the least of the burdens which it bears. It means the degradation of American labor.

The Senator from Maine, I think, said that up to 1842 not so much attention had been paid to the effect of a protective tariff upon the laborer of the country as to the development of its manufactures; but I have never known the matter better stated than by Rufus Choate in a speech which he made on the 14th of March, 1842, in the United States Senate, in which he said:

But this I am ready to avow: that the protection of American labor, on all its fields and in all its forms, is to be kept constantly and anxiously in view in all our arrangements; that you have the constitutional power to secure that protection, and that you are bound to do so, regardless of everything and everybody but the Constitution, justice, and a true and large American policy.

If these words had been spoken in 1888 they could not have been more pertinent to the situation. I pause to remark that if when Rufus Choate delivered that speech in the Senate in the year 1842, announcing that the object of this protective tariff was to protect labor in all its fields, any one had ventured to predict the marvelous development which this country has seen from the year 1842 under that system, varied as it has been at times, but generally maintained, he would have been put down as a chimerical dreamer. If Rufus Choate, with prophetic vision, had dared to predict what his policy of protection would do for America, he would have been laughed at. From that day to this the cause of protection has been the cause of labor. No sophistry, no railing about manufacturers can change that issue. Under the American system of protection, labor has reached its highest standpoint in the history of mankind.

Since the day when Adam tended the gardens of Paradise labor has never been so elevated or honorable; the man who works has never been so intelligent, so comfortable, so happy, so respected, so wealthy, so powerful as to-day in the United States. He is in privilege the equal and peer of any man. For the first time in the world's history he is an independent sovereign. The men who work, the toilers, under our system hold this protection in their own hands. They hold their destiny in their own hands. The cry for cheaper production means cheaper labor, and cheap production and degraded labor go hand in hand always. I do not say, let me repeat, that labor has had or now has its just share of the wealth which it helps to create, but it comes nearer to it here than anywhere else, and it can not obtain it under free trade. Take away protection from the industries of the United States and you take away the ability of the employer to pay better wages and of the worker to obtain better wages or a greater share in productive results.

Ah, Mr. President, if the dream of the philosophic socialist is ever to become fact, if his millennium is peacefully to come when the nation shall be one great co-operative commonwealth, assuming the direction of all enterprise and distributing to each his just share of the reward of labor, even then the United States will need more than even now it needs the continuance of this protective system.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. PLATT. I am nearly through.

Mr. BLAIR. Let the regular order be informally laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to that course.

Mr. PLATT. Look at practical results. Raw materials on the free-list, wool from Australia, iron ore from Spain, Algeria, Cuba, Elba, lumber from Canada, coal from Nova Scotia, and salt from Turk's Island—are these the countries where labor is well paid? I want to say here, and I want to put it on record, that cheap raw materials are the badge of poverty the world over. Put all these on the free-list; they will be cheaper perhaps, but $300,000,000 of American capital will be gone, and from 200,000 to 350,000 American workmen will be out of employment. What is labor to gain by such a governmental lockout as that? It will no longer be a question of what capital ought to do by labor; it will no longer be a question of higher or lower wages in those enterprises which are now engaged in the production of raw materials; it will be a question of no wages. Bituminous coal costs now at the pit-mouth but from $1 to $1.17 a ton. How much of it will be mined with the duty of 75 cents per ton removed? All that is used along our great seacoast and far inland will come from Nova Scotia, and the mines here must stop; and when they stop there is no question between the miner and employer as to how much wages the employé shall receive from the employer, and so with all other industries producing raw materials.

Let us go a little further. We have a production of manufactured goods equal to $6,000,000,000 in the United States. What is the object of the free-trader in reducing the duties? That he may buy foreign products. Suppose the destruction of our protective system would give foreigners only one-tenth of our home market—it would, in fact, give them vastly more than that, but I think so much will be admitted by any free-trader. What is that? That is $600,000,000 a year that we give up of our own market. What does that mean? It means the destruction of one-tenth of the capital employed in manufacturing enterprises; it means the throwing out of employment, not temporarily, but permanently, of one-tenth of the artisans employed in manufacturing operations. Where are they to go? There is no demand then. There are just two places they can go to—one is the farm and the other is the poor-house.

In the poor-house they do not crowd the agriculturist; on the farm they do. Or if they obtain work in such manufactories as are able to live in this country, what is the result? Down go the wages of all, because there is a pressure of the unemployed for places.

Now look at the other side. We imported last year of certain protected manufactures as follows:

Woolen manufactures	$14,902,718
Silk	31,347,923
Iron and steel	49,203,164
Cotton	28,940,353
Chemicals	13,591,668
Jute, hemp, etc.	21,933,028
Crockery	5,716,268
Total	196,635,122

There are some others that I might include, but I do not. Suppose those articles had been made in this country, as they ought to have been made here, and as they would have been made mainly if there had been the proper protection afforded to our manufacturers, what would have been the result? According to the ratio of production here 100,000 men—mechanics, artisans, skilled mechanics, and laboring men—would have been directly employed in the production of these articles. Should we have had good times or bad times then? Would wages have been lower or higher then? The manufacturers would have been bidding for labor. And not only those employed directly, but the farmer who supplied them with the products of his farm, and the carpenter who built their houses, and the groceryman and the butcher who fed them, and the teacher who taught their children, and the clergyman who preached to them on the Sabbath would all have found more employment and more business. And yet the President says that we must not protect any more or to any greater extent these industries; on the other hand, we must break down and do away with this protection. All that I fear in the coming contest is that the Democratic party will not have the courage of its convictions to stand up to the President's recommendations.

I will say one word about the method which the President proposes by which manufacturers are to be compensated, as he aims all of this message at the manufacturers. They can get cheap raw materials, and then he says they can compete with other nations in the markets of the world. The poor, pitiful privilege that they are to have to save them from ruin is to go away from their own country to seek markets in other countries. Foreign trade is desirable, but it is not worth obtaining at the sacrifice of the trade of this country. The trade of this country is the marvel of God's own civilization, and to give up any portion of it in the hope that we may in some way compensate ourselves by getting the markets of the world, as they are called, is the height of folly and absurdity.

Where are the "markets of the world?" Not in England, not in Germany, not in France, not in Belgium or Holland. We are not going to sell our goods in England or the other countries I have named in competition with the foreign manufacturers. Freight and factorage are against us. We are not going to sell in English lands which she holds by the strong power of her army. We are shut up to South America; and if we could get all the trade of South America, it would not be 6 per cent. of our home market. I wish we had it; but the idea of opening our ports, taking off our tariff duties, letting the foreigner flood our market with his goods, and then telling American manufacturers and American laboring men that we can compensate ourselves by going into the markets of the world if we can only have reduced duties, it seems to me is idle, and of all free-trade sophistries is the shallowest. Is it the proposition of wisdom, is it the proposition of statesmanship? It is the proposition of free trade. The line is drawn. On which side does the President stand? Where does the Democratic party stand? We, as Republicans, are protectionists, with all that word implies. Is the President of the United States or is the Democratic party in any sense protectionist?

Sir, it is too late in the century to belittle the system of protection by asserting, as the President and all other free-traders assert, that it lays a tax upon the consumer paid to the manufacturer. It is too late in the century to seek to destroy that system by appealing to the disquiet of laborers in the hope of arraying them against it because it protects alone or primarily the manufacturers and brings "immense profits" to their pockets.

Protection is for the whole of United America; its benefits are as extensive as our boundaries; its "immense profits" are as widely diffused as our citizenship—it blesses and beautifies every home, it helps and . . . gthens every citizen, the importer of foreign wares alone excepted. It is the policy of United America in its competition with all the world. Under the fostering influence of that system America has gained its rightful place in front of the grand procession of the nations. And unless we blindly permit a Democratic President and a so-called Democratic party to destroy this our sure safeguard of national success, United America will continue to lead the world in the grand struggle for human advancement.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 6th instant approved and signed the act (S. 191) to make additional appropriation for the printing of the eulogies delivered in Congress on the late John A. Logan.

INDIAN WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. DOLPH and Mr. CALL rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] yield to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]?

Mr. CALL. I will do so, the Senator having requested me to do so, and given notice of his desire.

Mr. DOLPH. I gave notice last week that on Friday last I would ask the indulgence of the Senate to call up a bill lying on the table, for the purpose of making some remarks, but the Senate adjourned over on Thursday, and I then renewed the notice for to-day. I am sorry to interrupt the regular order, and I assure the Senator from New Hampshire that I shall be very brief, and occupy as little time as possible.

Mr. BLAIR. Before the Senator proceeds I should like to understand what the proposition is that is before the Senate. I suppose it is the educational bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). The educational bill is the regular order now before the Senate.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask unanimous consent that it be temporarily laid aside that I may call up the bill to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be done, unless there be objection.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask to have Senate bill 63 taken from the table for the purpose of enabling me to submit some remarks.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 63) for payment of balance unpaid on Oregon and Washington Territory Indian war claims for suppression of Indian hostilities in 1855 and 1856, as found due by commission appointed by Secretary of War, consisting of General Rufus Ingalls, Capt. A. J. Smith, and Hon. L. F. Grover, pursuant to act of Congress, and disallowed by Third Auditor of the Treasury, as per his report of February 7, 1860.

Mr. DOLPH. Let the bill be read. It is quite brief.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $3,296,658.81 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for payment of balance due sundry claimants in the State of Oregon and Washington Territory, arising out of the Indian wars of 1855 and 1856 therein, as found due and payable by the commission appointed by the Secretary of War, consisting of A. J. Smith, Rufus Ingalls, and L. F. Grover, pursuant to act of the Thirty-fourth Congress, chapter 129, section 11; the said sum being amount unpaid of the total found due and payable by said commission, as per their report to the Secretary of War.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, the claims of citizens of the State of Oregon and of Washington Territory against the United States, the payment of which is intended to be provided for by the bill under consideration, are predicated upon the fourth section of the fourth article of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that—

The United States shall guaranty to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and on application of the Legislature, or of the executive (when the Legislature can not be convened) against domestic violence.

And upon the latter part of the tenth section of the first article of the Constitution, which is as follows:

No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty on tonnage, keep troops, or ships of war in time of peace, enter into any agreement or compact with another State, or with a foreign power, or engage in war, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay.

Under these provisions of the Constitution a large number of claims have been preferred by the States and Territories against the General Government and audited and paid. In other cases Congress has provided for the payment directly to the troops and to the parties furnishing supplies of the cost of protecting the State or Territory from invasion or of suppressing Indian hostilities. There is, I believe, an unbroken line of precedents for the payment of claims preferred under these provisions of the Constitution for expenses incurred by States and Territories, and by citizens of the States and Territories, in cases of invasion or insurrection, where the emergency was such as to require action before the United States took effective measures for the protection of the people.

The claims in question arose out of the Indian war of 1855 and 1856 in Oregon and Washington Territories, and are for pay of volunteers called out by the Territorial authorities and who served in that war, and supplies furnished for their equipment and subsistence.

The origin of the war, and the character of the emergency which justified the Territorial authorities in calling for volunteers, will be presented after the efforts which have been made to secure payment of the claims have been stated. Immediately after the close of the war the claims were presented to Congress and the obligation of Congress to provide for their payment recognized. By the eleventh section of the act of August 18, 1856, the Secretary of War was directed "to examine into the amount of expenses necessarily incurred in the suppression of Indian hostilities in the late Indian war in Oregon and Washington by the Territorial governments of said Territories, for the maintenance of the volunteer forces engaged in said war, including the pay of volunteers," and he was authorized, if in his judgment necessary, to appoint a commission of three persons to ascertain and report such expenses.

By an order issued from the War Department September 4, 1856, Capt. A. J. Smith, United States Army; Rufus Ingalls, United States Army, late Quartermaster-General; and Lafayette Grover, afterwards Representative in Congress from Oregon, governor of the State, and United States Senator, were appointed as a commission to ascertain and report upon the expenses incurred by the Territories as aforesaid.

The commissioners met at Portland, Oregon, October 20, 1856, organized the board, proceeded with the consideration of the subject assigned them, and determined to ascertain and report—

1. The number and distinctive character of the volunteer troops which were actually and properly in the service of the two Territories engaged in the suppression of Indian hostilities in the late Indian war in Oregon and Washington, their terms of service, and the pay due them.
2. "The amount of expenses necessarily incurred" for their maintenance.

They reported that—

The initiative steps of the organization of the volunteer forces in Oregon, early in October, 1855, were quite precipitous, and consequently, in some cases, irregular. This organization was based upon the militia law of the Territory as it then existed, declaring the same military district for brigade purposes, of which, by authority of the act of Congress organizing the Territory, the governor was commander-in-chief. This law further provided for the appointment by the governor, of a brigadier-general, and for the election, in subordinate districts, of colonels and subordinate officers of regiments. It also embraced the usual departments of the general staff, and provided for the commission of their chief and subordinate officers.

During the continuance of hostilities the Legislative Assembly of the Territory commenced its session on the first Monday of December, 1855. At this session an act was passed reorganizing the militia system, so as more fully to provide for the exigencies of the volunteer service. (See session laws of Oregon, 1855–'56, p. 55, herewith accompanying.)

This act (Chap. III, sec. 1) provides that "in time of invasion, insurrection, or the breaking out of Indian hostilities, the governor, as commander-in-chief, shall, unless he deems the exigencies of the moment to require his calling out the full militia force of the Territory, issue his proclamation calling into service as many companies, battalions, or regiments of volunteers as he shall think necessary to protect the lives and property of the citizens, and to establish and preserve the public peace." The same act also recognized "the field organization of the volunteer forces of the Territory" then in service.

At the same session of the Territorial Legislature another act was passed, entitled "An act to provide for paying the volunteers in the service of the Territory, and for the prosecution of the existing Indian war" (see session laws aforesaid, p. 25), which gave special authority to the governor "to call for and accept the services of any number of volunteers, not exceeding three full regiments, who may offer their services as mounted riflemen, to serve six months after they shall have arrived at the place of rendezvous, or to the end of the war, unless sooner discharged."

The commissioners then proceed to state under which acts the governor of Oregon called for and mustered volunteers into the service of the Territory, and the circumstances under which certain companies came into the service somewhat irregularly; but as both by their report and by the report of the Third Auditor of the Treasury, hereafter referred to, all the volunteers were recognized as properly in the service and entitled to compensation, it is not necessary here to pursue this branch of the subject further. After determining what troops were in the service and entitled to pay, they obtained certified rolls of officers and privates concerning which they state that they contained—

The names of all officers and privates in said service, indicating the rank of each, and the time when, the place where, the officer by whom, and the period for which mustered. They set forth in what manner the troops were mounted, whether on horses owned and furnished by the volunteer or by the Territory, the valuation of such horses, and the valuation of equipments and arms. They also state the time of enrollment and discharge of each volunteer, and the period of service; and they further state the amount and character of all property—such as clothing, arms, equipments, etc.—received by the volunteer from the Territory during service, which should be accounted for by him, or which might constitute a stoppage against any pay which shall be finally due him.

As to the manner in which the allowance for the pay of the volunteers in Oregon was arrived at, they reported that—

In taking action upon these rolls relative to the pay of volunteers in Oregon, the commission bases its report upon the law of that Territory touching the premises, not only as being legitimate, but as containing as equitable a rule for adjusting the rates of pay as probably could be devised under the circumstances.

The act last before referred to (session laws, 1855–'56, page 26) contains the following provisions:

"SEC. 4. Whenever such volunteers are called and received into the service of the Territory by virtue of this act, each non-commissioned officer and private shall be entitled to receive $2 per day and rations, and $2 per day for the use and risk of his horse, except for horses actually killed in action, unavoidably lost, or reported unfit for service and turned over to the quartermaster; in which case the owner shall receive the appraised value thereof, and all commissioned officers shall receive the same pay as officers of the same rank in the Army of the United States: Provided, That commissioned officers shall receive the same pay for the use and risk of horses as non-commissioned officers.

"SEC. 5. This act, so far as the same relates to the pay of volunteers, shall be so construed as to apply to all who have been in the service of the Territory since the commencement of the existing Indian war, and it shall also extend to the services of the Ninth Regiment of Oregon militia while in actual service in said war."

With these provisions in view, and the rates of pay and allowances therein contained as a basis of action, the commission proceeded to ascertain (1) the amount of pay due each volunteer for his whole time of service; (2) the amount of allowances for use of horses, arms, and equipments, including compensation therefor in case of loss; (3) the total amount of pay and allowances; (4) the amount of stoppages for clothing and other public property furnished, and (5) the total amount of pay remaining due. The specific results are entered upon the rolls under their appropriate heads, in distinct columns, amounting, in all stoppages deducted, as follows:

Troops' service, Oregon, including field and staff	$1,409,604.58

Concerning the volunteer service in the Territory of Washington the commission reported that it commenced by the requisition of Maj. G. J. Raines, Fourth Infantry, United States Army, at the time commanding the Columbia River and Puget Sound district, on Acting Governor Mason, of that Territory, for two companies of volunteers to act in concert with the regular troops, which was made on October 9, 1855, immediately upon receipt of the report of Major Haller's repulse by the Indians in the Yakima country. The two companies were called out and organized and entered the service of the United States.

The volunteer troops properly in the service of Washington Territory during the war consisted of two regiments called into service by Acting Governor Mason and Governor Stevens, and—

The muster-rolls of Washington Territory have been perfected under the direction of the commission, and are in character and detail like those of Oregon, herewith before explained.

The aggregate number of troops borne upon the rolls of this Territory is	1,896
Approximate number of troops in service at any one period	1,000

In taking action upon the pay of the volunteers of Washington Territory, the commission, in the absence of any law of the Territory on the subject, deemed it proper and just to recommend the same rates of pay and allowances as have been reported in the case of the volunteer troops of Oregon. The pay-rolls embrace like action of the commission, and have been carried into detail in the same form, with the following results:

Troops' service, Washington, exclusive of field and staff	$476,951.88
Staff department, and field and staff and employés enrolled	42,641.18

In reporting upon the amount of the expenses necessarily incurred for the maintenance of the volunteers, the commission said:

In examining into the amount of expenses necessarily incurred for the maintenance of these volunteer forces, the commission deemed it proper, under the authority contained in the order organizing the board, to visit extensively both Territories, with a view of being informed fully of the nature and extent of the late Indian hostilities, the means employed for their suppression, the rates of labor, the prices current of property furnished the service, and the facilities and expense of transportation.

The officers of the staff department of the late volunteer service were visited, and the mode of doing business and the integrity of their accounts inquired into.

For the purpose of furnishing the troops with quartermasters', commissaries', and medical supplies, as well as the means of transportation, the officers and agents of the staff departments of the late volunteer service made such purchases of property and employed such labor as was deemed necessary and was required by the proper authorities.

Such purchases were made and such labor was performed on trust, the faith of the Territories being pledged to the payment of liabilities arising therefrom. Certificates of purchase, and of services rendered, were issued generally in duplicate, one of which was held by the claimant, and the other retained by the officer or agent. These certificates generally contained a statement of the character and the quality of the property purchased, or the kind of services rendered, and the rates and amount agreed to be paid for the same, being authenticated in various forms according to the manner of doing business in the different offices of the departments in the two Territories. These retained duplicates, as vouchers, have formed the basis of the exhibits made by the Territories of their total liabilities incurred for property or labor furnished to the military service. They have been accompanied with such abstracts and tabular statements as are requisite to give form and perspicuity to accounts.

The commission, in pursuing its inquiries into the character and extent of such liabilities, first took up these vouchers and examined each in detail with reference to, first, its being genuine and sufficiently authenticated; second, the kind of property or service embraced, whether or not proper or necessary under the circumstances for military purposes to which devoted; and third, the rates of compensation allowed or contracted for.

Frequent conferences were had with officers and agents who originated these vouchers, and with the parties claimant, in all cases admitting of doubt in the regularity and integrity of the claims, and, when necessary, the sworn statements of disinterested persons have been taken.

Such claims and items in any claim as were based upon the furnishing of property or labor not necessary or proper for the maintenance of the volunteer forces have been rejected.

In passing upon the rates of compensation and allowances the commission took into consideration the various market prices of the different sections of country embraced in the field of operations during the late Indian war, and established, on the statements and testimony of the most competent witnesses, carefully adjusted prices current of the several local markets. With these rates as a guide, each voucher was examined with reference to the sums therein allowed for the property or service deseribed. In all cases where there existed established rates for particular kinds of property in a district, and the rates in the voucher were excessive, a deduction was recommended and indorsed thereon. In cases where rates were not excessive, the voucher was indorsed "Approved."

Many of the claims were for kinds of property which could not admit of action upon any fixed basis, in which cases particular inquiries have been made in adjusting the amount allowed.

In this department of its duty the commission has paid what was deemed to be a due regard to the condition of the country and the circumstances under which the liabilities were incurred.

* * * * * * *

The total amount of expenses ascertained and allowed for the maintenance of volunteer forces in the Territory of Oregon, not including pay of volunteers, is $3,040,344.80; in the Territory of Washington, $961,882.39.

A general integrity has been observed in the management and disbursement of the public property by officers and agents who have been charged with its control and use. In instances where the contrary has been discoverable, which are few, action has been taken, and noted on such rolls and vouchers, as would effect a proper accounting with the Government.

A general abstract of the work of the commission has been made, and is herewith accompanying, showing the results of its labors in each Territory. These general abstracts refer to each distinct department of the service, and exhibit the total of expenses necessarily incurred in the suppression of Indian hostilities in the late Indian war in Oregon and Washington by the Territorial governments of said Territories; for the maintenance of the volunteer forces engaged in said war, including pay of volunteers, as follows:

The expenses of Oregon, the sum of $4,449,949.33.

Expenses of Washington, $1,481,475.45.

Making a grand total of expenses incurred by the two Territories during the war of $5,931,424.78.

I have above presented the portions of this report which I deem most material to the present inquiry. I have quoted from it extensively because, by the bill under consideration, it is proposed to make it the basis of a readjustment of the accounts of Oregon and Washington for expenses of the volunteer forces called into service by them.

The Secretary of War, in his annual report of 1857–'58, speaking of this commission, says:

These officers entered upon their duties on the 10th day of October, 1856, and seem to have labored with great assiduity and patience in the discharge of them until the 20th of October last, when they were brought to a close. I have examined their report very carefully and conclude that from the data they have adopted for their guide as to the prices for stores and subsistence, and the time of service rendered by the men, it is not probable a more just and accurate result could be attained than these gentlemen have arrived at. The amount ascertained to be due is a very large one, and Congress will have to make provision for its payment if it is intended they shall be liquidated.

The report of the commissioners was transmitted by the Secretary of War to the Senate in compliance with a resolution of that body on the 23d day of January, 1858, and to the House in compliance with a similar resolution on the same day.

On the 8th of February, 1859, the House passed the following resolution:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 8, 1859.

Resolved, That preliminary to the final settlement and adjustment of the claims of the citizens of the Territories of Oregon and Washington for expenses incurred in the years 1855 and 1856 in repelling Indian hostilities, it shall be the duty of the Third Auditor of the Treasury to examine the vouchers and papers now on file in his office, and make a report to the House of Representatives, by the first Monday in December next, of the amount respectively due to each company and individual engaged in said service, taking the following rules as his guide in ascertaining the amount so due:

1. He shall recognize no company or individual as entitled to pay except such as were called into service by the Territorial authorities of Oregon and Washington, or such whose services have been recognized and accepted by the said authorities.

2. He shall allow to the volunteers engaged in said service no higher pay and allowances than were given to officers and soldiers of equal grade at that period in the Army of the United States, including the extra pay of $2 per month given to troops serving on the Pacific by the act of 1852.

3. No person either in the military or in the civil service of the United States or of said Territories shall be paid for his services in more than one employment or capacity for the same period of time, and all such double or triple allowances for pay as appear in said accounts shall be rejected.

4. That in auditing the claims for supplies, transportation, and other services incurred for the maintenance of said volunteers, he is directed to have a due regard to the number of said troops, to their period of service, and to the prices current in the country at the time, and not to report said service beyond the time actually engaged therein, nor to recognize supplies beyond a reasonable approximation for the proportions and descriptions authorized by existing laws and regulations for such troops, taking into consideration the nature and peculiarities of the service.

5. That all claims of said volunteers for horses, arms, and other property lost or destroyed in said service shall be audited according to the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1849.

Attest:

J. C. ALLEN, Clerk.

On the 7th of February, 1860, Hon. R. J. Atkinson, Third Auditor of the Treasury, made his report to Hon. William Pennington, Speaker of the House of Representatives, upon these claims.

The amount due for pay of the volunteers, as represented by the rolls and reported by the commissioners, after deducting stoppage for clothing and other articles furnished, was as follows:

Oregon volunteers:
Troops' service, including field and staff	$1,409,604.53
Washington volunteers:
Troops' service, inclusive of field and staff	476,951.88
Staff departments and field and staff:
Employés enrolled	42,641.18

Upon this portion of the claims the report of the Third Auditor was as follows:

Applying army rates to the rolls as presented by the commissioners, the amounts found due to officers and soldiers for pay proper, use and risk of horses, commutation for clothing, etc., after deducting the stoppages, are as follows:

On Oregon rolls	$363,947.03
On Washington rolls	158,332.70
Total	521,379.73

The aggregate amount of claims for supplies, transportation, etc., reported by the commission was as follows:

Oregon	$3,040,344.80
Additional accounts of Quartermaster-General Drew	80,032.58
Total	4,082,259.77

The Third Auditor allowed on this portion of the claim the sum of $2,193,428.82, which, with the $521,379.73 allowed for pay of volunteers, makes the total allowance $2,714,808.55. The aggregate reported by the commission for expenses incurred in both Territories was $6,011,457.36

As the Third Auditor was acting only under the authority of the resolution of the House in auditing the claim for pay of volunteers, the reduction of the claim as audited by him was inevitable, and the responsibility for it lay with the House and with Congress for adopting the report as a basis of payment. As to the other branch of the claims, although the resolution of the House unjustly restricted him in auditing them, he was undoubtedly under the same influence which prevented the acceptance of the report of the commission by Congress. By gross misrepresentations of the facts and base slanders against the people of Oregon and Washington concerning the cause and conduct of the war, he was prejudiced against the claims and unjustly scaled them down.

I shall attempt to show what this influence was; to disprove the allegations made against the people of Oregon and Washington; to show that from the time Oregon was first settled by American citizens they had been entitled not only to protection from the United States, but to especial care from the Government; that they were neglected and exposed to extermination by savage foes, and that when they, impelled by the instinct of self-preservation, organized for the protection of their wives and children and punished the murderous savages, they were charged by the incompetent commander of the Department of the Pacific with having caused the war for speculative purposes, and their just claims were scaled down more than one-half. Congress has treated no other State or Territory in the same manner, but has finally paid all claims preferred for similar expenses according to the justice of the claims, although the pay of volunteers and prices of supplies in many cases were higher than the prices paid in the regular Army, and although supplies embraced articles not embraced in army stores.

An examination of the numerous acts of Congress providing for payment of similar claims will show that in some instances these claims were paid as presented by the States and Territories, in others they were paid as they had been estimated or audited by commissioners, and in others it was provided that they were to be paid, either by the accounting officers of the Treasury or by the Secretary of War, according to the justice of the claims.

By the act of March 3, 1861, entitled "An act to provide for the payment of expenses incurred by the Territories of Washington and Oregon in the suppression of Indian hostilities therein in the years 1855 and 1856," Congress provided for the payment, without interest, of the claims of the Territories mentioned substantially upon the basis of the Third Auditor's report.

By the time these claims could be audited under this act and were ready for payment the legal-tender currency of the Government was at a discount and many of these claims were paid in this depreciated currency. The claimants were not satisfied with this provision. Their claims were not only unjustly cut down to less than 50 cents on the dollar, but they lost their interest upon their money for six years or more when money was worth in Oregon and Washington from 2 to 3 per cent. per month, and then were paid in currency worth at the time in gold from 10 to 60 per cent. less than its face or par value.

The great injustice of adjusting the claims for compensation of the volunteers upon the basis of the pay provided by law for officers and men in the regular Army will be apparent upon a statement of the circumstances of the case. These volunteers were men who had endured hardship and braved peril in crossing the continent to carve out for themselves homes in the far-off Territory of Oregon; they were engaged in the profitable employments then on every hand open to the enterprising and industrious on the Pacific coast, and leaving their farms, their shops and stores, entered at once into service in the field, and when their services were no longer required, laid down the instruments of warfare and resumed their peaceful occupations. Men at that time could not be enlisted upon the Pacific coast for the regular Army, and on account of the inducements which business everywhere offered, desertions from the regular Army were numerous.

The regular troops were therefore necessarily enlisted in the Eastern States and transported to the Pacific coast at great expense to the Government. Two dollars per day, the amount of compensation provided by the Territorial laws of Oregon for the Oregon volunteers, considering the rate of wages at that time in Oregon and Washington and everywhere on the Pacific coast, the cost of transportation and maintenance of regular troops, and the character and duration of the service of the volunteers, was no more than a just compensation, and was cheaper to the Government, transportation and maintenance considered, than the pay of the regular troops.

Quite as palpably unjust was the attempt to adjust the claims for supplies furnished for the subsistence of the volunteers upon the basis of cash purchases for the use of the regular Army. One who entered into a contract to furnish quartermaster's stores for the regular Army knew that his claim for compensation would be audited and paid in the due course of business. He, as a rule, furnished a large amount of supplies and had time to take advantage of the market and to secure favorable terms for transportation. On the other hand, the men who furnished supplies for the volunteers knew that payment for them depended upon Congressional legislation, and that in any event liquidation would be indefinitely deferred. Prices for supplies so furnished were necessarily greater than cash prices for the same article in the Territories, and it would be a just and safe rule to adopt the prices fixed by competition and allowed by parties charged with the purchase of supplies at the time. This is what the commission appointed by the Secretary of War did after a thorough examination of all the facts in the case.

One reason for the action of Congress in dealing with these claims was its inability to comprehend the conditions of the Pacific coast, and to understand why prices should be higher there than in the East at the time of the war. Two dollars per day for pay of volunteers and the prices charged for supplies appeared so large to the average Congressman that they suggested extravagance and speculation. To show the value of labor and the high prices of supplies on the Pacific coast at that time, I quote the following from a letter from Major-General Wool to Hon. Jefferson Davis, Secretary of War, dated at San Francisco, March 31, 1854:

> The smallest cottage, with two or three rooms, in the outskirts of the city can not be rented short of $75 to $100 per month. A room in any agreeable part of the city, or anywhere near the business part, brings from $75 to $200 per month, payable in advance, the price depending on size and location, whether on the front, second, or third story. Board is from $25 to $50 per week, the price depending on location and size of bedroom. Servants can not be had for less than $50 to $100 per month, besides board. Cooks get from $75 to $100. Female servants get from $60 to $120 per month; this is owing to the scarcity of women. A common laborer in the city gets from $4 to $5 per day. A mechanic from $8 to $10 per day.
> To keep a horse at the livery stable it costs $50 per month; two, $100 per month. A coachman, $75, besides board. A carriage for an hour is $5; for a day from $15 to $30, the price depending on the quality of carriage and horses. A house like the one occupied by the Quartermaster-General, Paymaster-General, Colonel Abert, and Dr. Lawson, would bring $500 per month, payable in advance. I can procure no house I would occupy short of $250 per month, payable in advance. The best houses bring from $700 to $1,000 per month, payable in advance. Almost everything is in the same proportion.
> In conclusion, I have presented the above facts to show that no officer can live decently on his pay and emoluments without running in debt in California.

This letter was accompanied by a petition to Major-General Wool, signed by the officers of the Army then stationed at San Francisco, containing similar representations as to prices, and praying him to take steps to obtain an increase of their pay and allowances, and by certificates of some of the most respectable citizens of San Francisco, among whom was William T. Sherman, now General W. T. Sherman, showing that the allowance for fuel and quarters was insufficient to meet the expenses incident thereto. I quote the following from the petition of the officers to General Wool:

> The undersigned feel oppressively the burden of the times, and view it especially grievous that in a country where servants' wages are from $50 to $100 monthly, livery charges for a single horse $50 per month, washing $3 per dozen, and board and clothing from double to quadruple what it is in the Eastern States, that they should be compelled to receive an allowance in lieu of quarters and fuel so far below what are the current rates in this country.

There probably never has been in the history of this country a stronger case of neglect and failure on the part of the General Government to provide for the protection of its citizens in the States or Territories against Indian hostilities, and of the necessity for the assumption of the duty of protecting their citizens from such hostilities by the Territorial authorities, than the case now before us. The fact that the Government undertook to audit and pay the claims of the citizens of Oregon and Washington, growing out of the war of 1855 and 1856, might be treated as conclusive as to its obligation to do so, but as the claims under consideration are based upon the allegation that the demands of the citizens of these Territories were unjustly scaled down by the Third Auditor of the Treasury, acting, not under the authority of Congress, but under the direction of one branch only of the law-making power, and that the action of the Third Auditor, as well as that of Congress in adopting his report as a basis of payment, was influenced by damaging and false reports from the commander of the Department of the Pacific as to the cause of the war and the necessity for and character of the services performed by the volunteers, which reports were made, as the people of Oregon and Washington have always believed, to excuse his own negligence and lack of capacity, an examination into the circumstances under which the claims in question arose seems to be necessary.

In the years 1854 and 1855 the Government had ample warning that an Indian war was impending in Oregon and Washington Territories, and earnest appeals were made to it by the Territorial authorities, as well as to the commander of the department, for troops for the protection of the white settlers in these Territories in the event of Indian hostilities.

The Department of the Pacific embraced the whole coast from the Mexican border on the south to the British possessions on the north, over 1,600 miles in extent, and included California, Oregon, Washington, and Utah, more than one-fourth of the entire territory of the United States, with a sparsely settled white population scattered along the entire coast, without roads and without the means of transportation, and surrounded by numerous bands of Indians. To show that the number of United States troops stationed in the Department of the Pacific was not sufficient for the proper protection of the white settlers, I will let General Wool speak.

In a letter to Hon. Jefferson Davis, Secretary of War, dated at Washington, January 10, 1854, he says:

> I would suggest that the two companies at Fort Hamilton, N. Y., or two companies from some other post, be ordered to accompany me on the 20th instant, by way of the Isthmus.

In a letter dated at New York the 19th of the same month, to the Secretary of War, he says:

There can not be over one thousand troops to guard the seacoast of California and Oregon and the interior, including Utah, from Indian depredations. This force is entirely inadequate to act efficiently either on the seacoast or in the interior.

And in a letter to Lieut. Col. L. Thomas, Assistant Adjutant-General, dated at San Francisco, February 28, 1854, he says:

An increase of force to guard against difficulties with the Indians in California, Utah, Oregon, and Washington is indispensable. We have now about one thousand troops, daily diminishing by discharges and desertions. These are distributed over an immense territory in small commands. The number is wholly inadequate to give protection to either whites or Indians.

In a letter to Hon. Jefferson Davis, Secretary of War, dated San Francisco, March 1, 1854, he says:

To carry out the views of the President and Secretary of War in relation to expeditions fitting out against Mexico and to protect the whites and Indians against each other we require more troops. We have about one thousand men, the number decreasing every day by discharges and desertions, to defend and keep the peace of the immense territory of California, Oregon, Washington, and Utah. We have too few troops to do either one thing or the other.

And in a letter to the Secretary of War, dated San Francisco, May 30, 1854, he says:

In urging in my communication of February 28 that the troops be sent to California my object was simply to apprise you as well as the General-in-Chief, of the necessity of sending troops as soon as practicable in order that the peace and quiet of the country might be preserved, which is almost daily threatened by the whites and Indians coming in contact with each other. This was no less due to myself than to the service, no matter what your honor might have done on the subject, lest you should have supposed from my silence the immediate necessity did not exist and delay might have followed. Secondly, if evil resulted from it, I would justly deserve censure. Indeed, I think you would have had just cause for censuring me if I had not on my arrival represented the state and condition of the department to which I had been assigned, and more especially if the peace of the country was in danger. I was not willing under these circumstances to assume the fearful responsibility of remaining silent.

While I claim that General Wool neglected his duties as commander of the Department of the Pacific, and showed a lack of capacity to conduct the military operations upon the coast for the suppression of Indian hostilities, he did show from the first in his correspondence with the War Department that the forces of the Government under his command were totally inadequate for the proper performance of the duty of protecting the white inhabitants from Indian outbreaks. It was his want of appreciation of the gravity of the situation in Oregon and Washington; his failure to give that personal attention to the protection of the white settlements on the Northwest coast from threatened Indian hostilities that was demanded by his official position; his inactivity, apparent lack of practical knowledge of the Indian character, and of the effectual methods of dealing with hostile Indians; his jealousy of the Territorial authorities and contempt for the Territorial volunteers, that stamp him as unfit for the command he held, and show that he was largely responsible for the disastrous war out of which these claims arose.

The charge I make against the commander of the department is a serious one, but is justified by the facts. On January 7, 1854, Bvt. Maj. Gen. John E. Wool was assigned to the command of the Department of the Pacific.

He seems from the time of this assignment to have had an exalted idea of the duties of his position. In a letter dated at Washington on the 7th of January, to Hon. Jefferson Davis, he says:

If I understand the object of my assignment it is to preserve, as far as it may be practicable, the peace and quiet of the inhabitants within and without, and to restrain those of our citizens from violating treaties or the neutrality of the country, by fitting out expeditions against nations with whom we are at peace. If I comprehend the law upon this subject, in order to act efficiently in all cases it will be necessary for the President to delegate the power to me by special instructions.

And again, after especial reference to the Indian tribes of Utah, California, and Oregon, he says:

It is unnecessary to say that unless I have greater powers than I can have, without special authority from the President, * * * these bands might no less embarrass me than bring me in conflict with the agents whose particular duty it is to regulate the affairs of the Indians west of the Rocky Mountains.

The powers asked for to represent the President in the matter of suppressing filibustering expeditions and in the control of the Indian tribes do not appear to have been granted to him, but he appears to have assumed unwarranted powers and to have devoted his time to extraordinary duties to the neglect of those ordinary duties which it was incumbent upon him as commander of the Department of the Pacific to perform, and to have received for his neglect of the latter the censure of the then Secretary of War, Hon. Jefferson Davis. Mr. Davis, in a letter to General Wool, dated Washington, August 18, 1854, says:

SIR: Your letter of the 30th of May has been duly received. You permit yourself to employ a style of complaint, and even, in some degree, of reproach to the Department on account of * * * and the instructions sent to you in my letter of the 14th of April, in regard to your authority to suppress illegal expeditions against the Mexican territory. In this connection I will here take occasion to remind you that while you choose to hold the high commission of general in the Army you assume an obligation to render due respect and cheerful obedience to the authority and orders of this Department. * * *

My letter of the 14th of April is explanatory of the instructions of the 12th of January, so far as relates to unlawful expeditions against the territories of foreign powers. It is not necessary to argue whether your construction of them is sustained by their letter; it is sufficient to the Department to presume that the interpretation you originally put on them was sincere, and that you acted in accordance with that interpretation; but when you received my letter of the 14th of April, stating to you the construction which the Department designed you to place on your instructions, you should have been content to act in conformity thereto. * * *

But the instructions of the 12th of January embraced other matters which had been confided to you of equal importance, and which if attended to would necessarily have required your presence elsewhere than in the city of San Francisco, for at least a portion of your time, and this was the more expected from the assurances of your determination to make a thorough personal inspection into every branch of the military service embraced in your command. The Department is not aware that these inspections have yet been made, however advantageously they might have resulted to the service.

In a letter dated Washington, December 13, 1854, to General Wool, Mr. Davis says:

It was not intended or supposed that an officer holding the highest grade in our Army, and intrusted with the duty of preserving order among numerous Indian tribes and guarding the lives and property of our citizens within the limits of an extensive command, would confine himself month after month to a single city, for the purpose of aiding the civil authorities in watching the movements of secret associations and preventing the commission of civil misdemeanors—a pursuit in which his high military rank and experience gave him little if any advantage, while it lent to the prosecutions, especially when directed against foreigners, a character which they would not have possessed if conducted like others, proceeding only from the action of the judiciary.

That your devotion to this service has been attended with disadvantage to your military duties is an opinion in which I am sustained by yourself. Your letters of April 14 and May 15 show that you were aware of the consequences to which your exclusive devotion to a single pursuit was leading. In the former, indeed, you state in terms that since your arrival in San Francisco most of your time had been occupied in ferreting out and defeating the schemes of filibusters, and you had not been able to devote that attention to your professional duties which the public interest demanded. One of these duties, the first which you proposed to undertake, and from which beneficial results were expected, was the personal inspection of your command and the exploration of the country with a view to make such a disposition of the troops as would tend to check Indian depredations.

In the conclusion of your letter you present a group of services for which you claim credit: The preservation of peace in the Indian country; the erection at small expense of temporary batteries for the protection of San Francisco harbor; the erection of an arsenal building at Benicia; the establishment of a new post on the Indian reservation at the Tejon Pass, and preventing the loss of a million dollars' worth of public property at the Presidio. Upon these points, since you urge them upon my attention, I will briefly remark.

It would surely be very gratifying to me could I acknowledge your claim for having preserved peace in the Indian country; but to do this I should have to forget not only the outrages you yourself have reported, but others equal in atrocity to any that took place during the time of your predecessors.

While General Wool was devoting his time to the prosecution of parties engaged in fitting out unlawful expeditions, including the French and Mexican consuls, with his headquarters at San Francisco, he neglected every other portion of his department, and this, too, in the face of earnest warnings from different localities of Oregon and Washington Territories of the hostile attitude of the Indian tribes, and numerous appeals by the people of those Territories for protection from their savage foes. When hostilities at last broke out General Wool was still at San Francisco, and totally unprepared for the war, and, evidently to excuse himself for his failure to take precautionary measures, charged the white settlers with provoking the war, and could not be made to comprehend or admit the magnitude or imminence of the danger which threatened the entire white population of both Territories. The Federal troops in Oregon and Washington being entirely insufficient for the protection of the whites, at the call of the Territorial authorities the white settlers volunteered for the protection of their families and their homes, and, under the leadership of such men as General Joseph Lane, Cols. T. R. Cornelius, J. W. Nesmith, John Kelsey, J. K. Kelly, Lieut. Col. Lafayette Grover, and Lieut. Col. W. W. Chapman, and others, some of whom had seen active service either in the war with Mexico or in previous Indian wars, and knew the habits of the Indians, and who believed that during the winter months was the time to strike the enemy, followed the Indians to their winter quarters, fought, severely punished, and dispersed them. This gave great offense to Major-General Wool, who deemed a winter campaign impracticable.

This unfortunate difference between General Wool and the Territorial authorities engendered a feeling of resentment toward the people of the Territories which seemed to entirely control his future connection with the war and caused him to exert his influence against the payment of the claims of the Territories for the expenses of the war. I find this matter thoroughly and ably discussed in an address recently delivered by Hon. Elwood Evans, of Tacoma, Washington Territory, at Portland, Oregon, before the Association of Indian War Veterans of the North Pacific Coast, and from which I quote the following:

A retrospect of the condition of affairs in Oregon and Washington during the year 1855 is full of interest and materially aids the student of history in the proper solution of the question under consideration. The two Territories embraced the region westward of the Rocky Mountains lying between the forty-second and forty-ninth parallels of latitude, containing an area of nearly 300,000 square miles, about five times larger than the New England States combined, or equal to six States of the size of Pennsylvania and territory left of the aggregate area of the States of New Hampshire and Vermont. In this empire, in extent, the white population was perhaps 40,000, of which number 5,000 were resident in Washington Territory, or that portion north of the Columbia River. The white settlements were isolated and scattered from the California line northward to Bellingham Bay. In Washington Territory there were perhaps 1,600 men capable of bearing arms; in Oregon, perhaps 800. The Indian population numbered 20,000 in Washington Territory, and but little fewer in Oregon. In the vicinity of the Columbia River, on both sides, the hostile bands were principally located east of the Cascade Mountains. On Puget Sound and in Southern Oregon the white settlements were in close proximity to and surrounded by the hostile bands of Indians.

Military posts had been established and United States troops stationed throughout this wide domain, as follows: At Fort Steilacoom, two companies of infantry, 152 men; at Fort Vancouver, two companies of infantry, 194 men; Fort Dalles, three companies, two of infantry and one of artillery, 231 men; Fort Lane (8 miles from Jacksonville), two companies of dragoons, 115 men; Fort Orford (Port Orford), one company of artillery, 47 men—a total of 741 men.

A glance at the map, as to the extent and topography of the territory, the sites of the settlements, the points of location of the military posts, the number of troops in garrison, and the arm of service to which the companies respectively belonged, the hostile region and the number of hostile Indians, must at once force the conviction that for the purpose of holding the Indians in proper subjection, or repressing any outbreak of refractory tribes, such a military establishment was about as useful and beneficial to the safety or protection of the Territories as a fifth wheel would be to a coach. And just that and nothing more was the true condition of affairs when the authorities of the two Territories armed their volunteers to save the people from extermination.

The commanding general of the department was at Benicia, many hundreds of miles from the scene of trouble—he who was responsible for the fact that the Territory and its settlements were entirely unprovided with means of defense, who had made that distribution of the United States troops. From his headquarters at Benicia, at that date, of which this is the thirty-first anniversary, he says:

"I will leave for the scene of war at The Dallas on the 6th instant."

Who thus outlined his programme:

"It will not be safe to remove any more of the troops from their present positions."

Who repairs to the scene of war with the avowed determination of avoiding the necessity of recognizing volunteers.

Does that mean that the troops are to remain in winter quarters at Steilacoom, Vancouver, The Dalles, Fort Lane, and Fort Orford? The commanding general arrived at Fort Vancouver November 17, 1855. On the 13th day of December that general depicts a winter scene. He sneeringly refers to the troops under Colonel Nesmith "encountering the Yakimas, and after several skirmishes the enemy fleeing beyond his reach over mountains deeply covered with snow, from 2 to 5 feet deep." He then presents, as his view of a winter campaign, that:

"With my present force, however well prepared (which is not the case), to either conquer or bring the Indians to terms in this region, by chasing them, all being well mounted, through the mountains (and certainly not at the present moment, the mountains being generally covered with snow several feetd ·ep), is impossible. They can only be conquered and brought to terms by occupying the country and such positions as would command their fisheries and their valleys where their cattle and horses must graze. This I propose to do, that is, to occupy their country, and I am now with my staff actively preparing an expedition for that purpose. This, however, after a critical inspection of the troops, supplies, etc., I find can not be accomplished as soon as I could wish, owing to the want of a sufficient number of troops, the means of transportation, and the want of clothing for the Fourth Infantry. As soon as the animals have recruited and are rendered fit for service, my present force will be ready to take the field, and if I should receive in the mean time an additional force, at least a regiment, which would supersede the necessity of employing so expensive a force as volunteers, I have no doubt I will be able in a short time to either conquer the Indians of Oregon and Washington, or compel them to sue for peace or abandon their country."

The letter from which this extract is made contains also this remarkable confession of the utter inadequacy of the provisions he had made for such an emergency as was then existing:

"The regular force under my command was dispersed in small commands from the northern to the southern extremity of the department, extending over 1,600 miles, but not a sufficient force at any one point to overcome a combined attack by several tribes of Indians. Under such circumstances, before re-enforcements could be received from the East, or authority to call for volunteers, which would occasion a delay of at least two months and a half, the Indians in a general war might inflict an irreparable injury on the country, for it would be utterly impossible, with my limited means, to guard and protect so extended a country at all points at the same moment."

These statements and those already cited clearly establish the absence of a sufficient force to defend the Territory. The defeat of Haller had painfully proven the strength and confidence of the enemy, the weakness of the military. The requisition of Major Rains was but a confession of utter inability, an appeal for assistance to our war governors.

It is difficult to comprehend, while appreciating so well his inability to perform the duty imposed, that General Wool should have refused to accept the proffered aid from the settlers. There seems to have been the determination upon the part of General Wool that it was best to wait until the Government re-enforced him with regular troops. He hoped in the interval that Providence would co-operate by having removed the snow from the mountains. Then those Indian cattle and horses could graze and grow fat, then it would be the proper time to occupy the Indian country. Was it not too cruel and heartless to his plans that Governor Curry, heedless of the approacning inclement season, should, in November and December, 1855, have dispatched the mounted Oregon volunteers to the homes and haunts of the hostiles, there and then with due celerity to administer the punishment they so richly deserved for the murders of our people? True, had Governor Curry failed to act with that commendable promptness, the people of both Territories would most probably have been compelled to wait the coming of spring, when the snow should have disappeared. Then, to be sure, General Wool, with his newly arrived regiment from the East, his soldiers here who had been so sadly neglected, newly clothed, would have occupied the country where and when those Indian cattle and horses grazed.

"For, lo, the winter is past, the snow and rain are over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land."

The new clothes having arrived from the East, occupying the Indian country would prove but a picnic. His "headquarters in the saddle," with no snow in the mountains to impede his triumphal advance, the hostile Indians would flee before the pursuing hosts as chaff before the wind.

Enough has been said to demonstrate that during the fall and winter of 1855, if the people of the Territories secured protection or attempted to punish the Indian foe, they must rely upon their own efforts. While General Wool was at Vancouver in winter quarters, awaiting his return to Benicia and for the arrival of the Ninth Infantry, the Oregon volunteers in the stormy and severe winter of 1855–'56 were operating in the Yakima country under Colonel Nesmith. Lieut. Col. James K. Kelly led them to victory in the Walla Walla country. True, they were but raw volunteers, they were poorly clothed, scantily provided with food, inadequately armed; but they did find large bodies of Indians who resisted their advance, who offered battle. For days the Oregon volunteers fought the enemy, whipped them, and caused them to disperse in small bands and retreat after severe punishment. But that victory had added another cause of offense to that of their having been volunteers not mustered into the regular service. This expedition had proved that a winter campaign was practicable where the will existed to conduct it. Oregon militia officers, with troops not over a month enlisted, had thereby demonstrated that the military prescience of the veteran major-general was grievously at fault in hostile operations against Indians. Temerity, to be sure, but it added one more reason why the necessity for recognizing volunteers should be avoided.

I need not further to refer to that unfortunate difference between the commander-in-chief of the Pacific military department of the United States Army and our Territorial authorities, or to his feeling of resentment toward our people. This much has been rehearsed with the utmost reluctance. But in that cruel episode may be found the greatest, if not the only, reason for the denunciation of our people as conspirators to rob the national Treasury by causing that Indian war and conducting those so-called irresponsible raids in the Indian country. An adoption in whole or in part of the belief or opinion that those accusations would not have been made without some foundation in fact, is the apology for the delay and repudiation of the just claims of our veterans and our people, the creditors of the National Government, for having responded to the call of those governors and furnished the services and the means to enable Oregon and Washington Territories to have prosecuted their respective parts and duties in that war.

I have presented to the Senate the memorial to Congress of the Association of Indian War Veterans of the North Pacific Coast, praying Congress for an appropriation to pay the balance of the amount allowed by the commissioners for pay of volunteers and the value of supplies furnished, and praying also that the volunteers of the Indian war of 1855–'56 be included in the provisions of the law making grants of lands to volunteers in Indian wars prior to 1855, which has been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

In their memorial, after stating briefly the facts in regard to the origin of these claims and the action of the Government in regard to them, they say, in substance, that the Third Auditor knew but little of the value of property furnished, and scaled down the claims to prices which were one-half less than the property could have been purchased for in Oregon and Washington at the time, and that the volunteers, as their claims for services were audited by the Third Auditor, received only $11 per month, and out of that had to furnish their own clothing; that in traveling over the mountains their clothes were soon worn out, and had to be replaced by others at greatly inflated prices, and, as a result, many of the volunteers who performed important services in the war, after six months' service received no pay or nearly none. I commend this appeal of the veterans of the volunteer forces of Oregon and Washington, who bore an honorable part in the greatest conflict which ever took place west of the Rocky Mountains between civilization and barbarism, to the consideration of the Senate.

At the Oregon Methodist Episcopal Conference, held in 1856, which was attended by many of the early missionaries to the Indians of Oregon and Washington, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas our Territories have been the theater of a disastrous Indian war during the past year; and

Whereas an impression has, by some means, been made abroad that the people of Oregon and Washington have acted an unworthy part in bringing it on: Therefore,

Resolved, That though there may have been occasional individual instances of ill-treatment of the Indians by irresponsible whites, it is the conviction of this body of ministers, whose fields of labor have been in all parts of the Territories at the beginning and during the continuance of the war, that the war has not been wantonly and wickedly provoked by our fellow-citizens, but that it has been emphatically a war of defense, and that defense was deferred as long as Christian forbearance would warrant.

In December, 1857, while the events of the war were recent and the facts fresh, J. Ross Brown, a special agent of the Treasury Department, who had just returned to San Francisco from a tour of inspection through the Territories of Oregon and Washington, and who had improved the opportunity to investigate the causes of the war, in a letter to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Hon. J. W. Denver, gives the results of his investigations. He states that the origin of the war was not different from that of any other Indian war, and that it was the natural result of immigration and settlement. He lays the blame largely upon the Government for inducing settlement of the territory and granting the lands to settlers before extinguishing the Indian title; finds that the charge of speculation out of the public Treasury grew out of the feud between the commanding officer of the military Department of the Pacific and the citizens of the Territories, and was without foundation, and absurd; and closes by a statement of his belief that the commissioners to audit the war claims of Oregon and Washington had faithfully and impartially performed their duty, and that the sum they had decided upon was justly due. Such testimony from an impartial, intelligent, and official source is so important that I feel justified in quoting liberally from it. He says:

On my arrival in Oregon I conferred with all the leading citizens and obtained the views of nearly every Federal officer in the country. During a tour of more than two months I heard but one sentiment expressed, a general denial of the allegation that the hostilities were commenced by the settlers for purposes of speculation. From previous acquaintance with the people of Oregon I had formed the opinion that they were peaceable, honest, and industrious, and it seemed to me scarcely possible that they could be guilty of so great a crime as that charged against them.

In view of the fact, however, that objection might be made to any testimony coming from the citizens of the Territories, and believing also that it is the duty of a public agent to present, as far as practicable, unprejudiced statements, I did not permit myself to be governed by any representations unsupported by reliable historical data.

Upon a full review of the origin and progress of the war, I arrived at the conclusion that the feud between the commanding officer of the military department on the Pacific coast and the citizens of the Territories, out of which the charge of speculation upon the public Treasury grew, is a matter of very little national importance. The result of a mere political and personal quarrel of this kind can not affect the great questions at issue. The origin of the war is not different from that of any other Indian war. It is the natural result of immigration and settlement; and whether the governors of the Territories, public officers, and citizens generally committed an error in not placing themselves under the control and direction of General Wool, who came up after the war had commenced, or whether the part taken by him was best calculated to preserve and maintain peace, is not the question now to be decided.

A war took place, an expensive and disastrous war, from the effects of which the Territories will suffer for many years. Neither the commanding officer of the military department nor the citizens of the Territories, in my opinion, could have prevented it. The quarrel between them is undignified and unstatesmanlike. It was a war of destiny, bound to take place whenever the causes reached their culminating point. Although occasional hostilities have been engendered between the whites and particular tribes of Indians in every State of the Union by individual acts of aggression, either on the one side or the other, the history of our Indian wars will show that the primary cause is the progress of civilization, to which the inferior races, from their habits and instincts, are naturally opposed. From the time of the landing of the Pilgrims on Plymouth Rock to the present day we have had wars with the Indians, and they have all had a beginning. It matters little whether an individual act of aggression or a general movement becomes the signal for hostilities, a prior cause must exist.

The explorations of Lewis and Clarke, who were sent out by the Government of the United States in 1802 to ascertain the character and boundaries of the territory west of the Rocky Mountains, with a view of investigating the unwarranted assumption of the British Hudson's Bay Company of an exclusive right to trade with the Indians, present the first official narrative of American intercourse with the Indians of Oregon. From that period, during a series of many years, the country was visited by trappers and hunters from the frontiers of Missouri, a wild, reckless, and daring race of men, whose intercourse with the Indians was not calculated to afford them a high opinion of the Americans as a people.

In 1835 missionary establishments were formed west of the Rocky Mountains. The French, through their connection with the Hudson's Bay Company, established Catholic missions, and the Americans Protestant missions, between which jealousies and bickerings soon sprang up. Misrepresentations were, no doubt, made on both sides, and the result was that bitter hostilities were engendered between the cliques attached to each persuasion. In the autumn of 1847 Dr. Marcus Whitman and his family were murdered by the Indians. Mr. Spaulding, another missionary, charges that it was done with the knowledge and connivance of the Catholic missionaries. I send inclosed the reply of Father Brouillet, which professes to refute this charge. A perusal of the pamphlet will abundantly show the bitterness of feeling existing between the different sects, and its evil effects upon the Indians. It will readily be seen that, as little dependence can be placed upon the statements made by one side as by the other, and that, instead of Christianizing the Indians, these different sects were engaged in quarrels among each other, thereby showing a very bad example to the races with whom they chose to reside

The fact also is shown that as far back as 1835 the Indians west of the Rocky Mountains protested against the taking away of their lands by the white races; that this was one of the alleged causes of the murder of Dr. Whitman and family.

It is needless to go into a detail of all the difficulties between the whites and the Indians since the first emigration to the Territory of Oregon.

The same primary causes existed in every case—encroachments of a superior upon an inferior race.

In 1840 and 1841 the subject of the settlement of Oregon was agitated in the Senate of the United States by Senators Linn and Benton. Information as to the value and extent of this Territory was published to the country in their speeches. Settlers were encouraged to go there and secure homesteads for their families. Congress was urged to grant liberal donations of lands. Senator Linn made it, session after session, the especial subject of his mission to Washington, and never ceased, until the day of his death, to urge upon Government the great value and importance of our Pacific possessions, and the expediency of encouraging emigration there.

In 1849 Mr. Thurston went to Washington City as a Delegate from the Territory of Oregon. He represented to Congress the unsettled condition of affairs in that Territory, arising from the proximity of the Indians to the white settlements, and the difficulties which were frequently occurring between them. He urged that the people of Oregon were in an isolated and unprotected condition; that inducements had been held out to them by the Government to settle there, but they had not as yet acquired a legal title to their lands, and the Indians were constantly threatening to dispossess them. In fact, they only maintained their position by sufferance.

They were liable at any moment to be massacred. In consequence of these representations, and the pressing petitions of the people through their Delegate, Congress, in June, 1850, passed a law authorizing the appointment of a commission to treat with all the Indians west of the Cascade Mountains.

On the 27th of September following the donation law was passed, granting to single persons, who had settled prior to the 1st December, 1851, 320 acres, and to married couples 640 acres of the public domain, etc. No reservation was contained in this act predicated upon the action of the commission. The land was to be granted in fee-simple, upon actual residence for four years. In the preemption act of September 4, 1841, section 10, extended to Oregon July 17, 1854, provision is made excepting from pre-emption lands held in reserve by the Government, or to which the Indian title has not been extinguished. In the donation act Government departed from its usual policy and made no such exception. That this has been a fruitful source of difficulty there can be no doubt. It was unwise and impolitic to encourage settlers to take away the lands of the Indians. It was well understood, from experience with the Indians of other States, that they always claimed a right to the lands upon which they resided. They could never be taught to comprehend that subtile species of argument by which another race could come among them, put them aside, ignore their claims, and assume possession on the ground of being a superior people. Ever since the ordinance of 1787 it had been the practice of Government to recognize in them a possessory right which could only be extinguished by purchase or mutual agreement. Of course, as the terms were always dictated and enforced on the one side, whether the other party was satisfied or not, this compulsory process can not properly be dignified by the title of treaty. None of the so-called treaties with the Indians are anything more than forced agreements which the stronger power can violate or reject at pleasure, and of which privilege it has availed itself in all the treaties made with the Indians of Oregon.

In reference to the question of original right, I believe there is but little difference of opinion at the present day. Civilization can not be held back upon grounds of priority of possession. The question is simply one of public policy. When it becomes necessary to remove the aboriginal races to some more convenient location, they must be removed; but the stronger power, from motives of humanity, concedes to the weaker certain rights which it is bound in honor to respect. That Congress recognized these rights and intended to provide for them, is shown by the passage of the act providing for the extinguishment of the Indian title prior to the donation act of September 27, 1850.

In pursuance of the authority vested in him, the President appointed a commission, consisting of General Gaines, governor and superintendent of Indian affairs for the Territory of Oregon, Mr. Allen, special commissioner, and Mr. Skinner, an Indian agent.

The commission met at Shampoag, in the Willamette valley, in March, 1851, and proceeded to negotiate with the various tribes of the Willamette. In April they concluded several treaties. Under these treaties reservations were fixed at the forks of the Santiam and at Yam Hill. The selection of lands thus made was singularly unfortunate, most of them being already covered by claims under the donation act. The removal of the Indians from one part of the valley to another, where the interests of the settlers were the same, could in no way have operated advantageously. The sum of $20,000 was expended in making these treaties, without any beneficial result. The settlers held meetings and protested against the acts of the commission. Petitions to the same effect were forwarded to Congress. It was considered that the treaties were injudicious in their terms and ought not to be ratified. But this was not the fault of the Indians. A solemn compact was made with them. The terms were imposed by the stronger power, and accepted by them from necessity. Most of their lands had already been taken away from them under the donation act, and under the treaties they gave up, for certain considerations, what remained. But the agreement thus dictated to them was never ratified and they never received the promised considerations under that instrument. Between private individuals this would be regarded as obtaining property under false pretenses.

In the mean time the commissioners were preparing to go south and treat with the Rogue River and Shasta tribes, whose disaffection was becoming formidable, when an order came from the Indian department suspending their functions. The offices of governor and superintendent were disconnected, and a new superintendent (Dr. Dart) was appointed. This officer, acting in conjunction with Mr. Skinner, Indian agent, made treaties with the Clatsops and other coast tribes near the mouth of the Columbia, a peaceful and degraded race of no importance and with whom there was no pressing demand for treaties. Mr. Skinner was then ordered south to prepare the way for negotiations with the southern tribes. He held councils with the most powerful and warlike tribes; urged them to be patient awhile; that Government would soon make treaties with them, and pay them for all their lands. But neither the promised treaties nor the promised payments were made till they forced Government to pay some respect to their demands by an attempt to exterminate the white settlers who were crowding in upon them, and whose encroachments had been the subject of protest and complaint amongst them since the first claims under the donation act. The Rogue River war of 1853 will not soon be forgotten. These tribes were in constant intercourse with those of the Willamette valley. They saw that there was but one way of securing their rights—by force of arms. Nor were they by any means conquered when they agreed to the treaty of September 10, 1853. Had they chosen to hold out and take to the mountain fastnesses of their country, it might have taken ten years to subdue them. It was not only through the determination and gallantry of General Lane, who led the volunteer forces in this war, but his thorough knowledge of Indian character, his skill in that sort of diplomacy, his general sagacity and prudence, that it was brought to a close. The most enlightened and influential of the chiefs knew him personally, and respected him both in war and peace. But they either misunderstood the terms of the treaty, or the inducements held out to them to stop the war were such as it was not afterwards practicable to fulfill. Their views upon this point are fully set forth in my report of November 17 ultimo, in which the result of a "talk" with them at the Siletz reservation is given in detail.

In order to preserve as far as practicable the connection between the causes of war in different parts of the Territory, I must again return to the treaties of Shampoag. As already stated, they were never ratified. It was well known to the public authorities in Washington that the donation act had gone into operation, and that the non-ratification of the treaties left the Indian title unextinguished. The causes of the Rogue River war of 1853 were fully detailed in the various reports of the officers of the Territory. It can not, therefore, be said, with justice, that it was the fault of the settlers that nothing was done to arrest the impending war. Sufficient warning had been given. The newspapers, from day to day, were filled with accounts of murders by the Indians; sometimes pack-trains attacked; the camps of miners robbed; dead bodies of white men found on the mountain trails, etc.

At the time the treaties of Shampoag were negotiated (April, 1851) the valley of the Willamette was the main resort of the Klickitats, a powerful and warlike tribe from the country west of the Simcoe, in the Cascade Mountains. This tribe has well been compared to the Arab merchants of the East. Bold, adventurous, and cunning, they had gradually acquired an influence over nearly all the Indians of Oregon as far south as Rogue River.

At an early date (probably between 1835 and 1840) they descended from the Simcoe to the banks of the Columbia River, on the northern side, where they commenced war against the Cowlitz, Chenook, and other inferior tribes, whom they soon conquered and reduced to such terms of tribute as they chose to dictate. In 1841 they began to turn their attention to the south side of the Columbia.

Rich valleys and fine hunting grounds existed there, of which they had heard traditionary reports. At this time the Clackamas, Moleallies, Yamhills, Santiams, and the other tribes of the Willamette valley had become greatly reduced by diseases introduced among them by the whites. Small-pox, measles, and venereal had swept them off by thousands. They were wholly unprepared to resist the encroachments of their warlike and formidable neighbors. From time to time, as opportunity occurred, the Klickitats crossed over, made inroads upon them, and finally entirely subdued all the tribes of the Willamette, whom they caused to pay tribute. Assuming a possessory right over the whole valley, they established camps on the various rivers, and in the course of a few years, by gradual advances, pushed their way over the Calapooia Mountains into the valley of the Umpquas.

In former times the Umpquas were a powerful tribe, owning all the country between the Calapooia Mountains north, the Cañon Mountains south, the Cascades east, and the Pacific west. The Shastas and Rogue Rivers had frequent wars with them, but finally, through mutual interest, effected a coalition. From this time the Umpquas began to lose much of their original independence, and at the period of the invasions of the Klickitats had greatly degenerated.

The Klickitats, fresh from the scenes of the recent victories, skilled in the arts of war, and still determined upon subduing all the races of the south, found no difficulty in reducing the Umpquas to such terms of submission as they thought proper to dictate. One great source of their success was their skill in the use of fire-arms, of which they had procured an abundant supply from the trading posts of the Hudson's Bay Company.

They opened an extensive trade with the southern tribes in furs and peltries, and crossed the mountains at various intervals during the year. The valley of the Willamette was their public highway to the north, and their depot during the greater part of the year, where they left their property and families. After the emigration, under John Applegate, in 1843, they found it profitable, during particular seasons, to work as farm laborers, and soon became well skilled in the arts of husbandry. Their services were regarded as more valuable than those of any other class of Indians. Desirous, however, of pushing their conquest still farther south than they had yet penetrated, so as to obtain the same supremacy over the Shasta and Rogue River tribes which they had already obtained over the Umpquas, they proffered their aid to the whites on the occasion of every outbreak or manifestation of war. In 1851, when Lieutenant Stewart was killed on Rogue River, near the mouth of Stewart's Creek, they armed themselves ready to unite in any expedition against the hostile tribes. In 1853 General Lane considered it expedient to avail himself of their repeated offers, and a party of sixty Klickitat warriors, well mounted and armed, proceeded to join him at the scene of war. They had reached as far south as the Grave Creek Hills, when they were met by Mr. Grover, one of the commissioners who had negotiated the treaty of September 10, 1853, just concluded at Table Rock. As there was then no necessity for their services, they were directed to return. At their request, however, Mr. Grover gave them a written certificate that peace had been declared, and that they had complied with their promise, in order, as they said, that the whites should not doubt their friendship.

It will be observed that the commissioners of 1851, in their councils at Shampoag, had wholly ignored the claims of the Klickitats to the right of possession over the Willamette valley. They were notified that it was not their country; that they had no voice in the relinquishment of the Indian title to the lands. That such a right had been asserted, and to some extent maintained by them, can doubtless be seen by reference to the records of the courts.

At a term of the United States district court, held in Washington County in 1851, complaint was made before the grand jury by one Donald McLeod that a band of Klickitats had committed a trespass upon his property by destroying timber which he had prepared for his house.

The accused were brought before the court, with Agent Parish as their interpreter; but after an informal hearing of the case, the judge could not find any law to meet it. They maintained their right to destroy their own timber; that it grew on their own land; that they had acquired the land by conquest; that they had given McLeod warning not to settle there; that it had never been purchased from them, etc. The judge held that there could be no action for trespass against them; that it was not shown that McLeod had acquired any legal title to the land, but it was shown that the accused had a possessory claim to it which Government had never extinguished.

Another case was brought before the same court. One Bridgefarmer built a fence across a certain trail which had been opened by them, and which was their public highway. They broke down the fence, and passed as usual. An attempt was made to bring an action of trespass against them. The judge delivered an opinion to the same effect.

From this and many similar cases which might be cited, it will be seen that there was at least some recognition of the rights assumed by these Indians. They had become familiar with the people of the valley, and were esteemed as a superior tribe; nor were their repeated proffers of friendship without effect. It is true they had in view the subversion of the southern tribes, and sought power; but whatever may have been their motives, they were entitled to some consideration. Incensed at the action of the commissioner in 1851, it was with difficulty they could be pacified; but they soon found consolation in the general disapproval of the treaties by the settlers, who were of opinion they would not be ratified.

Early in the spring of 1855 the superintendent of Indian affairs thought it expedient to remove them from the Willamette valley to their original country north of the Columbia. Under the provocations which they had already received, it may readily be supposed, they left with no good will towards the whites. From the moment of their departure they were in a state of war. Driven from a country to which they had established a right, under Indian usages, back to their homes in the Simcoe Mountains, they openly declared their determination to fight. They charged fraud and bad faith on the part of Government and its agents, accused all the whites of cheating them, and protested that they would have satisfaction.

Having now followed up the provocations of war from the southern line of Oregon to the north side of the Columbia, I propose taking a glance at the condition of affairs in Washington Territory. The most formidable of the tribes in this Territory were the Yakimas, inhabiting the country on the eastern slope of the Cascades. This tribe has long been connected, by strong ties of blood and interest, with the Klickitats. They frequently crossed the mountains and descended to the Sound, but their principal field of adventure was eastward. They traded with the tribes of the east, from whom they purchased furs and peltries, and held a profitable connection with the posts of the Hudson's Bay Company. In their intercourse with the "King George" men, as the English are called, they had been taught to believe that the Columbia River was the boundary between the American and British possessions. Until within a few years past they had seen but few Americans, and those of the worst class. They looked upon them as an inferior race of whites. They had never felt the power of the American Government. The traditions which had reached them across the Rocky Mountains were vague and unfavorable. Of the Indian battles there they only heard of Indian prowess and the slaughter of Americans. Coming from tribe to tribe, in every form of exaggeration, the tales that were told them were of a rapacity and injustice on the one hand and deeds of valor on the other. But they were aware that still farther east, where these bad people lived, they had taken away the lands of the Indians, and were gradually trying to get the country west of the Rocky Mountains.

The question of boundary had been agitated in Congress and throughout the Union. War between the United States and Great Britain was the constant topic. The feeling of animosity was particularly apparent among the agents of the Hudson's Bay Company. Their continuance in employment depended upon the defeat of the assumptions of the United States. They not only demanded the claim of 54° 40', but contended for the line of the Columbia, and would probably have included Oregon proper had it been in their power. Remote as were the few emigrants in this region from their mother land, they yet warmly espoused the cause of the United States. They had lost none of their nationality. The inhospitable wilderness that lay between them and their former homes served but to strengthen their attachment to the institutions under which they had grown up. As yet few Americans had settled north of the Columbia.

The Yakimas, in common with other tribes who derived a profitable trade from their connection with the Hudson's Bay Company, naturally espoused the cause of "King George." Many of their women were married to the company's employés, who in that way cemented the ties of friendship. The company had always encouraged connections of this kind, and it was rare to find any officer or employé without a family of half-breeds, either Yakimas, Klickitats, Nisquallies, or some other tribe. It required no great effort, therefore, on the part of the company's agents, to spread the feeling of dislike, and to misrepresent the intentions and character of the American people. The Indians, predisposed to hostility, implicitly relied upon all they heard. Kam-i-a-kin, the chief of the Yakimas, was bitter in his animosity. As early as 1853 he projected a war of extermination against the whole race of Americans within the country. It was his settled determination to make the war general, and he spared no inducements to effect a coalition with the Nez Percés, Cayuses, Walla-Wallas, and other tribes. For your information on this point, showing that war actually was premeditated in 1853, I send you inclosed a translation of the letter of Father Pandory, priest at the Atahnam Mission, dated April, 1853, to Father Mesplie, at The Dalles, in which he says: "A chief of the Upper Nez Percés has killed thirty head of cattle at a feast given to the nation; and this number of animals not being sufficient, seven more were killed. The feast was given in order to unite the hearts of the Indians to make declaration of war against the Americans. Through the whole course of the winter I have heard the same thing—that the Cayuses and Nez Percés have united themselves for war. During the course of last spring I was in the Cayuse country after they had given a similar feast. I said nothing, because I thought that they had a subagent who would speak. * * I will recount to you what they say. All the Indians upon the left (north) bank of the Columbia, from the Blackfeet to the Chenook, inclusive, are to assemble at the Cayuse country. All on the right bank, through the same extent of country, are to assemble on the Simcoe (on the Yakima), including those from Nisqually and the vicinity. The cause of this war is that the Americans are going to seize their lands."

This grave and startling information, so fearfully verified since, was promptly communicated to Major Alvord, who reported it to General Hitchcock, the then commanding officer of the military department on this coast. Major Alvord was censured as an alarmist, and Father Pandory was treated in the same manner by his superior.

It will be observed that the date of the letter is April, 1853. If the war, therefore, was one of speculation, gotten up by the settlers of Oregon, the scheme should have been frustrated then. Information that a war was actually going to take place—that the Indians had avowed it in council—was in possession of the commanding officer of the military department. Why did he not expose the speculation? Why did not the Departments in Washington issue orders to the governors of the Territories, apprising them of their knowledge of this scheme, and cause it to be then arrested? Simply, as I conceive, because no such scheme was ever contemplated, either then or since. The settlers only asked protection for their lives and property; and after both have been freely sacrificed, the charge is, for the first time, brought against them.

But to return a moment to the combination. As no change took place in the Hudson's Bay Company's posts after the treaty of 1846, and their possessions and appearance of power remained the same as before, the Indians, up to a very recent date, regarded the Territory of Washington as under the influence of "King George."

The Nisquallys and other tribes of Puget's Sound, whose chief intercourse had always been with "King George" men, naturally shared their animosity against the Americans. When Governor Stevens treated with them, he found them in a very disaffected condition. It was with difficulty the chiefs could be gotten together. Something had to be done with them, and, under the circumstances of difficulty attending the making of these treaties, I am satisfied no public officer could have done better. The treaties were not the cause of the war. I have already shown that the war had been determined upon long before. If Governor Stevens is to blame because he did not so frame the treaties as to stop the war, or to stop it by not making treaties at all, then that charge should be specifically brought against him. My own opinion is that he had no more control over the course of events than the Secretary of War in Washington.

Leschi, the celebrated Nisqually chief, was most determined in his hostility. Bold, adventurous, and eloquent, he possessed an unlimited sway over his people, and, by the earnestness of his purpose and the persuasiveness of his arguments, carried all with him who heard him speak. He traveled by day and night, caring neither for hunger nor fatigue; visited the camps of the Yakimas and Klickitats; addressed the councils in terms of eloquence such as they had seldom heard. He crossed the Columbia, penetrated to Southern Oregon, appealed to all the disaffected there. He dwelt upon their wrongs; painted to them, in the exuberance of his imagination, the terrible picture of the "polakly illeha," the land of darkness, where no ray from the sun ever penetrated; where there was torture and death for all the races of Indians; where the sting of an insect killed like the stroke of a spear, and the streams were foul and muddy, so that no living thing could drink of the waters. This was the place where the white men wanted to carry them to. He called upon them to resist like braves so terrible a fate. The white men were but a handful now. They could all be killed at once, and then others would fear to come. But if there was no war, they would grow strong and many, and soon put all the Indians in their big ships and send them off to that terrible land, where torture and death awaited them.

It may readily be supposed that a rude and ignorant people, naturally prone to superstition, were not slow in giving credence to these fearful stories. Each tribe had its grievance from the north to the south. Common interest bound them in their compact against a common enemy.

The Mormons at this time had also sent their emissaries among them to spread the disaffection. In the Simcoe, at a council of the tribes in 1854, a chief from the Mormon country urged them to war. The talk of this chief, as detailed by a friendly Indian who was in the council, was to this effect: That far in the desert there lived the greatest people on earth, who controlled the sun. He had been among them and talked with them, and they had sent him here to say what they were. They could strike dead anybody at any distance; they could make the sun stand still; they could make powder and muskets, and they were the friends of the Indians. The Americans were the enemies of the Indians. They wanted the Indians to kill them all. They would send them powder and muskets, etc.

That the Mormons did furnish several of the tribes with ammunition is proved by the narrative of Captain Shaw, of the Walla Walla volunteers. At the last battle fought up there he found powder, muskets, balls, etc., among the Indians bearing the Mormon brand.

George B. Simpson, late interpreter and local agent at the Cascades, who originally came to Salt Lake as an agent for the Salt Lake mails, states from his own knowledge that the Mormons sent out emissaries among all the tribes of Indians prior to the war, urging them to unite in exterminating the Americans.

But the plan of operations had not been sufficiently matured. Some of the tribes were too impatient to wait till the proper time had arrived. In the summer of 1855, after the discovery of the Colville mines, a general rush took place there. The first man murdered was Mattice, a miner, who was on his way there with a considerable amount of money and provisions. He was killed soon after descending the Snoqualimie Pass by a party of Indians, supposed to be Yakimas. Near the same time, Fantjoy, another miner, was killed. These were both respectable men from the State of Maine. They were proprietors of a coal mine on the Danamish. The murders on the White River occurred some two months after. Agent Bolen, hearing of the Yakima murders, crossed over from The Dalles to see the chief Kamiakin. Ouahi, another prominent chief, was present in camp. Bolen spent the night there, no doubt remonstrating with them for their acts. Next day, as he was riding back, he was overtaken by two or three Indians, who rode along with him in an apparently friendly manner. One lagged behind, and, while the others engaged his attention, shot him in the back. He was then dragged from his horse, scalped, and partly burnt. One of the murderers is said to be a son of the chief Ouahi.

On the 8th or 9th of October the Indians of Southern Oregon began the work of extermination. They slaughtered, indiscriminately, men, women, and children. At or about the same date the war had opened in Washington Territory. The movement was simultaneous, and could only have been the result of concert; but the Indians themselves have since freely admitted that their plan embraced all parts of the country from north to south.

I will not undertake to follow up the history of the war to a later period. Its peculiar features have been represented officially on both sides, and its progress and termination are matters of public record.

Upon a careful perusal of all the dispatches, I find nothing to sustain the charge of speculation. No person can visit the Territories of Oregon and Washington, converse with the people, see them on their farms and at their daily labors, and consider their true interests, without coming to the conclusion that such a charge is absurd and monstrous. What could they hope to gain? Few of them had anything to spare upon which to base a speculation. A farmer is well off who has his fields fenced in, a few head of oxen, and three or four cows. If he got treble price for his stock, the sale, upon an unlimited credit, would have been a sacrifice to him. His farm must go to ruin. The interests of the settlers of nearly every pursuit are nearly identical. Their future prospects depend chiefly upon the prosperity of the country, the increase of emigration, enhancement in the value of property, security of life, opening of new facilities for the transportation of their products. All this was diametrically opposed to a war. No compensation that Government could make would atone for the murder of families, the stoppage of labor everywhere, the loss of time, the suspension of immigration, and the numerous evils resulting from this disastrous conflict.

The commissioners at Vancouver have faithfully and impartially performed their duty. Whatever sum they may have decided upon in estimating this war debt, I hold that amount to be justly due, and trust that Congress will at once provide for its extinguishment.

It appears from the above that the Indian war of 1855–'56 resulted from the same primary causes which have caused most of the Indian wars in this country—the encroachments of the whites upon the native race. On the 16th of April, 1886, in urging upon the attention of the Senate a bill which I had introduced to provide for a tribunal open not only to the citizens of the State of Oregon and of Washington Territory, but to the citizens of all the States and Territories—authorized to hear and determine a class of claims too long neglected by the General Government, claims for Indian depredations—I briefly traced the history of the controversy concerning the title of the United States to the Oregon territory, the efforts of the Government to secure the settlement of the Territory by citizens of the United States, and the causes of the Indian hostilities, and made some observations concerning the exceptional claims of the people of Oregon and Washington Territories upon the General Government for indemnification for Indian depredations which are equally applicable to the claims under consideration. I then said:

The people of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, in my judgment, have an exceptional claim upon the Government for indemnification for losses occasioned by Indian depredations, growing out of the causes which led to the settlement and occupation of the Oregon Territory by American citizens, the inducements held out by the Government to settlers in that Territory, and the causes which led to Indian hostilities there.

It is well known that the title to the territory which comprised what is now Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, lying west of the Rocky Mountains and north of latitude 42° north, was for a long time in dispute. It was claimed at different times by Russia, Spain, Great Britain, and the United States. Russia's claim rested on occupation by fur traders, and its southern boundary was undefined. She had established a fur-trading post in Northern California at an early day.

By a treaty ratified by the United States in 1825 the line between the territory claimed by the United States and that claimed by Russia was fixed at 54° 40′ north latitude. Great Britain, claiming the territory south of that line, made haste to negotiate a similar treaty, defining 54° 40′ north latitude as her northern boundary.

The claim of Spain to this country rested upon alleged discovery backed by occupation. Spain transferred her interests to France, and in 1803 Napoleon sold Louisiana to the United States, and by the Florida purchase latitude 42° north was fixed as the boundary between Spain and the United States on the Pacific coast, and thereafter the controversy concerning the title to the territory was between the United States and Great Britain. The claim of Great Britain to the country by discovery was indefensible, but as early as 1793 English fur-traders in private employ pushed into the Oregon country and established trading posts there, but made no attempts at permanent settlement south of 49° north latitude.

The claim of the United States rested upon the doubtful claim acquired from Spain, the voyage of Capt. Robert Gray, of Boston, who in 1792 entered and explored to some distance from its mouth the river St. Roque, the name of which he changed to Columbia, the name of his ship, and the exploration of Lewis and Clarke, who, under orders from President Jefferson, crossed the continent, floated down the Columbia, wintered at Young's River, near the mouth of the Columbia, and explored much of the Oregon country.

The treaty with Russia fixing, as against the Russian claim to the territory, latitude 54° 40′ north as the northern boundary of the possessions of the United States, created in the United States a belief that was our true boundary as against Great Britain, and the Oregon boundary was for many years an absorbing question in the politics of the country. It formed the subject of political platforms and political campaigns; it threatened to involve us in a war with Great Britain; the Monroe doctrine was invoked against allowing Great Britain's claim to any part of the Pacific coast. It became apparent to the people of the United States and to the Government that the question of title would be eventually determined by actual occupation. By the convention of August 6, 1827, the joint occupation of the Oregon country by the United States and Great Britain was continued indefinitely, with a provision that either party might annul and abrogate it upon giving twelve months' notice to the other, and from that time forward until the northwestern boundary was finally settled by the treaty of 1846 occupation became an important factor in determining the question of title. The condition of the western half of North America at the time Captain Gray discovered and explored the Columbia River is thus graphically described in an article published in the Daily Morning Oregonian of Portland, January 1, 1886:

"With the anniversary of another century, in the year 1792, exactly three hundred years after Columbus discovered the New World, and two hundred and fifty years after the first Spanish navigator sailed up the west shore of Oregon, an American shipmaster discovered the great river of the West.

"Up to that time the western half of North America was so unknown that from the Gulf of California to the icy pole there was scarce a trace of civilization. That little was where Jesuit missions to the far south were striving to bring up from untold ages of vice and degradation the miserable native hordes that peopled the choicest regions of the West. These efforts were only then commenced. If one could have stood on the great divide from whence the melting snows turn westward, the view would have been unbroken by one single touch of enterprise, with not a trace of civilization to mar the perfection of its savagery. The Indian with bow and arrow followed the chase, or with spear and net sought a food-supply from the waters. And somewhere, on that vast expanse of wilderness, hostile bands were always on the war-path. The war-whoop and the savage yell waked many a scene of night, and flames of torture blazed to mark each victory. The Indian of this far West may have heard some rumor of the white man's coming, but on all the hills and plains and through all the mountain wastes, from Athabasca's snows to California's perennial summer times, the native tribes were, as their fathers had been before them, barbarian and savage beyond recall."

How great the change that time has wrought! Immigration has swept across the continent; civilization has taken the place of barbarism; the arts of peace, of perpetual warfare; the then wilderness has become the home of millions of intelligent, law-abiding, and liberty-loving, industrious, and prosperous citizens, and the native hordes which then roamed over that vast territory are confined upon reservations and are kept under Government control. This change has not taken place, and in the nature of things could not take place, entirely peacefully. The conflict between civilization and savage life is irrepressible. It needs no prophet to foretell that one or the other must prevail. Civilization or extermination is the fate of the remnant of the Indians.

The occupation of the territory was favored by the Government. As we have seen, peaceful occupation by American citizens was provided for in the treaty with Great Britain; Government expeditions were sent to explore the country; Government protection was afforded to immigrants crossing the plains; the patriotism of the people was appealed to, and to induce immigration to aid the settlement of the country Congress passed an act, approved September 27, 1850, commonly known as the donation law, granting to every settler upon the public lands who was such prior to September 1, 1850, a donation of the quantity of a half-section, or 320 acres of land, if a single man, and, if married, the quantity of an entire section, or 640 acres, one-half to the husband and the other half to the wife in her own right, and to such as should become settlers between September 1, 1850, and December 1, 1855, the quantity of a quarter-section to a single man, and, if married, a half-section, one-half to the husband and the other half to the wife in her own right.

Prior to 1830 several unsuccessful attempts were made by American fur companies to establish and maintain posts in the territory, but they failed on account of the opposition and rivalry of established British companies. Immigration began in 1832, and after 1838 each year there were large additions to the permanent settlements of the country by companies of enterprising persons, who had braved the perils and endured the hardships of the long and tedious journey across the continent to establish homes for themselves and hold the country for the United States.

The increasing American immigration added to the perils of joint occupation, and it is firmly believed by many that some of the Indian massacres and depredations were incited by those unfriendly to American occupation of the Territory. While it was the policy of Congress to induce the settlement of Oregon by the whites and to continue the joint occupation until the United States should be able, with the aid of the American population of the Territory, to assert and maintain an exclusive right to it, the settlers were from the first left without adequate protection by the Government. The pioneer population of the region suffered greatly at first from the inability of the Government to afford them protection, and afterward from its indifference and inaction. From the commencement of American immigration for the purpose of permanent occupation, and from the time it became apparent that Great Britain could not compete with the United States in the settlement of the country, Indian massacres of emigrants commenced. In 1834, on the Umpqua River, a party of thirty white persons were treacherously and brutally murdered. This was followed by the massacre of Dr. Whitman and his twenty-seven companions, near Walla Walla, by the Cayuse and Walla Wallas in 1847. These outbreaks were followed by murders of immigrants by bands of Modocs in 1852, by the Southern Oregon Indian war in 1853, the Rogue River and Jacksonville wars in 1855 and 1856, raids of marauding bands of Snakes in Eastern Oregon in 1858–'59, the marauding massacres, murders, and thefts by the Snakes in Eastern Oregon and Washington in 1865–'70, the Modoc outbreak in 1872–'73, and the Nez Percé war of 1878.

In 1858 a committee was appointed by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Oregon and directed to examine and report in regard to depredations upon immigrants in 1854, the number and dates, places, and names of persons killed by Oregon Indians in time of peace and those killed in time of war by Indians supposed to be friendly. The committee made a report February 3, 1858, giving the names and dates of persons killed and names of the tribes doing the killing. The following is taken from the concluding portion of the report:

"It will be seen by the foregoing list that prior to 1851 upward of fifty citizens were murdered by Oregon Indians. Since 1851 upward of one hundred and fifty citizens have been murdered by the Indians of Southern Oregon and their immediate allies, and about fifty by the Indians of Northern Oregon and their allies. Many more names could be obtained from papers and living witnesses, but your committee have not time to investigate any further.

"Recapitulation: Killed in 1834, 30; in 1835, 4; in 1846, 1; in 1847, 16; in 1850, 8; in 1851, 12; in 1852, 50; in 1853, 11; in 1854, 29; in 1855, 51; in 1856, 45; in 1857, 5. Total, 262."

Isolated from civilization, neglected by the General Government, surrounded by savage foes, the pioneers of Oregon demonstrated to a remarkable degree the self-reliance, the undaunted courage, endurance, and capacity for self-government of the American people. It is for these brave men who penetrated the wilderness, took possession of the Oregon Territory and planted civilization there; who defended their hearthstones against savage foes incited by the emissaries of foreign powers; who laid the foundation of prosperous States and Territories that are, and the powerful and wealthy States that are to be, and for the widows and orphans of those who lost their lives by the neglect of the Government, that I plead to-day.

Mr. President, in presenting these claims again to the Senate it appeared necessary on account of their magnitude, the time which has elapsed since they arose, and the fact that the original claims were in part paid by the Government, to submit for the consideration of the committee and the Senate a history of them and the grounds upon which it is contended Congress should provide for their payment. In doing this I have aimed to present the best evidence, and have therefore quoted largely from official documents. Upon the showing I have made it must be conceded, I think, that justice has not been done these claimants. The wrong can never be fully remedied. Many of the original claimants have passed from the stage of action, but a large number still live to petition Congress, and still hope for justice from a great nation, which should never require the services or property of a citizen without just compensation.

Congress has made provision for the payment of many older and less meritorious claims, and it is safe to say that sooner or later the claims now presented will be recognized and paid. I ask for these claimants prompt and careful consideration of their claims and speedy and full justice.

I send to the desk a telegram which I received last evening, showing that the Territorial Legislature of Washington Territory has memorialized Congress for the payment of these claims as well as the Indian depredation claims. I ask that it be read in connection with my remarks.

The Secretary read as follows:

WALLA WALLA, WASH., February 6, 1888.

To. Hon. J. N. DOLPH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Legislature has passed memorial urging payment of Indian war claims, as allowed by Ingalls commisson; also depredation claims. Copy forwarded to Delegate VOORHEES. Veterans thank you and hope for justice.

H. M. CHASE,
Lieutenant-Colonel, E. W. V.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HALE in the chair). Will the Senator from Oregon indicate what disposition he desires of the bill on which he has been speaking?

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. VEST. My friend from Florida [Mr. CALL] is entitled to the floor on the unfinished business, and I ask him to permit me to call up a bridge bill for the passage of which there is great and immediate necessity.

Mr. CALL. Very well.

Mr. VEST. There will be found upon the Calendar of the Senate Order of Business 102, Senate bill No. 276, which I was authorized to report some days since from the Committee on Commerce, for the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at Lexington, Mo. Pending that measure, the bill being before the Senate, the other House sent us the same identical bill, and I am authorized by the Committee on Commerce to report back the House bill favorably, and to ask for its immediate consideration and the indefinite postponement of Senate bill 276.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senator from Missouri reports from the Committee on Commerce the bill (H. R. 2778) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near the city of Lexington, Mo., and he asks unanimous consent for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, Senate bill 276, upon the same subject, will be indefinitely postponed. It is so ordered.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. R. 6) for removal of all disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States upon Abram C. Myers; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

THE BARK NORDSTJERNEN.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator from Florida yield me a couple of moments?

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRYE. Order of Business 225, the bill (H. R. 5352) to grant an American register to the foreign-built bark Nordstjernen is upon the Calendar. The senior Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] is very anxious that the bill shall be immediately acted upon. It proposes to grant a register to this bark, and it clearly ought to be granted. The bark is lying at San Francisco, and is awaiting a charter, which it can receive the moment it gets this register, and it is very expensive for the bark to be kept there. I ask that the bill may be acted on now. It is a very short one.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I simply wish to express my hearty approval of this bill, and to say that I am very glad my friend from Maine has at last found one foreign-built vessel that he is willing to admit to American registry. There is a bill now pending here to permit the Red Star Line to put a number of their steamers under the American flag, which they were compelled, on account of our navigation laws, to build abroad. I hope that my friend from Maine will now carry out this good resolution and will naturalize, as my friend from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] says, the steamers belonging to American citizens who are residents of the city of Philadelphia.

The only possible difference between this case and the case of these Philadelphia gentlemen is that here was a foreign-built vessel which was wrecked, or by stress of weather compelled to put into an American port in a damaged condition, and certain citizens of California bought it at a public sale; they have repaired the vessel, and now ask to put the American flag over it; and in the other case, that of my friends in Philadelphia, they were compelled to their course by defects in the navigation laws, which are the most infamous laws, in my judgment, upon the American statute-book to-day, which say to an American citizen that although he builds a ship in a foreign port, with his own money, he shall not sail it between any point in American territory and any foreign port. He can sail it between foreign ports, but the minute he comes to his own country, and attempts to increase the commerce of his own country, and attempts to put his property under his own flag, the laws of the United States step in and say, "Stop; you can not do this thing."

These gentlemen in Philadelphia put millions of dollars in the construction of these steam-ships. They want now the poor privilege of putting under the American flag their property, built with their money; and I hope the Senator from Maine will assist me in passing that bill.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine never will assist the Senator from Missouri in passing that bill. These American citizens, because they could build vessels a little cheaper abroad, employed the cheap laborer there instead of the higher-priced laborer at home, took their capital, went abroad, built their vessels, and obtained their papers from a foreign country. No reason can be given why they should be made an exception to the rule.

The Senator from Maine further differs entirely from the Senator from Missouri. He declares that the navigation laws are not infamous; that they are benign; and that our coastwise fleet, the finest one in all the world, has grown up under those laws.

The Senator from Maine sees no resemblance between this bill and the one which the Senator from Missouri proposes shall be passed. This bill provides that a vessel which has been five-sixths built in San Francisco, five-sixths of its value placed in it by American labor, from American materials, may be admitted to the American registry. The Secretary of the Treasury would have admitted it under the navigation laws, provided the vessel had been wrecked a mile and a half nearer shore than it was.

Mr. VEST. Still the fact is evident that legislation is necessary on the part of Congress to put this vessel under the American flag. That is the point of this discussion, and to relieve the monotony of this dreary debate in which we have indulged for some weeks, and in which I have borne a part myself, and therefore speak of it with full freedom as a dreary debate, I wish to remind my friend from Maine that he is not entirely accurate in his statement as to the causes which lead the company in Philadelphia to come now and ask the privilege of putting their property under the American flag.

Mr. Griscom, the superintendent of that line, was before our Committee on Commerce, and before a subcommittee of which I happened to be a member, and which sat for a month in the city of New York inquiring why the American merchant marine had run down to its present deplorable condition, when less than 15 per cent. of the commerce of the United States is carried in American ships, until the carrying trade of this country, like the Scotchman's mare, has come down to one straw a day; and still the Republican party are waiting to see whether it will not subsist and fatten on that straw, and they will not change these laws which have brought us to our present condition.

Mr. Griscom in his testimony, and he was corroborated by a great many ship-owners and gentlemen engaged in maritime pursuits, said that the cause of running the vessels of the company of which he was superintendent under foreign flags was because under our navigation laws (which we have amended under the leadership of the Senator from Maine in some respects since) every crew shipped in a foreign port, as soon as a vessel touched American soil, was discharged, and in order to swell the fees of certain officials of the United States the owners of those vessels were compelled to reship the crews and to pay fees for the privilege of doing so.

Now, we have amended our laws until, as Mr. Griscom says, and it is a subject of sincere congratulation to every American patriot, we can run American ships, or rather ships put under the American flag, as cheaply as under the British flag; and when the ship-owners of Philadelphia who built these vessels with their own money come and ask the privilege of putting them under the flag of their own country they can not get it. I undertake to say that not a Republican Senator on this floor will vote for that bill, but they drive these people to sail under a foreign flag, and then we hear declamation here almost by the acre about the decline of the American carrying trade and that our flag is not seen upon the ocean anywhere!

It seems to me that I recollect a very eloquent address by my friend from Maine not long since in which he said that during the last summer he had traveled abroad thousands of miles, and that he had not seen the American flag in any port or upon any ocean, or words to that effect.

With that monstrous fact staring us in the face, with our carrying trade down to 15 per cent., when in 1856 we carried 80 per cent. of the commerce of the United States under the American flag, and to-day carry only 15, these American citizens who ask the privilege of putting their property, paid for by American dollars, under the American flag, are refused that privilege. That is all of it.

Mr. FRYE. I do not desire to reply to the Senator from Missouri at length, because the free-ship bill is not now under discussion, nor is the bill providing for a registry for vessels to the Philadelphia concern under discussion. But the Senator knows perfectly well that our flag has disappeared from the ocean simply because it has not been protected since 1850. That is reason enough for its disappearance. It is the only American industry without protection. It was formerly protected under our navigation laws. If those laws had stood it would have been protected to-day, and we should have had our vessels upon the ocean as we formerly had; but we finally concluded an arrangement with Great Britain in 1850 by which all protection was absolutely withdrawn. We concluded arrangements with other countries by treaty by which the same protection was withdrawn, under which we could have no discriminating duties whatever, under which no preferences could be made for American vessels; and from the moment that protection was withdrawn from our ocean carrying trade that carrying trade has gone down. The Senator is entirely mistaken when he says that these gentlemen can run an American ship as cheaply as an English ship can be run.

Mr. VEST. Mr. Griscom says so.

Mr. FRYE. I do not care what Mr. Griscom says in relation to it. I had reports from every consulate in a maritime nation in the world—I have them now—which show that Great Britain's sailors on board her ships receive 35 per cent. less pay than ours, and that it costs 28 per cent. less to support them. In addition to that, Great Britain pays her lines reasonably large subsidies, they may be called, if you please, and every other maritime nation upon the earth pays her lines of steamers subsidies and bounties, while we persistently refuse ours reasonable pay for carrying our mails.

Mr. VEST. I hope my friend from Maine does not wish the country to understand that when he speaks of disparity in wages he is speaking of the foreign trade of the United States. I suppose the comparison he means to adduce now of 35 per cent. is with our coastwise trade.

Mr. FRYE. Not at all.

Mr. VEST. Then I take direct issue as a question of fact with my friend from Maine.

Mr. FRYE. Then when this matter is under discussion I shall show from authority that it is so.

Mr. VEST. Well, let us try it.

Mr. FRYE. I am prepared to prove it by authorities which I have in my room. Does the Senator from Missouri believe that an American ship can be run to-day on the ocean as cheaply as an Italian ship?

Mr. VEST. I am not a ship-owner, and have never been even to Europe. The extent of my maritime experience was a trip to Alaska last summer on the inland passage, as it is called. But I say that Mr. Griscom (and there is no more reputable man in the United States or anywhere else, and the firm of Peter Wright & Son, at Philadelphia, in which he is engaged, is more largely interested in the subject than any other American firm) states in writing, and has stated verbally to me over and over again, that since our amendment of the navigation laws, in which the Senator from Maine bore a conspicuous part, he can run his steam-ships as cheaply under the American flag as under the German or British flag. If that were not so, why is he here asking the privilege of putting them under the American flag? Will the Senator answer that?

Mr. FRYE. There are a great many reasons which might be given why he would do that. Here is an American company, with I think seven or eight ships in their line; I do not know but there are ten to-day.

Mr. VEST. There are ten of them.

Mr. FRYE. They are from 3,000 to 4,000 tons. You let an American to-day undertake to build ten ships of the same capacity, and under our protective tariff he is compelled to pay from $40,000 to $50,000 duty on each one, that is on the materials entering into its construction, if imported.

Mr. VEST. These ships are already built.

Mr. FRYE. I know these vessels are already built. They can load with a cargo in Liverpool, receive the profit from freight, enter the port of New York, and under the Senator's bill be entitled to an American registry. But if an American wishes to build ten like vessels at home, he must pay the increased cost of our labor and then compete with these. The Senator may propose, as compensation, that this American may import the materials for his ships free of duty. Even then he would be obliged to pay the freight on these materials, which landed in his yard at Chester would amount to $25,000.

Now, I say that no earthly reason can be given why this Philadelphia company should be given this advantage over every one else. The Senator is entirely right in his assumption that I shall oppose to the end the bill to which he refers.

I am sorry that the discussion arose, for I asked the Senator from Florida for only two minutes. It was the malice of the Senator from Missouri which led me into it. I should like to have the bill passed, and I will say no more.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, let us have the regular order.

Mr. FRYE. I make an apology to the Senator from Florida for occupying so much of his time.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. COOPER, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. CROUSE, for five days, on account of important business.

CLASSIFICATION OF WORSTED CLOTH.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire unanimous consent for the printing in the RECORD of the text of the petition which I now send to the desk, representing one hundred and ninety woolen and worsted mills located in twelve of the States of the Union, and a large number of merchants in New York City, asking for the passage of the resolution introduced by Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, providing that worsted cloth be classified as woolen cloth.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. It is as follows:

Petition to the Congress of the United States.

The undersigned manufacturers of woolen and worsted goods respectfully and urgently petition our Representatives and Senators in Congress to speedily enact into law the joint resolution introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, and now before the Ways and Means Committee of that body, which is as follows:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to classify as woolen cloth all imports of worsted cloth, whether known under the name of worsted cloth or under the name of 'worsteds' or 'diagonals' or otherwise."

In support of this, we submit that it wipes out a distinction between goods which are of the same kind as regards material and cost of production, and disposes of a discrimination between products which is absolutely destructive in its effects, and which no one, protectionist, tariff reformer or free-trader, holds should be tolerated for a moment.

We are aware that other inequalities exist in the present tariff laws, caused by industrial changes, inventions, errors, etc., and that suffering is entailed thereby, and we trust that they will receive wise and prompt attention, but we are not aware that there is any other business in which the tax on the raw material is actually greater than it is on the finished product. In proof of this we submit the following figures:

It takes 4 pounds of wool to make a pound of cloth. Hence the American manufacturer, under the present tariff, on the 4 pounds of wool pays a duty of 10 cents a pound, 40 cents, while the foreign manufacturer on his pound of finished cloth made from the four pounds of wool, pays the following duty:

	Cents.
1 pound of cloth, value 50 cents, at 18 cents per pound	18
1 pound of cloth, value 50 cents, 35 per cent. ad valorem	17½
thus, only paying a total duty of	35½

on the finished cloth as against the 40 cents duty paid by our manufacturers on the wool alone.

The effect of this is aptly described by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Fairchild, in his last official report to Congress, as follows:

"A conspicuous example of the inequalities of the tariff is found in the discrimination in the rates of duty imposed on woolen and worsted cloths. Improvements in recent years in the machinery employed in combing wool have so changed the character of what are commercially known as worsted cloths that the latter have largely superseded woolen cloths for use as men's wearing apparel. This change in the style of manufacture and use of worsted cloths has operated to the serious injury of our domestic manufacturers of these goods, because the duty on the wool which they must use is the same as that upon wool used in making woolen cloths, while the rates of duty imposed upon the latter when valued at not exceeding 80 cents per pound are 35 cents per pound and 35 per cent. ad valorem, whereas the duty on worsted cloths valued at not exceeding 80 cents ranges from 10 to 24 cents per pound and 35 per cent. ad valorem. In some cases the duty on the wool used in making worsted cloths exceeds the duty imposed on the finished article." * * *

"There is much reason to believe that the manufacture of worsted cloths must soon cease in this country unless the tariff law in this regard is amended." This is incontestably proved by the fact that many of our mills are shutting down, either wholly or in part, thus throwing many operatives out of employment.

May we not fairly claim special urgency for the legislation herein proposed? Its effect would be immediate. And we submit that it would practically destroy the business of this year, conducted as our business is necessarily conducted, if the enactment of this law were delayed until such time as a general bill covering this and many other features, some of which are more or less matters of dispute, as this is not, could be put through Congress. A delay of even a month will be very greatly injurious to us. We think we have a right to expect the prompt passage of this resolution as a product of that spirit of conservatism and fair play which we believe animates Congress and the people and from which alone can come the relief we need and also the larger and exceedingly grave if not so immediately urgent measure required by the country.

Dated January 20, 1888.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I now ask consent to present, for present consideration, the resolution I send to the desk, and which was withdrawn on yesterday during the call of States and Territories.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the special Committee on Printing appointed by the Speaker under a resolution adopted by the House January 30 to make a thorough investigation of the administration of the Government Printing Office during the incumbency of the present occupant and that of his predecessor be, and are hereby, authorized and empowered, in conducting said investigation, to employ a stenographer, send for persons and papers, administer oaths, examine witnesses, and to call for and examine all books, papers, records, and documents bearing upon the subject of said investigation; and that any expense incurred in conducting the same be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I only want to say that the Committee on Printing have no objection to the fullest and amplest power which may be given to the committee conducting this investigation; but the law already provides two official stenographers for committees at a compensation of $4,000 a year, and therefore I think portions of this resolution are entirely unnecessary. I therefore ask its reference to the Committee on Printing, or otherwise I shall have to object to its consideration at this time.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, a resolution was offered the other day in this House, presented by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON], to investigate certain matters relating to the management of the Government Printing Office. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] moved a substitute for that resolution, enlarging its powers so as to provide for an investigation not only of the administration of the present incumbent of that office, but also of the acts of his predecessor. The resolution was drawn hastily, and made no provision for the administering of oaths, the subpœnaing of witnesses, or the appointment of a stenographer. My resolution does not make it incumbent upon the committee to employ a stenographer, if in their judgment they do not need one. It simply authorizes them to employ one if they think it necessary; and it seems to me the chairman of the Committee on Printing can not object to that.

Now a challenge has been made here by the Public Printer, asking an investigation of his management of that department, in which challenge he has made certain reflections upon his predecessor in office——

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a question of order. I insist that the gentleman from Illinois is out of order.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. He has made reflections upon the management of his predecessor, who is now dead; and it is only a matter of justice that this resolution should permit the widest investigation.

Mr. ROGERS. I insist upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. There is nothing before the House for discussion.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I am aware of that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

LIMIT TO ISSUE OF UNITED STATES NOTES.

Mr. LANDES. A few days ago, when the committees were being called for reports, I made a report under direction of the Committee on Banking and Currency which I understand would have been privileged, but I permitted it to go to the Calendar. I now ask unanimous consent to call up the resolution on which the report was made for present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois states that a privileged report upon a resolution of inquiry was made from the Committee on Banking and Currency and sent to the Calendar instead of being taken up for consideration. He asks unanimous consent to take it up for consideration at this time. The resolution and report will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The resolution, which was referred to the committee on motion of Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby requested to inform the House of Representatives whether the Treasury Department has any information showing at the date when the act of 1878 fixed the amount of United States notes at the limit issue of $346,681,016, that such amount was actually in existence as circulating medium of legal-tender currency, and whether any portion of the said amount had been at that time lost or destroyed through the incidents of business, and, if so, the probable amount of such loss; also, whether, since 1878, there has been any loss or destruction of said notes, and, if so, the probable amount of such loss, and the probable amount of said circulating medium now in actual existence as such; also, what percentage of such notes is probably lost annually, and what legislation is necessary to maintain said actual circulation at the limit now provided by law.

The report (by Mr. LANDES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Banking and Currency, having considered the accompanying resolution, submit the following report:

They recommend that the resolution be amended by striking out the last clause, which reads, "and what legislation is necessary to maintain said actual circulation at the limit now provided by law."

Although information bearing on the subject of inquiry is found on page 51 and subsequent pages of the report for 1887 of the Treasurer of the United States, your committee believe it desirable to have the official statement called for by the resolution for the further information of the House and to correct any erroneous impressions that may exist in the public mind on the subject, and report back the resolution with the amendment suggested, and recommend that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WEAVER. I am in favor of the passage of the resolution, but I wish to enter my objection to its language. It speaks of a limit having been fixed to the issue of legal-tender notes. No limit was fixed to the issue; but there is a limit fixed in the law referred to by the resolution to the destruction of legal-tender notes. The law of February 8, 1878, provided that the Treasury Department should not destroy any more of them; and that law left the amount of the legal-tender notes at three hundred and forty-six millions and odd dollars. But there is no law fixing that as the limit of legal-tender notes that may be issued.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. As the introducer of the resolution, I would say to the gentleman from Iowa that the point which was in my mind was the minimum limit. A limit may be maximum or it may be minimum. The law does fix the minimum limit. It provides that the amount shall not be less than the amount then outstanding.

Mr. WEAVER. To what law does the gentleman refer?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The law which requires that the amount of greenbacks shall be $346,000,000; not in figures, but the amount outstanding at the time that law was passed. It was the minimum limit which was fixed, not the maximum.

Mr. WEAVER. The law to which the gentleman refers fixed no limit whatever except that it takes away from the Treasury Department the power to destroy legal-tender notes.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. And that fixes the lowest amount. I agree with the gentleman's proposition as to the maximum.

Mr. RANDALL. The Government has never reduced, as far as my knowledge extends, the amount of legal-tender notes below the $346,000,000. The Government has reissued worn and defaced notes, keeping always within the limit. Now, what amount of the greenbacks has been destroyed is a pertinent inquiry; but it does not matter what that amount may be, the Government would have the authority to issue, if they knew of the destruction of any portion of the issue, up to the aggregate of $346,000,000.

Mr. WEAVER. Undoubtedly.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. LANDES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EMPLOYÉS OF CHICAGO CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2068) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay certain citizens of Chicago, employés of the custom-house, for extra-time services, and that the same be now put upon its passage.

The bill was read.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4599), and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, to which it properly belongs.

The SPEAKER. Was this an erroneous reference?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It was.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter of privilege, and the change of reference will be made.

Mr. RANDALL. A bill and several executive documents containing information from the Departments have been erroneously referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to bring them back for proper reference. I have taken the liberty of indicating on each of the papers the proper committee.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill and executive communications indicated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be referred to their appropriate committees, and the Committee on Appropriations will be discharged from their further consideration, and the Clerk will enter them on the Journal.

There was no objection.

The bill and executive documents were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4958) to reimburse the depositors of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company for losses incurred by the failure of said company—to the Committee on Claims.

Executive Document No. 38, claim of Bishop & Co., Honolulu—to the Committee on Claims.

Executive Document S. No. 53, purchase of army supplies from Indians—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Executive Document No. 73, fraudulent timber-land entries—to the Committee on Claims.

By unanimous consent, Mr. BACON obtained leave of absence until February 9, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. I withdraw the demand for the regular order.

Mr. CULBERSON. I renew it.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to report back a bill, and to move for a change of reference.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the committee itself has the right, when a private bill is improperly referred, to direct its reference to the appropriate committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. One week ago, Mr. Speaker, the committee did change the reference of a bill, as indicated by the Chair, but it has never since been heard of; and in the committee-room it was held, in reference to this case, that it must necessarily be reported to the House, and a motion made for a change of reference in the House. Of course, in the case where a clerk has wrongfully entered the bill and wrongfully made the reference, there the correction can be made; but in such a case as this it has been held in the committee-room that the bill must be reported to the House in order to make the change of reference effective.

The SPEAKER. That is a mistaken construction of the rule. If it is a private bill, under the rule the committee itself has the right to change the reference when improperly referred, by sending it to the appropriate committee through the petition-box.

HENRY B. SHAW.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 150) granting an increase of pension to Henry B. Shaw; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

HUBERT M. POTTER.

JUDITH PLUMMER.

Mr. FRENCH also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 2456) for the relief of Judith Plummer; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ELVIRA COOPER.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 459) for the relief of Elvira Cooper; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARY M. STRONG.

Mr. SAWYER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2662) for the relief of Mary M. Strong; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ALONZO ALDEN.

Mr. SAWYER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2663) for the relief of Alonzo Alden; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

RUFUS SQUIRE.

Mr. BLISS also, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 421) granting a pension to Rufus Squire; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

EXAMINATION AND SETTLEMENT OF ACCOUNTS OF CERTAIN STATES.

Mr. LANHAM. I am directed by the Committee on Claims to move to discharge that committee from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1893) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to examine and settle the accounts of certain States and the city of Baltimore growing out of moneys expended by said States and the city of Baltimore for military purposes during the war of 1812, and to move its reference to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. WISE. I wish to call attention to the fact that this is not a claim growing out of the war of 1812, but out of a loan which was employed by the Government of the United States in the conduct of that war, and I think it is appropriately referred to the Committee on Claims, and that its reference should not be changed to the Committee on War Claims. It was referred to the Committee on Claims in the last and in preceding Congresses. I have no choice individually as to what committee it should go to, but I think it does not properly belong to War Claims.

Mr. LANHAM. It seems to me that inasmuch as it is a claim growing out of a war, it must go to the War Claims Committee.

Mr. WISE. It is a claim based upon a loan by the States named and the city of Baltimore to the National Government, which was used by the Government in the conduct of the war of 1812; but it is not a claim growing out of the war.

The SPEAKER. The rule provides that all proposed legislation relating to claims arising from any war in which the United States is engaged shall be referred to the Committee on War Claims. This bill provides for the settlement and adjustment of claims of the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Virginia, South Carolina, and the city of Baltimore for and on account of advances and expenditures made by said States and the city of Baltimore in the war of 1812.

Mr. WISE. The claim of Virginia does not grow out of the war of 1812, however.

The SPEAKER. But if the claims to which the bill refers grew out of the war, or arose out of any expenditures of the State in the war, it would come within the rule which provided its reference to the Committee on War Claims. The bill itself nowhere shows that it is to reimburse losses otherwise incurred.

Mr. WISE. But the papers do.

The SPEAKER. But of course the Chair can only take cognizance of the bill as presented.

The Chair thinks that under the rule it goes to the Committee on War Claims. The gentleman from Texas moves its reference to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour has expired.

WATERS OF ALASKA AND BEHRING SEA.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNN. On yesterday the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk was referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. I was not on the floor at the time, but upon examining the resolution I find that it relates to a purely diplomatic question, and does not propose legislation in relation to any matter of which that committee has jurisdiction. I desire to have the reference changed if it can be done without a motion to reconsider the vote by which it was made yesterday.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not necessary. It has been frequently decided that the correction of an erroneous reference is a matter of privilege which can be brought up at any time.

Mr. DUNN. This proposition involves a purely diplomatic question, and inasmuch as it refers to matters involved in pending negotiations between our Government and Great Britain, I think it proper and important that it should go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. That reference will be made, if there be no objection.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

EXTRA PAY FOR EMPLOYÉS OF CHICAGO CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Mr. DUNHAM. I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] did not intend to object to the bill which I asked to call up a short time ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demanded the regular order, which is an objection to all propositions for unanimous consent, and requires the Chair to proceed regularly under the rules of the House.

Mr. CULBERSON. If the bill which the gentleman from Illinois desires to have considered will provoke no discussion, I am willing to withdraw for a moment the call for the regular order.

Mr. DUNHAM. I again ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill; which is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2068) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay certain citizens of Chicago, employés of the custom-house, for extra-time services.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasuary not otherwise appropriated, to the following-named persons, or their assigns, the amounts hereinafter set forth, to wit:

To A. W. Irwin, the sum of $379.50.
To David M. Bannister, the sum of $275.62.
To Robert Ayers, the sum of $76.25.
To Michael Crawford, John Howard, Alexander Brown, and A. J. Sherming, each the sum of $45.75.
To Henry Erbe, the sum of $34.50.
To John N. Ford, the sum of $59.25.
To John Hanson, the sum of $91.25.
To Henry Jones, the sum of $59.75.
To Mathias Steger, the sum of $88.25.
To John Regan, the sum of $124.69.
To George R. Carpenter, the sum of $74.81.
To Michael Murray, the sum of $115.
To John Degnan, the sum of $69.
To Noble Hillard, the sum of $82.50.
To Anton Nieman, $119.
To C. E. Putnam, $64.51.
To F. G. Harlan, $98.39.
To James H. White, $136.50.
To E. C. McCune, $150; the same being the amounts shown upon the original pay-rolls of the custom-house, Chicago, Ill., signed by the officers in charge, to be due said persons for service rendered in the said custom-house building.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to inquire whether this bill has been favorably reported from any committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes there is a report accompanying the bill.

Mr. DUNHAM. This bill is supported by a unanimous report from the Committee on Claims in this Congress, and there was also a unanimous report in its favor from the same committee in the Forty-ninth Congress. The bill merely proposes to pay employés in the Chicago custom-house for extra work—an allowance which can not be made without authority of an act of Congress.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUNHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. O'FERRALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BOND PURCHASES, NATIONAL-BANK DEPOSITS, ETC.

Mr. RANDALL, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back, with a recommendation that it be adopted, the following resolution introduced on the 6th instant by Mr. WEAVER; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Whereas it appears from a letter of the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, dated January 13, 1888, addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and printed in Executive Document No. 78, first session Fiftieth Congress, that an additional appropriation of $2,000 is made necessary to meet an anticipated deficiency in telegraphic expenses of the Treasury Department, caused by the regulations recently adopted relating to deposits of Government funds in national-bank depositories; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report to Congress says: "The Government has purchased some bonds during the present fiscal year for the sinking fund, and has been obliged to pay such a price for them that the annual saving in interest upon the purchases is only about 2½ per cent.; that the price of the same class of bonds has materially advanced since these purchases, and that the premium paid on said purchases amounted to $2,852,015.88;" and

Whereas the policy of purchasing bonds with surplus money in the Treasury, as aforesaid, has ceased, and the policy of depositing the public funds in a large number of national banks has been substituted in lieu thereof; and

Whereas the statute authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to designate national banks as United States depositories provides that the Secretary shall prescribe the regulations by which said depositories of public funds shall be governed: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to report to this House at the earliest possible moment all the facts bearing upon the following inquiries:

First. At what dates were the propositions made by the Treasury Department to buy said bonds; and if any person or association was employed to purchase said bonds, give name of said person, persons, or association. Give dates of purchase, name of seller, kinds of bonds purchased, amounts paid, and current rates at which said bonds were quoted at the time the proposition to purchase was made by the Department.

Second. State when the policy relating to deposits in national-bank depositories was adopted which created the deficiency spoken of in the letter aforesaid of the Secretary of the Treasury, and whether after the purchase spoken of on the eleventh page of the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the year 1887; give also reasons for changing policy first adopted, to wit, the purchase of bonds.

Third. State if the deficiency spoken of in the aforesaid letter of the Secretary was caused by the large increase in the number of national-bank depositories. Append to your answer a statement showing the per cent. of deposits on bonds deposited to secure the same under present regulations of the Treasury Department; also append copy of said regulations. State what per cent. of deposits has been allowed by the Department on United States bonds deposited for this purpose for the past twelve years, and whether the rate has been uniform, and whether below or above the par value of the bonds previous to the adoption of the present policy, and what was the rate percentage at the date of change of policy.

Fourth. Has said new policy of the Department concerning United States depositories, the number thereof, and the increased percentage of deposits allowed had any effect to either increase or diminish the circulation of national-bank notes, and to what extent, and whether said policy has resulted in the increase or diminution of the money supply of the country?

Fifth. State the number of national banks which have been designated as depositories of public funds since the adoption of the present policy, the number formerly designated that have availed themselves of the increased rate, and where said banks have been designated since the adoption of the present policy and rates of deposits, state when the bonds deposited in the Treasury by said designated depositories were transferred to said associations, and by whom.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EMBEZZLEMENT BY NATIONAL-BANK OFFICERS, ETC.

Mr. CULBERSON. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for the consideration of bills for one hour. The hour begins at 1 o'clock and 30 minutes. The call rests with the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 1215) to amend and re-enact section 5209 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5209 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended and re-enacted so as to read as follows:

"Every president, director, cashier, teller, clerk, or agent of any association who embezzles, abstracts, or willfully misapplies any of the moneys, funds, or credits of the association, or who, without authority from the directors, issues or puts in circulation any of the notes of the association, or who, without such authority, issues or puts forth any certificate of deposit, or draws any order or bill of exchange, makes any acceptance, assigns any note, bond, draft, bill of exchange, mortgage, judgment, or decree, or any such officer or person, or bank examiner, agent, or other person appointed or employed by the Comptroller of the Currency, who makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of the association, with intent in either case to injure or defraud the association, or any other company, body politic or corporate, or any individual person, or to deceive the Comptroller of the Currency, or any person in his employ, or any officer of the association, or any agent appointed to examine the affairs of any such association, and every person who, with like intent, aids or abets any officer, clerk, or agent in any violation of this section, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be imprisoned not less than five years nor more than ten."

SEC. 2. That this act shall be in force from its passage.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

At the beginning of line 12, strike out the word "or."

In lines 14, 15, and 16 strike out the words "any such officer or person, or bank examiner, agent, or other person appointed or employed by the Comptroller of the Currency."

Insert before the word "shall" where it first occurs, in line 30, the words, "And every person appointed or employed by the Comptroller of the Currency to examine into the affairs of any association, who shall make any false entry in a report or statement made by him to the Comptroller of the Currency, or shall suppress or conceal any material fact, with intent to deceive the Comptroller of the Currency."

Amend the title so as to read, "A bill to amend section 5209 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

Mr. ADAMS. I ask for the reading of the report upon this bill.

The report (by Mr. ADAMS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1215) to amend and re-enact section 5209 of the Revised Statutes, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report as follows:

One of the provisions of section 5209 of the Revised Statutes declares guilty of a misdemeanor any president, director, cashier, teller, clerk, or agent of any national bank who makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of the association with intent to deceive any officer of the association or any agent appointed to examine into its affairs. It does not apply to the making of any such false entry when made with intent to deceive the Comptroller of the Currency.

It appears that there is no provision of law to punish a bank examiner for making a false entry in a report made by him to the Comptroller of the Currency, or for suppressing or concealing any material fact with intent to deceive that officer.

The only effect of the passage of the pending bill will be to supply these omissions of the existing law. The change in the law is approved by the Comptroller of the Currency. The committee recommend striking out the word "or," at the beginning of line 12, and the words "any such officer, or person, or bank examiner, agent, or other person appointed or employed by the Comptroller of the Currency," in lines 14, 15, and 16, and inserting before the word "shall" where it first occurs in line 25 the following words: "And every person appointed or employed by the Comptroller of the Currency to examine into the affairs of any association who shall make any false entry in a report or statement made by him to the Comptroller of the Currency, or shall suppress or conceal any material fact with intent to deceive the Comptroller of the Currency." The committee also recommend that the title be amended by striking out the words "and re-enact." These changes are merely formal.

The committee recommend that the bill pass as amended.

Mr. ADAMS. Under the existing law an officer of a national bank, if he deceives the bank examiner, is liable to a penalty, but if he colludes with the bank examiner to deceive the Comptroller of the Currency he is not subject to a penalty. To supply this omission is the sole purpose of the pending bill; it does not change the existing law in any other particular. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Section 2, which provides "that this act shall be in force from its passage," is superfluous, and ought to be struck out. Either the committee overlooked that defect of the bill or I omitted to insert in the report an amendment to that effect.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the second section will be struck out, as the bill would take effect immediately upon its enactment unless otherwise provided.

There was no objection, and section 2 was struck out.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ADAMS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the title of this bill will be amended, as recommended by the committee, by striking out the words "and re-enact."

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

RECOVERY OF INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXES.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will take the floor and yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COLLINS].

Mr. COLLINS. I move, Mr. Speaker, to discharge the House Calendar from the further consideration of joint resolution (H. Res. 54) to provide for the recovery of internal-revenue taxes and penalties erroneously assessed and paid in certain cases.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the cases wherein moneys were, according to the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in Bailey, collector, vs. Clark and others (reported in the twenty-first volume of Wallace's United States Supreme Court Reports, page 284), illegally assessed and collected by United States internal-revenue officers from persons using borrowed money not capital in business, be referred to the Court of Claims, to hear and determine them, the same as provided in section 1059 of the Revised Statutes: Provided further, however, That petitions in said cases may be filed within one year from the passage hereof and not afterwards, and said cases shall be subject to no limitation save as last aforesaid.

Mr. COLLINS. I move to strike out the word "further" in the last part of the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COLLINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS, NEWARK, N. J.

Mr. CULBERSON. I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER. I move to discharge the House Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1648) providing for the holding of United States courts in the city of Newark, N. J.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That at each term of the circuit and district courts of the United States, to be holden in and for the district of New Jersey, it shall be lawful for the judge or judges holding such term, upon consent of both parties, or application therefor and good cause shown by either party to any civil cause set for trial or hearing at said term, to order such cause to be heard or tried at the city of Newark, in said district, upon a day set for that purpose by said judge; and no cause set for trial or hearing at any term of said court shall be peremptorily called for trial or hearing before the second Tuesday in such term; and writs of subpœna, to compel the attendance of witnesses at said city of Newark, may issue, and jurors summoned to attend said term may be ordered by said judge or judges to be in attendance upon said court in the city of Newark.

The amendments of the Committee on the Judiciary were read, as follows:

In line 10, after the word "judge," strike out the words:

"And no cause set for trial or hearing at any term of said court shall be peremptorily called for trial or hearing before the second Tuesday in such term."

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, Such application shall be made to such judge, either in vacation or term time, at least one week before the date set for the trial of said cause, and on at least five days' notice to the opposite party, or his or her counsel."

Mr. PARKER. I ask for the reading of the report of the committee.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred House bill 1648, respectfully report:

That a similar bill was introduced in the Forty-ninth Congress, and was reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee, but failed to be acted upon for want of time. This committee adopt the report then made, as follows:

That the United States courts held within the State of New Jersey are only authorized to be held at Trenton.

Newark is located about 48 miles from Trenton, and is the natural and convenient location for the holding of courts to accommodate the populous northern portion of the State. It contains a population of about 165,000, with Jersey City near by, which has about the same number of people.

Sufficient court-rooms, owned by the United States, now exist in the post-office building of said city of Newark, and no material additional expense will be incurred by the passage of this bill, while the convenience of suitors and witnesses will be subserved and their expenses lessened.

We recommend that the bill be amended as follows: By striking out all after the word "judge," in the tenth line, down to and including the word "term," in the thirteenth line, and inserting in lieu thereof the following, to wit: "Provided, Such application shall be made to such judge, either in vacation or term time, at least one week before the date set for the trial of said cause, and on at least five days' notice to the opposite party, or his or her counsel."

We recommend that the bill thus amended do pass.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PARKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS, ALABAMA.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up from the House Calendar for consideration a bill (H. R. 4470) to regulate the jurisdiction of the United States district judges, and of the courts over which they preside, in the State of Alabama, and yield the floor to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. OATES. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage and approval of this act the judge of the district court for the southern judicial district of the State of Alabama shall have jurisdiction throughout the middle district of said State, and shall hold the courts therein, with all power and jurisdiction now appertaining to the judge and courts of said middle district.

SEC. 2. That the present judge of the said middle and northern districts of said State shall continue to be the district judge of, and hold the courts in, both the northern and southern divisions of said northern district of said State.

Mr. OATES. I move that the bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. OATES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, was received from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries. He further announced that the President had approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 4271) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 4881) making an appropriation to carry into effect the provisions of the act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act to establish agricultural experimental stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto;"

An act (H. R. 2131) for the relief of Joseph Cox, administrator of Charles Pasters, deceased; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 72) relating to the invitation of the British Government to the Government of the United States to participate in the international exhibition at Melbourne to celebrate the founding of New South Wales.

AMENDMENT OF INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up from the House Calendar for present consideration a bill (H. R. 5931), and yield the floor to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to amend the internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever in any statute denouncing any violation of the internal-revenue laws as a felony, crime, or misdemeanor, there is prescribed in such statute a minimum punishment, less than which minimum no fine, penalty, imprisonment, or punishment is authorized to be imposed, every such minimum punishment is hereby abolished; and the court or judge in every such case shall have discretion to impose any fine, penalty, imprisonment, or punishment not exceeding the limit authorized by such statute, whether such fine, penalty, imprisonment, or punishment be less or greater than the said minimum so prescribed.

SEC. 2. That no warrant, in any case under the internal-revenue laws, shall be issued upon an affidavit making charges upon information and belief, unless such affidavit is made by a collector or deputy collector of internal revenue or by a revenue agent; and with the exception aforesaid no warrant shall be issued except upon a sworn complaint, setting forth the facts constituting the offense and alleging them to be within the personal knowledge of the affiant. And the United States shall not be liable to pay any fees to marshals, clerks, commissioners, or other officers for any warrant issued or arrest made, in prosecutions under the internal-revenue laws, unless there be a conviction or the prosecution has been approved, either before or after such arrest, by the attorney of the United States for the district where the offense is alleged to have been committed, or unless the prosecution was commenced by information or indictment.

SEC. 3. That whenever a warrant shall be issued by a commissioner or other judicial officer having jurisdiction for the arrest of any person charged wit criminal offense, such warrant, accompanied by the affidavit on which the same was issued, shall be returnable before some judicial officer named in section 1014 of the Revised Statutes residing in the county of arrest; or, if there be no such judicial officer in that county, before some such judicial officer residing in another county nearest to the place of arrest. And the judicial officer before whom the warrant is made returnable, as herein provided, shall have exclusive authority to make the preliminary examination of every person arrested as aforesaid, and to discharge him, admit him to bail, or commit him to prison, as the case may require: Provided, That this section shall not apply to the Indian Territory.

SEC. 4. That the circuit courts of the United States, and the district courts or judges thereof exercising circuit-court powers, and the district courts of the Territories, are authorized to appoint in different parts of the several districts in which said courts are held as many discreet persons to be commissioners of the circuit courts as may be deemed necessary. And said courts, or the judges thereof, shall have authority to remove at pleasure any commissioners heretofore or hereafter appointed in said districts.

SEC. 5. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may compromise any civil or criminal case, and may reduce or remit any fine, penalty, forfeiture, or assessment under the internal-revenue laws.

SEC. 8. That this act shall take effect sixty days after its approval.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. This bill, Mr. Speaker, is a substitute for the bill of the House No. 4302, and has been unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. There are only a few sections of the bill, which explain themselves; and unless some gentleman calls for a further explanation, I shall demand the previous question.

Mr. REED. I would like an explanation of some of the provisions here before the vote is taken.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred House bill 4302, have considered the same, and recommend the accompanying bill as a substitute therefor, and that said bill as amended by the substitute do pass.

Section 1 of this bill abolishes what are known as minimum punishments, and gives a discretion to the courts to impose any punishment for a violation of the internal-revenue laws, not exceeding the maximum limit authorized by the statute, whether such punishment be less or greater than the minimum punishment mentioned in the law. This section is intended to discourage frivolous and petty prosecutions. There are many cases where the judge might properly impose a less punishment than the minimum required by the statute, if he had the power.

Section 2 prohibits the issuing of a warrant in such cases "upon information and belief," except upon affidavit made by a collector or deputy collector of internal revenue or by a revenue agent; and with this exception no warrant is to be issued except upon a sworn complaint setting forth the facts to be within the personal knowledge of the affiant. And the Government will not be liable to pay any fees in prosecutions under the internal-revenue laws unless there be a conviction in court, or the prosecution has been approved by the district attorney, or unless the prosecution was commenced by information or indictment. It is believed that this provision will remedy many abuses and will greatly decrease the number of "causeless and idle prosecutions," apparently instituted in many cases for no other purpose than to make fees.

Section 3 requires a warrant issued by a commissioner or other judicial officer to be returnable before some judicial officer residing in the county of arrest. This is a reform that has long been needed. The Attorney-General, in his report to this Congress, recommends some legislation upon the subject. He says:

"Commissioners of circuit courts generally issue warrants that are returnable to themselves alone, regardless of the distance and cost consequent upon the order. They have the right to do this, yet experience shows that the right is open to reform. The right to issue a warrant might be left unrestricted in all respects, leaving the commissioner discretion to act upon reasonable grounds of suspicion and belief and on a charge made upon reasonable cause of the commission of a felony, but the commissioner before whom the warrant should be returned might be another, and perhaps ought to be another, if the offense is committed without the county of his residence. * * * The Department can not direct the commissioner how to act, as that officer is subject to the court alone. It is, therefore, a proper subject for legislation to remedy the abuse."

Section 4 gives full authority to the circuit courts, and to the district courts exercising circuit-court powers, to appoint as many commissioners as may be needed in the different localities of each judicial district, and also authorizes said courts to remove any of said commissioners ad libitum and summarily. It is the practice of some of the judges to revoke, without notice, the commissions of these officers. Other judges doubt their authority to do this summarily and without cause. The purpose of this section is to make the law on this subject plain, without meaning to declare that the power of removal does not already exist by implication.

Section 5 authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to compromise any civil or criminal case under the internal-revenue laws. This power now exists to a limited extent, but is rarely ever exercised. In many cases this power might be safely exercised without doing injustice either to individuals or the Government. At all events, it seems to be perfectly right and proper to lodge this power with the Treasury Department.

Sections 1, 2, and 4 of this bill were approved almost literally by the Judiciary Committee of the Forty-ninth Congress at its first session. And the clause at the end of the second section relating to fees was substantially embodied in the general appropriation bill and became a law by the action of both Houses at the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I shall be glad to answer any question in regard to either one of these sections that any gentleman may see proper to put to me.

Mr. PETERS. I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina what was the minimum punishment under the law.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. Well, under the internal-revenue laws, as now in force, the lowest punishment a judge is allowed to impose is one month's imprisonment and $100 fine; and, under another provision of law—I refer to section 5296 of the Revised Statutes—if the defendant is imprisoned for thirty days and fined $100—the least punishment the court can impose—he is compelled to remain in jail thirty days longer, if a pauper, before he is allowed to swear out. So that really the lowest punishment under the law is at present a term of imprisonment amounting to two months and $100 fine, and the payment of all the costs.

The first section of this bill authorizes the judge to impose any punishment whether less or greater than the minimum, provided it does not exceed the highest limit authorized by the statute. In other words, all minimum punishments are abolished, but the maximum punishment is not decreased.

The section gives to the judge the power in his discretion to impose any punishment from a nominal one to the highest limit of the statute.

Mr. PETERS. Does the amendment to the bill provide for imprisonment and fine, or imprisonment or fine?

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. It provides a fine, or imprisonment, or both.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to offer an amendment, with the consent of the gentleman.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I will yield a moment to have it read.

The proposed amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That no claim for services rendered under a warrant shall be paid unless such warrant shall have been approved by the collector or deputy collector and United States district attorney in the territory where the offense is charged to have been committed, prior to the rendition of such services.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not understand the gentleman from North Carolina to yield for that amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I yielded to have it read only.

Mr. CULBERSON. And I desire to say further to the gentleman from Kentucky that bills covering that proposition are now pending in the committee.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am heartily in favor of the bill as read; and if the proposed amendment would retard its passage, I do not want to insist upon it after the statement of the chairman of the committee, hoping that the same matter will be considered in due time in the form I suggest.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to ask a question in reference to this bill. I understand that prosecutions for illicit distilling, for example, or complaints, can only be made by the collector of internal revenue or a revenue officer.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I will explain that to the gentleman.

Mr. DINGLEY. And all such complaints must be on personal information of the collector.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. Let me explain that.

The second section of the bill provides that affidavits on information and belief only can be made by only three classes of persons, that is by a collector or by a deputy collector or by a revenue agent; and I will state that in most districts there are quite a number of these officers. In the district in which I live there are probably not less than thirty of such officials, and under the rules of court as they now exist in the western district of North Carolina and perhaps other districts the provisions of this section are required to be complied with in substance. I have a letter here from Hon. Robert P. Dick, the United States district judge for the western district of North Carolina, in which letter, dated on the 3d of this month, he states that the second section of this bill is exactly right, and says it is in accordance with the rules of court in his district; but the judges would prefer that this rule of court should be enacted into law.

Many other persons, however, are allowed to make affidavits. Anybody can make the affidavit who will swear to a personal knowledge of the facts, and the object of the section is to prevent unofficial persons from making such affidavits on information and belief only; and that is all there is in it.

I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EMOLUMENT RETURNS OF CIVIL OFFICERS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. 6558) regulating the emolument returns of civil officers of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no part of an appropriation for the judicial expenses of the United States shall be hereafter advanced, paid, or in any way allowed to any civil officer of the United States who shall neglect to make under oath a true and full return of all his fees, compensation, and emoluments within thirty days after June 30 and December 31 of each year, in manner and form as prescribed by the Attorney-General of the United States, unless such officer shall render to the Attorney-General a valid excuse for his failure to make the return hereinbefore required.

SEC. 2. That all services of every character performed by any such officer in pursuance of law, or by the order, rule, or sanction of the court, including the entry of all orders, decrees, judgments, and determinations, shall be embraced in his emolument return, and the fees of all such services, not specifically provided for by existing law, shall be assimilated to those provided for in chapter 16, Title XIII, Revised Statutes.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask for the reading of the report, which sufficiently explains the matter.

The report (by Mr. ROGERS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration House bill 4921, report a substitute therefor, and ask that the same be put on the Calendar, and that the original bill lie on the table.

It is ascertained that the clerks of some of the district and circuit courts of the United States, in different parts of the country, have been withholding very large sums of money from their emolument returns, and contending that the sums so withheld were not embraced within the terms of section 833 of the Revised Statutes. Notably is this the case in the matter of moneys received in naturalization cases, and in the Chinese habeas corpus cases in San Francisco, Cal. A recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States (Hill vs. United States, 120 U. S., p. 169, in the record as there presented) sustains the position assumed by such officers.

The committee do not mean to question the correctness of that decision, but think it is a wholesome rule to require every officer who receives moneys for the United States by means of the fact that he is an officer of the United States to render an account thereof to some proper accounting officer, which is and has always been the general practice of the Government. The first section of the bill is substantially the law that existed and was in force for many years, but which was dropped from the statutes in the last revision.

It forbids the Attorney-General from advancing or paying any moneys to marshals, district attorneys, or clerks who fail to render their returns as required by section 833, Revised Statutes of the United States, unless and until such returns are made, and a valid excuse rendered for the delay.

The second section of the bill requires the officers mentioned to include in such returns all moneys earned by them of every character, whether it be done in pursuance of law, or by the order, rule, or sanction of the court, and assimilates the fees for the performance of such services, when no specific compensation is fixed therefor by statute, to the fees fixed in Title XIII, chapter 16, of the Revised Statutes.

It is very desirable that the emolument returns of these officers shall be promptly made, that the manner of making them shall be uniform, and that no doubt should be entertained as to what they are required by law to embrace.

This bill has been framed and carefully matured to accomplish these purposes.

It does not change the fee bill in any particular, or in any way affect the maximum compensation allowed these officers by existing law; but it is intended to have covered into the Treasury such sums in excess of the maximum compensation allowed by law as they may receive for services performed by them because of the official relation they bear to the Government, whether such sums have been received for services performed strictly in the line of official duty or whether performed in a quasi-official capacity under the order, direction, or sanction of the court. It may not be out of place to say that some such legislation meets with the earnest approval of the Department of Justice, and is, in its opinion, necessary to orderly and uniform methods of keeping these accounts, as well as to secure promptly and without litigation what justly and rightfully belongs to the Government.

The committee recommend the passage of the substitute reported herewith, and also recommend that the original bill lie on the table.

Mr. ROGERS. I have no further observations to make. I move the passage of the bill.

Mr. MORROW. I would like to say one word about this matter.

Mr. ROGERS. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW].

Mr. MORROW. I have not the slightest objection to the passage of the bill. But in the report I understand the committee to say that the necessity for the bill arises from the fact that in cases of naturalization some clerks of the courts have withheld from their emolument returns the fees received for naturalization and also in Chinese habeas corpus cases in San Francisco. I desire to say that this is an error, so far as relates to these last cases. The clerks of the circuit and district courts of the United States in San Francisco have been receiving fees in Chinese habeas corpus cases; but those fees have all been paid into the Treasury and properly accounted for. The only question that has arisen in San Francisco was as to the amount to be collected from the petitioners in cases of habeas corpus, whether the amount should be $11 or $15. The matter being brought to the attention of the circuit judge he decided, as I understand, in accordance with the provisions of the pending bill, that the clerk's fees in such cases should be fixed by analogy for like services in other cases, at $11. The amount collected was, however, paid into the Treasury and correctly and promptly accounted for in the emolument returns. Therefore, so far as this report seeks to reflect upon the clerks in San Francisco it is not correct; and I hope the committee will understand that this is a fair and correct statement of the situation there.

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman from California may be right, and I trust he is. The understanding of the committee was what is stated in the report, but I do not wish to assert it against the statement of the gentleman from California.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CASTING AWAY OF VESSELS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. 3263) to amend section 5365 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill as proposed by the committee to be amended was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 5365 and 5366 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are severally hereby amended by adding thereto the following:

"Provided, That whenever the jury shall find as special facts that no loss of life, injury to the person, or peril or suffering to any person on such vessel ensued in consequence of such casting away or otherwise destroying, the person convicted of such offense may be sentenced to imprisonment for life or any number of years not less than three, or to a fine not exceeding $10,000, or to both such imprisonment and fine."

Mr. COLLINS. The only penalty for casting a vessel away on the high seas now is death. The committee proposes in the interest of justice and humanity to grade the punishment in case the jury find that no loss of life ensued, so that fine or imprisonment, either or both, may be the punishment.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COLLINS the title was amended so as to read:

A bill to amend sections 5365 and 5366 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. COLLINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BILLS OF LADING AS EVIDENCE.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. 1527) to make bills of lading conclusive evidence in certain cases.

The Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill back with a substitute.

The substitute reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert as follows:

"That whenever any common carrier by land or water signs and delivers any bill of lading or instrument in the nature thereof purporting to be for goods, wares, or merchandise received by such carrier for transportation from one State to another within the United States, or to any foreign country, such bill of lading or instrument in the nature thereof, in the hands of any bona fide holder for valuable consideration who acquired the same in the usual course of trade without any notice of any defect therein, shall be conclusive evidence that the goods described therein were actually received by such carrier in the manner and for the purpose as therein stated."

Mr. OATES. I ask that the substitute be adopted, after which I shall offer a further amendment recommended by the committee, and the bill will then still be open to amendment and discussion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH). The question is on the amendment submitted by the committee in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Has the substitute been read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask the gentleman from Alabama wherein the bill as amended changes the existing law on this subject?

Mr. OATES. I desire, before any discussion takes place, that the substitute for the original bill shall be adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama will send up his amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend the substitute by inserting between the words "any" and "common," in the first line, the following: "agent authorized to execute and deliver bills of lading for freight to be shipped by a."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Now I wish the chairman of the committee would explain this.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I was instructed by the committee to offer this amendment. The committee this morning somewhat hastily agreed upon that amendment to the substitute. I call the attention of every member of the Judiciary Committee especially to what I am now about to say. A thorough examination of the question since that amendment was agreed upon this morning satisfies me that it ought not to be adopted. The purpose of the bill is to correct what the committee consider as an evil in this: the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Pollard vs. Vinton, decided that a bill of lading which was given for the shipment of 150 bales of cotton at Memphis, Tenn., by Cobb & Co., the agents of Vinton, who owned the steam-boat Ben Franklin, and in fact the cotton, was not delivered, but Pollard, a banker in New York, advanced about $6,000 upon the bill——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour allotted to the Committee on the Judiciary under the rule has expired. This bill will go over until to-morrow.

JOSEPH W. M'CLURG.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 2611) for the relief of Joseph W. McClurg.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] asks unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill indicated by him. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay to Joseph W. McClurg, of Missouri, the sum of $5,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full payment and satisfaction of all claim for goods, wares, and merchandise and supplies furnished officers and men in military service of the United States in the late war of the rebellion under said McClurg as colonel by the firm of Tobert & Co., of which company said McClurg is sole surviving member.

The Committee on War Claims recommended the following amendment: In the fifth line of the bill strike out "five thousand" and insert "two thousand five hundred" as the amount of money proposed to be allowed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BREWER. Let the report be read and we can tell better.

Mr. BLAND. It has been twice favorably reported.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read, subject to the right to object.

The report (by Mr. STONE, of Kentucky) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2611) for the relief of Joseph W. McClurg, report as follows:

The facts out of which this bill for relief arises will be found stated in House Report No. 138, by the Committee on War Claims of the Forty-third Congress, a copy of which is hereto appended and made a part of this report.

Your committee adopt the said report as their own, and report back the bill with an amendment as follows: In line 5 strike out the words "five thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two thousand five hundred," and as amended recommend its passage.

[House Report No. 138, Forty-third Congress, second session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 162) for the relief of Joseph W. McClurg and others, of Camden County, Missouri, report:

That said McClurg and others were, under the firm-name of Torbert & Co., merchants, at Lime Creek, Camden County, Missouri, at the commencement of the war in 1861, when and where the "Osage regiment" and "Hickory County battalion" of Missouri State militia were organized, and where said troops served during the spring and summer of that year, as recognized by acts of Congress.

The people of this section were at the time divided in sentiment, as a rule the more thrifty siding with those in arms against the Government, and the poorer with the Government, and no crops were raised that year by these men who entered the service. To organize these men and save them as a nucleus around which Union men might rally, food, clothing, and supplies for themselves and families were necessary, and were by the claimants furnished to the value of about $8,000, which was reduced, by payments made by those to whom the goods were furnished, to $4,666.87—supplies from the Government being inadequate and uncertain; and your committee believe that while it may be true that these supplies were furnished by said McClurg and others, expecting payment by those to whom they were furnished, yet they were supplied with an earnest purpose to promote, and did promote, the public interest.

Your committee believe the claimants should be paid therefor, and that $2,500 is a fair compensation for the goods so furnished, and accordingly report a bill for that amount, as a substitute for H. R. No. 162, and recommend its passage.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRANK BAKER.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3749) for the relief of Frank Baker, and that the bill be now considered and put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to credit Capt. Frank Baker, Ordnance Department, United States Army, with $172.52, being a sum of money stolen from him while acting commissary of subsistence at Fort Fred. Steele, Wyoming Territory.

Mr. STEELE. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report of the Committee on Claims (by Mr. BOWDEN) was read, as follows:

The claimant, then second lieutenant, Thirteenth Infantry, United States Army, was, in 1874, on duty as acting commissary of subsistence at Fort Fred. Steele, Wyoming Territory. To assist him in issuing, selling, and accounting for subsistence stores Commissary Sergeant William H. Rooney was employed under "Regulations relative to commissary sergeants," published in General Orders No. 38, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, March 20, 1873. Rooney stole from the subsistence funds, for which Baker was and is held accountable, the sum of $172.52, and deserted August 3, 1874. Rooney was afterwards arrested and court-martialed in November, 1874, convicted, and sentenced to dishonorable discharge, to loss of pay, and imprisonment. August 17, 1876, a board of survey fully investigated the case, exonerated Baker, and recommended his relief. Three several times, to wit, July 8, 1874, February 7, 1876, and December 17, 1878, has the Secretary of War recommended the relief of Baker by act of Congress. See his letters of those dates; see also Executive Document No. 135, Forty-third Congress, second session.

The committee report the bill back with the recommendation that it pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LONG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FORT HALL RESERVATION, IDAHO.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The message was read, as follows, and was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of 4th instant, from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting, with other papers, a draught of a bill to accept and ratify an agreement made with the Shoshone and Bannock Indians, for the surrender and relinquishment to the United States of a portion of the Fort Hall reservation, in the Territory of Idaho, for the purposes of a town site, and for the grant of a right of way through said reservation to the Utah and Northern Railway Company, and for other purposes. The matter is presented for the consideration of the Congress.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 7, 1888.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. PEEL. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report the resolution which I send to the desk, and to ask its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Tuesday the 6th, Wednesday the 7th, and Thursday the 8th days of March, 1888, immediately after the hour for the consideration of bills by committees, be set apart for the consideration of bills and measures reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs in such order as may be designated by said committee. This order not to conflict with prior orders, or revenue or general appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PEEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill which I send to the desk.

Mr. SCOTT. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] calls for the regular order, which prevents the Chair from entertaining requests for unanimous consent. The next business in order is the unfinished business. There being none, the next thing in order is to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. If there be no such motion——

HOUSE MISCELLANEOUS DOCUMENT NO. 124.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The report was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 3, 1888.

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House 500 copies of the resolution designated as House Miscellaneous Document No. 124, as amended and passed by the House of Representatives.

The committee have considered the House resolution providing for the printing for the use of the House 500 copies of the resolution designated as House Miscellaneous Document No. 124, as amended and passed by the House January 26, 1886, and report the same with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The resolution is the one passed the other day, providing for the investigation of certain trusts. The original resolution was amended several times, and the amendments appear in the RECORD at various points. It is desirable to have the resolution properly printed as finally amended and passed.

The report was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I also ask the consideration of the report which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. Is it a privileged report?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. SCOTT. I withdraw the demand.

JOHN C. JOHNSTON.

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 221) increasing the pension of John C. Johnston, and that the House now consider the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the pension of John C. Johnston, certificate numbered 45303, as private, Company A, Sixty-first Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, be increased to $36 per month, the same to be in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PETERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARIA SYPHAX.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3441) declaratory of the meaning of the act entitled "An act for the relief of Maria Syphax." I ask that the bill and report be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of June 12, 1866, entitled "An act for the relief of Maria Syphax," releasing and confirming to her, her heirs and assigns, the title to a piece of land therein described, being part of the Arlington estate, in the county of Alexandria, in the State of Virginia, shall be construed to operate as a relinquishment to the said Maria Syphax, her heirs or devisees, of any outstanding title to the said piece of land which the United States may have acquired since the date of that act.

The report of the Committee on the Judiciary (by Mr. STEWART, of Vermont) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 3441, report as follows:

This bill has passed the Senate once and received favorable report from the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives in the Forty-ninth Congress. That report was prepared by the chairman of the committee in the Forty-ninth Congress, Hon. J. Randolph Tucker, and is adopted as the report of this committee. It is as follows:

It appears that by an act of Congress approved June 12, 1866, a parcel of land, being part of the Arlington estate, in Alexandria County, Virginia, was released and confirmed to Maria Syphax, who had lived on it for many years.

Since the date of that act the title of the United States has been successfully assailed in the case, which, under the name of United States vs. Lee (106 U. S. Rep., 196), was decided by the Supreme Court in 1882, and the judgment in favor of G. W. Custis Lee was affirmed for the Arlington estate. Subsequently the United States purchased the whole estate from said Lee.

It is probable that the purchase of the outstanding title by the United States would inure to the benefit of Maria Syphax, but to remove all doubt the Senate bill has been passed, and this committee see no reason against removing any cloud upon the title by concurring in the passage of this bill, though there may be no legal necessity for it.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution and concurrent resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Joint resolution (S. R. 17) to print additional copies of the United States map of the edition of 1886, prepared by the Commissioner of Public Lands.

Concurrent resolution for printing the report of the National Academy of Sciences for 1887.

DIVISION SUPERINTENDENTS, RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, and that it be now considered and put on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6439) authorizing the appointment of eleven division superintendents of railway mail service.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General is authorized to appoint and assign to duty eleven division superintendents of railway mail service, who shall each be paid a salary of $2,500 a year.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads was read, as follows:

After the word "General," in line 3, strike out "is" and insert "be, and is hereby."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill just read, and that it be now considered in the House.

Mr. BREWER. This seems to be a rather important bill to be passed by unanimous consent. It proposes an increased number of public officials—eleven additional officers, as I understand.

Mr. DOCKERY. Only two.

Mr. BREWER. Is this the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. DOCKERY. It is, with the exception of one member.

Mr. BREWER. If the bill provides only for two additional officers, who will, of course, come from "our friends, the enemy," I do not object.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to inquire whether these additional employés are to be selected in accordance with civil-service rules.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope not. [Laughter.] The division superintendents of the railway mail service are appointed by the Postmaster-General.

Mr. STEELE. Would not the gentleman like to have the bill amended so that these employés shall be appointed in accordance with civil-service rules?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us consider that proposition at some future time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BREWER. I think members of the House ought to have an opportunity to examine this bill more deliberately.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects

Subsequently,

Mr. DOCKERY said: I understand the gentleman from Michigan is willing to withdraw his objection to the bill in regard to division superintendents in the railway mail service.

Mr. BREWER. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. If there be no further objection, the bill is before the House for consideration.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am ready to answer any questions which members may desire to ask. If no explanation is desired, I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD in connection with this bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have the report read.

The report of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads (by Mr. DOCKERY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, having considered H. R. 6439, report the same favorably with the following amendment: Strike out the word "is," line 3, and substitute "be, and is hereby;" so that the line as amended will read: "That the Postmaster-General be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint and."

The act of June 17, 1878 (20 Stat., p. 140), authorized the Postmaster-General to appoint "nine assistant superintendents of railway mail service, who may be detailed to act as superintendents of division of railway mail service, who shall each receive a salary of $2,500 per annum and no more." Pursuant to the authorization of this law, nine divisions were established, as follows:

First division.—Comprising the New England States; office of superintendent, Boston, Mass.

Second division.—Comprising New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and the Eastern Shore of Maryland; office of superintendent, New York, N. Y.

Third division.—Comprising Maryland (excluding the Eastern Shore), North Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia, and the District of Columbia; office of superintendent, Richmond, Va.

Fourth division.—Comprising South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana; office of superintendent, Atlanta, Ga.

Fifth division.—Comprising Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, and Tennessee; office of superintendent, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Sixth division.—Comprising Wisconsin, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, and upper peninsula of Michigan, and the Territories of Dakota and Wyoming; office of superintendent, Chicago, Ill.

Seventh division.—Comprising Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, Texas, Colorado, the Indian Territory, and New Mexico; office of superintendent, St. Louis, Mo.

Eighth division.—Comprising California, Nevada, Oregon, and the Territories of Alaska, Arizona, Idaho, Montana, Utah, and Washington; office of superintendent, San Francisco, Cal.

Ninth division.—Comprising the through mails from New York City to Chicago via Buffalo, Suspension Bridge, Toledo, and Detroit, the lines of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad, and the lower peninsula of Michigan; office of superintendent, Cleveland, Ohio.

As establishing the necessity for the two additional superintendents provided for by this bill, we beg to submit the following:

Comparative statement of the railway mail service, showing the increase in mileage, etc., for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, over the corresponding period of 1878–'79.

Fiscal year ended—	Miles of railroad over which mails were carried.	Steam-boat routes over which mails were carried.	Annual transportation of mails by railroads.	Length of railway post-office lines.

* Decrease.

† Postal clerks, route agents, mail-route messengers, and local mail agents.

An examination of the table shows that at the time provision was made for the nine assistant superintendents, the total number of miles of railroad on which mails were carried aggregated to 79,991, and that in the nine years succeeding, 50,968 miles were added to this service—an increase in mileage of 63 per cent. The statement further reveals the fact that the postal clerks for the fiscal year just ended handled 3,192,336,517 more pieces of mail than were handled by the railway postal clerks at the time of the passage of the original law, and that the post-offices had increased in number during the same period 14,302.

The rapid growth and necessities of this service are further indicated by the following tabular statement, taken from the report of the General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, found on page 580 of the Postmaster-General's report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887:

Miles of service on railroad, steam-boat, and closed-pouch lines during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887.

Especial attention is invited to the mileage of the sixth and seventh divisions, located in the western, southwestern, and northwestern portions of the country; and in the light of this exhibit your committee fully agree with the General Superintendent that "it is utterly impossible for any one man to give them (divisions) that careful personal supervision which is necessary to insure such prompt and efficient service as the public has a right to expect."

This measure has the approval of the Postmaster-General and the General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service; and in the belief that the two additional superintendents will largely promote the efficiency of the service, we beg to report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BREWER. I see that this bill provides for an increase of two in the number of these superintendents, making eleven in all. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether its effect will be to change the salaries of these officials.

Mr. DOCKERY. The salaries remain just as they are in the old law. There is no increase whatever.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOCKERY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENLISTED MEN OF THE NAVY AND MARINE CORPS.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask, by unanimous consent, to call up for present consideration from the House Calendar a bill (H. R. 1508) to relieve certain appointed or enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps from the charge of desertion.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the charge of desertion now standing on the pay or muster rolls of the Navy or Marine Corps against any appointed or enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps who served in the late war shall be removed in all cases where it shall be made to appear, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, from such rolls or from other satisfactory evidence, that any such appointed or enlisted man served faithfully until the expiration of his term of enlistment, or until the 1st day of May, A. D. 1865, or was prevented from completing his term of service by reason of wounds received or disease contracted in the line of duty, but who, by reason of absence from his command at the time he became entitled to his discharge, failed to be mustered out and to receive a discharge from the service: Provided, That no such appointed or enlisted man shall be relieved under this section who, not being sick or wounded, left his command, without proper authority, while the same was in presence of the enemy.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to remove the charge of desertion standing on the pay or muster rolls of the Navy or Marine Corps against any appointed or enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps who served in the late war, in all cases where it shall be made to appear, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, from such rolls or from other satisfactory evidence, that such appointed or enlisted man charged with desertion or with absence without leave, after such charge of desertion or absence without leave, voluntarily returned to and served in the line of his duty until he was mustered out of the service, and received a certificate of discharge therefrom, or, while so absent, and before the expiration of his term of enlistment, died from wounds, injury, or disease received or contracted in the service and in the line of duty.

SEC. 3. That in all cases where the charge of desertion shall be removed under the provisions of this act from the record of any appointed or enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps who has not received a certificate of discharge, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy to issue to such appointed or enlisted man, or, in case of his death, to his heirs or legal representatives, a certificate of discharge.

SEC. 4. That when the charge of desertion shall be removed under the provisions of this act from the record of any appointed or enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps, such man, or, in case of his death, the heirs or legal representatives of such man, shall receive all pay and bounty which may have been withheld on account of such charge of desertion or absence without leave: Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to give to any such man as may be entitled to relief under the provisions of this act, or, in case of his death, to the heirs or legal representatives of any such man, the right to receive pay and bounty for any period of time during which such man was absent from his command without leave of absence: And provided further, That no appointed or enlisted man, nor the heirs or legal representatives of any such man, who served in the Navy or Marine Corps a period of less than six months shall be entitled to the benefit of the provisions of this act: And provided further, That all applications for relief under this act shall be made to and filed with the Secretary of the Navy within the period of five years from and after its passage, and all applications not so made and filed within the said term of five years shall be forever barred, and shall not be received or considered.

SEC. 5. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was read, as follows:

In the second section, after the words "without leave," insert the words "and within a reasonable time thereafter."

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the report of the committee be read. This bill seems to be far-reaching in its effects, not only going to back pay, but to lay the foundation for pensions. I think we ought to have the report read, so it may go of record.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Without detaining the House to have the entire report read, I can make a brief explanation which I think will be satisfactory to the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think, in reference to so important a bill, the grounds on which it is advocated should be set forth at length.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have no objection, of course, to the reading of the report. I merely suggested we might save time by allowing a brief explanation to be made.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the report be read.

Mr. COX. Is not this the same bill that passed some time ago?

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is.

The report (by Mr. BOUTELLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, having under consideration various bills for the removal of the charge of desertion from the records of appointed or enlisted men of the Navy or Marine Corps, ask to be discharged from the further consideration of House bills Nos. 372, 1632, 2251, 2497, 3963, 3964, 4401, 4747, and 6011, and that they may be laid upon the table, and as a substitute therefor recommend the passage of House bill No. 1508, with certain amendments, to provide for the foregoing and similar cases by a general law, to be entitled "An act to relieve certain appointed or enlisted men of the Navy or Marine Corps from the charge of desertion."

The object and effect of the legislation recommended are simply to extend to the men who served in the naval branch of the military service during the late war the benefit of the provisions of the act approved July 5, 1884, entitled "An act to relieve certain soldiers from the charge of desertion," and the act approved May 17, 1886, entitled "An act to remove the charge of desertion from the rolls and records in the office of the Adjutant-General of the Army against certain soldiers." The justice and expediency of applying the same general rules to the Army and Navy in the matter of amending or correcting the military record of individuals are so obvious that your committee deem no argument necessary to sustain the proposition. Yet at the present time the charge of desertion may be promptly and lawfully removed from the record of a soldier, while there is no power to amend or correct the record of an appointed or enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps, whose case might be precisely similar to that of the soldier, and of course equally deserving of relief.

As explanatory of the act of July 5, 1884, and in support of the action proposed by the bill herewith reported, your committee quote the following extracts from the report of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Forty-seventh Congress:

"Your committee, in the substitute proposed, have provided in the first section of the same for the removal of the charge of desertion from all soldiers who served in the volunteer service in the late war until the expiration of the term of their enlistment, or until the 1st day of May, A. D. 1865. It is claimed, and your committee believes justly, that after the war was over and hostilities had actually ceased, a number of soldiers, long departed from their families and from their relatives and friends, feeling that the country no longer needed their services, and impatient at the delay of being mustered out, left their commands and went home without being mustered out of the service, and without receiving the certificate of honorable discharge to which their patriotic and faithful service entitled them. And while your committee would regret to see the charge of desertion removed from the record of any unworthy soldier who actually deserted his country's flag in the hour of danger, and left his comrades to brave perils he was too cowardly or too unpatriotic to share with them, yet to soldiers who had served long and faithfully, who had followed the flag until the war was regarded at an end, and the Government had entered upon the work of mustering out the volunteer forces, your committee think the charge of desertion should not be allowed to stand longer upon the rolls and records against them, but should now be removed.

"There is another class of soldiers who enlisted to serve for a certain number of years, or 'during the war,' who enlisted as volunteers to aid in the suppression of the rebellion and in the restoration of the Union, who left their homes and their families to help maintain and preserve the Government of their country; and when the war was over, as they felt, and hostilities had actually ceased, believing that their term of enlistment had actually expired, and that the country no longer needed their services for the purposes for which they enlisted, upon a refusal to muster them out, left their commands, returned to their occupations and their homes and families, and stand chargedas deserters. The first section of the proposed substitute will also relieve that class of soldiers from the charge of desertion; and while your committee hesitate to admit, under any circumstances, the right of a soldier to determine for himself the expiration of his term of enlistment, yet there is so much in favor of the class of soldiers last referred to, who, inspired by patriotism, enlisted as volunteers only to serve during the war for the preservation of the Union, and having served faithfully until it was universally recognized and felt that the war was over and that the Government no longer had any just claims upon their services, left their commands and returned to their homes, your committee, believing that there was no intention in these cases to desert the flag of their country, are of the opinion that the charge of desertion should be removed from that class of soldiers also.

"The second section of the proposed substitute is intended by your committee to relieve another class of soldiers who, having absented themselves from their commands, or deserted, after such desertion or absence without leave, voluntarily returned to their commands, and were either tried by court-martial and punished and restored to the rolls of their commands, or were restored without punishment, and who served afterwards until regularly mustered out of the service and received a regular certificate of discharge. It appears from the evidence in a number of cases where bills have been introduced by members of the House to remove charges of desertion from the record of individual soldiers, that after desertion such soldiers voluntarily returned, were tried by court-martial, and paid the full penalty of their absence without leave, or desertion, and afterwards served honorably and faithfully, in some instances receiving honorable wounds in battle, and at the close of the war were mustered out regularly and received a regular certificate of discharge. In such cases your committee are of the opinion that the charge of desertion should be removed, and that in all cases where a soldier absented himself from his command and voluntarily returned to the same, and paid the penalty of such absence, or the offense was not regarded as sufficient to require any punishment, and then served until regularly mustered out and received regular discharges, should have the charge of desertion removed.

"For these reasons your committee have recommended the passage of the substitute proposed."

In order to adapt the provisions of the law as perfectly as possible to the conditions of the naval service, your committee referred the subject-matter to the Navy Department for its suggestions, and in a communication dated March 23, 1886, Judge-Advocate-General William B. Remey, United States Navy, recommends certain amendments to House bill No. 1017, and says:

"In reply I have the honor to state that should the bill become a law it will tend to facilitate the granting of equitable relief in many cases where such relief is now delayed or prevented only by the fact that the mark of desertion appears upon the record.

"Under existing law this Department has uniformly declined to remove the mark of desertion except when it is conclusively shown that such mark has been erroneously made, or where an honorable discharge subsequently granted operates, under the decision in the case of the United States vs. Kelly (15 Wallace, 34), to render the removal of the mark of desertion unnecessary.

"When, at the close of the late war, a large reduction in the number of appointed and enlisted men in the Navy became necessary, and vessels of the Navy which had been engaged in the blockading squadrons returned to the North, leave of absence was given to enlisted men whose terms had not expired, as well as to some whose terms had expired, such leave, however, being only temporary and intended to cover the period necessary for adjusting the accounts of the men prior to their discharge. Such of them as failed to return to their vessels or to report at any station were necessarily marked as deserters, and although there may have been a reasonable excuse for such failure, the Department has no power to remove the mark without authority from Congress."

In view of the considerations stated, your committee recommend the passage of House bill No. 1508 with the following amendments:

In section 2, line 10, after the word "leave," insert the words "and within a reasonable time thereafter." After section 2 insert the following section:

"SEC. 3. That the charge of desertion now standing on the pay or muster rolls of the Navy or Marine Corps against any appointed or enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps who served in the late war, by reason of his having enlisted at any station or on board of any vessel of the Navy without having first received a discharge from the station or vessel in which he had previously served, shall be removed in all cases wherein it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy from such rolls and records, or from other satisfactory testimony, that such re-enlistment was not made for the purpose of securing bounty or other gratuity that he would not have been entitled to had he remained under his original term of enlistment: Provided, That no appointed or enlisted man shall be relieved under this act who, not being sick or wounded, left his command without proper authority while the same was in presence of the enemy, or who, at the time of leaving his command, was in arrest or under charges, or in whose case the period of absence from the service exceeded three months."

Amend by changing the numbers of sections 3, 4, and 5 of the bill to read sections 4, 5, and 6, respectively.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, as I gathered from the reading of the bill and report, the only object is to free from the charge of desertion those who, after the ending of hostilities, supposing their time of service was ended, went home.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that this bill covers the removal of the charge of desertion in several classes of cases which were provided for in the act of July 5, 1884, so far as the military service was concerned. The act of May 17, 1886, also applied to the Army. This bill absolutely and solely applies to the naval service the legislation which has been enacted for the Army.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I understand it is the unanimous report of your committee.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is.

Mr. MCMILLIN. And that it is recommended by the Navy Department.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I was going to say, Mr. Speaker, as originally drawn it was the application of the act of July 5, 1884, to the Navy. That bill was taken by me to the Navy Department, and the bill which is now before the House was formulated by the Judge-Advocate-General of the Navy, simply applying the precise terms of the law as enacted in reference to the military service to the enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps. An amendment is now offered, with the entire approval of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and after careful examination. The language simply makes an addition to the act of 1884 and the act of 1886, covering another class of cases. It applies that law also to the naval service. So, as I stated at the outset, the entire bill and amendment simply apply to the sailors and marines of the Navy that which is now the law in reference to the Army of the United States.

Mr. HERBERT. The insertion of the words "and within a reasonable time" are not included in the law now, but have been added by the Committee on Naval Affairs, after careful examination.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is so. There is a necessity for prompt action in reference to this matter. The Committee on Naval Affairs every session has referred to it a large number of private bills, asking for action in reference to certain individual cases of sailors and marines for some relief to be granted under the general law by the Adjutant-General which the Navy Department is unable to grant, and this general law is reported in lieu of those private bills.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Has the gentleman from Maine information of the number of cases affected by it?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have no information as to the exact number, but my impression is that it is not large.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, this bill was considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs, of which I had the honor of being chairman, and well considered, some three or four sessions ago. One great reason why it should be enacted into law is that it is an advance in favor of general as against special legislation. It is a step in the direction of the refinement of legislation.

The philosophy of legislation here is to do away, if possible, with particular or individual legislation; and I think we should all welcome any bill or measure which would save the House from the consideration of special bills or individual bills, and combine them all into a general bill, as this does, applying to the Navy the same provisions that have heretofore been applied, by other laws, to the Army.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments proposed.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BOUTELLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Committee on Naval Affairs will be discharged from the further consideration of the several bills referred to in the report, which will be entered upon the Journal and ordered to lie upon the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

ALFRED PLEASONTON.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask the gentleman from Texas to yield to me to make a report from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MILLS. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send the report to the desk.

Mr. HOOKER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 2972) authorizing the President to appoint and retire Alfred Pleasonton a brigadier-general; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TILLMAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 6894) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUCHANAN. All points of order are reserved.

ORTHOGRAPHIC REFORM.

Mr. WARNER (by request), by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 6895) for the appointment of a commission on the reform of orthography; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Education, and ordered to be printed.

WESTERN CHEROKEE INDIANS.

Mr. COBB, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 1407) authorizing the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of the "Old Settlers" or Western Cherokee Indians; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADJUSTMENT OF ACCOUNTS UNDER THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. TAULBEE submitted the following resolution of inquiry; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Labor:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, the Postmaster-General, and the Attorney-General be, and they are hereby, requested to inform the House what amounts are deemed necessary to pay the claims arising in their respective Departments under the provisions of a bill now pending in the Senate, entitled "A bill providing for the adjustment of the accounts of laborers arising under the eight-hour law," and numbered 1853, should said bill become a law.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I now insist upon the motion that the House adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 84, noes 21.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

RELATIONS WITH CANADA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions to be offered, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day, introduced by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. FRYE. The next resolution in order on the Calendar after that one is a resolution offered by me requesting the Committee on Foreign Relations to get certain information. I am very anxious that that resolution shall pass, so that the committee may enter upon the business which it assigns to it. When the resolution was first read, the objection made to it by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] was made by a misapprehension. He supposed that it was a call on the Secretary of State for information. It is simply a request upon the Committee on Foreign Relations to obtain certain information. I ask that that resolution may be taken up, as it is next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have the pending resolution laid aside?

Mr. FRYE. Let it be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution referred to by him.

Mr. PADDOCK. I wish to inquire what has become of the other resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is temporarily laid aside to enable the Senate, at the request of the Senator from Maine, to proceed to the consideration of a resolution the title of which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. A resolution directing the Committee on Foreign Relations to prepare a statement showing the political organization of the Dominion of Canada.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FRYE. The resolution has been read once at length. I ask to amend it, in clause 1, by inserting in the second line, between the word "the" and the word "relations," the word "geographical," and by striking out the last six words, "as well as to Great Britain."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2 of the first paragraph, between the word "the" and the word "relation," it is proposed to insert the word "geographical;" and after the words "United States," in line 3, to strike out "as well as to Great Britain;" so as to make the resolution read:

Ordered, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be authorized and directed to prepare for the use of the Senate a statement showing—

1. The political organizations of the Dominion of Canada and of the several provinces of which it is composed, and the geographical relations sustained by the same to the United States.

2. The several treaties, commercial or otherwise, that have been made between the United States and Great Britain in behalf of the Dominion of Canada, or any of the several provinces composing the same, and the present condition or status of said treaties.

3. The commercial relations established by the statutes of the United States between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, or any of the provinces composing the same.

4. The amount and value of the commerce and trade, subject to duty, between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, or the provinces of which it is composed.

5. The amount and value of the "transit" trade or commerce of the Dominion of Canada, not subject to duty, passing through the territory of the United States between said Dominion and countries other than the United States.

6. The amount and value of the commerce and trade between the Dominion of Canada, and the provinces of which it is composed, and all other countries, including the United States.

7. The area of the Dominion of Canada, and of the several provinces that compose it, and the population of the same, including Newfoundland.

8. The amount of the funded and floating debts of the Dominion of Canada, and of the several provinces of which it is composed, and the objects for which they were created.

9. The revenues, from whatever source, of the Dominion of Canada, and of the several provinces composing the same, including Newfoundland, and the current charges against the same.

10. The several railroads that have been constructed in the Dominion of Canada, and within the provinces of which it is composed, including Newfoundland; the mileage of the same; the cost of the same; the share capital, funded and floating debt of the same; the guaranties or undertakings of Great Britain, or of the Dominion of Canada, or of the several provinces composing the same, including Newfoundland, on account of such railroads; the tonnage, earnings, and operating expenses of the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment requires no action by the Senate. Will the Senate agree to the resolution as modified?

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

THE MAIL SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution coming over from a previous day, submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. PLUMB January 30, 1888, as follows:

Whereas there have been for many months serious complaints as to the inefficient character of the mail service, especially in the West and South, and the same continue, indicating that the trouble is of a permanent character:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be instructed to make thorough inquiry into the cause of such inefficient mail service, and report to the Senate their conclusions thereon, with suggestions as to remedy.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to state, on behalf of the Senator who introduced the resolution, the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], that he is detained in the Committee on Agriculture on an important hearing before that committee, and the resolution had better go over until he can be present. I think he would like to be present when the resolution is considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over and retain its place on the Calendar, if there be no objection.

ALIEN OWNERSHIP OF MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1176.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope we shall proceed with the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Nevada can not be entertained by the Chair before 1 o'clock, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent. I think the bill will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1176) to authorize the sale to aliens of certain mineral lands.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the act entitled "An act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, etc.," approved March 3, 1887, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting after section 4 of said act the following:

"Provided, however, That this act shall not relate to, or in any manner affect, the title to mineral lands or mining claims in the Territories of the United States, which have been acquired or held under the mineral land laws of the United States, nor to mills or other reduction works or property used in the production of metals from said mineral lands or claims; but, as to all such mineral lands, mining claims, mills, reduction works, and other property, the laws of the United States and of the Territories shall be and remain the same as though this act had not passed."

Mr. STEWART. I will say one word in explanation of the bill. It only applies to the mineral lands acquired under our mineral land laws. Those lands are pretty well guarded against monopolies, and the foreign capital which has been invested in developing them in the last thirty years has been beneficial. Foreign capitalists have probably expended more money than they have taken out of them. At all events, it is a business where the owners have to employ a great many people and spend a large amount of money, and whether they are foreigners or natives makes no difference. If they will develop the mines in the Territories and furnish employment, it is entirely satisfactory to the people.

I believe there is a universal desire among those who are familiar with the subject that this particular kind of property—mines which require large capital for their development, as they usually do—should remain under the law as it stood before the alien land law was passed. That law was directed mainly and properly against acquiring agricultural lands so as not to operate against private settlers and citizens, and prevent them from obtaining homes. The object of the bill is to restore the law as it had stood for the last thirty years, and its operation was entirely satisfactory.

Mr. MITCHELL. I indorse fully all that has been said by the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining. I hold in my hand a letter addressed to me by Hon. JOSEPH K. TOOLE, the Delegate in Congress from the Territory of Montana, and I should like to have it read in this connection, so that it may go in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 1, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: Having observed that you have introduced in the Senate a bill to modify the alien land law and feeling a deep interest in this proposed legislation, I venture to make a few suggestions which I hope will show the injustice and inexpediency of the present law and furnish some reasons for modification whereby mineral lands shall be exempted from its operation.

An examination of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will show that the reasons for the passage of the act applied entirely to agricultural lands and were based upon the fact that large areas of such were purchased and held by aliens, estates which were increasing in value from year to year. This is not, and never can be, true of mineral lands, for the following reasons:

First. Under the land laws of the United States a lode claim can not exceed a parallelogram whose dimensions are 600 feet wide and 1,500 feet long; and a placer claim can not exceed 20 acres.

Second. It is uniformly true that such lands do not enhance in value by the lapse of time, but upon the contrary are worthless for any purpose after the mineral in them has been exhausted.

What reason is there, then, for laying this embargo upon the Territories? The owners who have generally sought foreign markets have been poor men, who have only done so when they could not obtain money in the immediate locality, or the great money centers of the United States, and the question of obtaining capital abroad has generally been of vital importance, as the owners have often been at the time seriously in debt for preliminary work upon their properties, and if they have failed to obtain what they require there, they have sometimes had to abandon their properties, their workmen have been thrown out of employment, and the owners, if not ruined, have lost the labor of years.

In other cases the owner has simply gone abroad, as the United States railroad companies and similar concerns go, to the cheapest money market, and by so doing the owner has managed to retain a much larger interest in his property; or he has gone there for assistance to prevent being "frozen out," or to sell at a higher figure.

Owing to depressed trade, or to the greater attraction of other enterprises, there are, as you know, periods, frequently of years' duration, when it is simply impossible to get money employed in any part of the United States for new mining enterprises, except to a limited degree locally, and during that period there must be much curtailment of labor and much sacrifice of poor men's interest if the needy owner can no longer obtain what he requires from Europe.

The promoters of the mining section of the act can scarcely have realized the immense area that exists in the Territories, the countless lodes discovered and awaiting capital for development, and the still greater number awaiting discovery. The surplus capital of the United States, great as it is, will not for hundreds of years fail to find a larger field than it can occupy.

Think of the small area of the Cornish mines—so small that it would scarcely be found on one of our maps if it formed part of our country—and you will realize the fact that this spot has required millions upon millions of pounds to develop, and that many important discoveries have been made within the last few years after working and prospecting for eight hundred years.

It is not generally known or realized by men unacquainted with mining that to develop a limited portion of one lode, to provide mills, works, horses, etc., requires from $250,000 to a sum represented by the enormous outlay made upon such lodes as the Anaconda in Montana Territory.

Fears have been expressed in some quarters that the foreign investor may obtain too large a return for his money. Those who know the facts know that it is not so, for even where the mines are profitable (and certainly three out of four of them are not profitable), the net returns from the hazardous investments rarely exceed more than one-tenth of the gross yield of the mine, the other nine-tenths being employed in the payment of wages and the purchase of stores and supplies, all of which are supplied by works in the United States, and the general average of the return on capital, as I can prove by actual results obtained by English companies working in America, is less than the average local rate of interest in the United States, excluding the high rates of the Territories.

Then, again, all the first outlay for buildings, purchase of machinery, tramways, and other works benefits Eastern and Western manufacturers and workmen, for all the machinery and materials are obtained in America. Already since the passing of the alien act the English capital for investment in foreign mines has been directed largely to the Spanish-speaking part of America, to the British colonies and South Africa. In such cases the machinery and supplies are generally ordered in England.

An advantage which must have come under your notice frequently arises from the success of foreign capital when American Eastern capital will not at first invest in a new district, but the success of the foreign enterprise, which was at first deemed too risky by Eastern capitalists, has immediately led to the influx of American capital into the district.

The above points may be summarized as follows:

First. That the employment of foreign capital in mines has not led, and is not likely to lead, to any permanent holding of real estate.

Second. That the mining area occupied by foreign capital is extremely small and can never be larger.

Third. That foreign capital has frequently acted as a pioneer in new districts, and has led United States capital to follow.

Fourth. That foreign capital has assisted the poorer mine-owners at times, when but for such assistance the mines would be stopped.

Fifth. That its employment has given employment to many workmen and whole communities at the mines, and has benefited Eastern and Western American capitalists and workmen by giving orders for machinery and supplies.

Sixth. That notwithstanding the risky character of the business the remuneration of foreign capital has not averaged more than ordinary legal interest upon well-secured loans current in the United States.

With respect to the amendment of the act, your plan to simply exclude mining claims from its operation is by far the simplest and best, and the only one which will fully restore confidence abroad. But assuming that this is found to be impossible, and if a compromise has to be agreed to, I would suggest that the mine-owners have power to lease their properties to aliens for a period, say, not exceeding ninety-nine years, and I would also suggest that section 2 of the act should not operate against mining companies owning a limited number of acres of real estate. If the operation of that section was changed so as to apply to mining properties, then corporations formed in America for the purpose could purchase the mines and could lease to aliens or alien companies, and aliens could even acquire a right to purchase shares in the American company, owning the reserved rights of the owner. I mention ninety-nine years for leases because it is a well-known term.

The above suggestion of lease would not entirely remove the difficulty with alien investors, as they would not find quite the same security as if they were actual owners of the property; at the same time it would still allow business to be done to a considerable extent.

I have made no attempt to discuss the whole subject. I believe the operation of the present law is well understood and generally condemned in this country.

I have the honor to represent a Territory that is producing about $26,000,000 annually of silver, gold, and copper. In that Territory there are thousands of unworked and undeveloped mines awaiting the touch of European investments; investments which, on account of the accumulated capital and a low rate of interest at home, are satisfied with a smaller return than American capitalists are willing to receive.

The desire to see these properties opened up and developed, to see cities and towns grow and flourish, and thus furnish employment to many men and a maintenance to many families, has induced me to make these few observations in the hope that some of them may be of use to you when the subject is under discussion in the Senate.

Yours, truly,

JOS. K. TOOLE.

Hon. JOHN H. MITCHELL,
United States Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL. This proposed amendment of the present alien land act has been recommended, I believe, strongly by every present governor of the Territories, with one exception, and I think there can be no objection to it, as was stated by the chairman of the committee. I have an amendment, however, which I desire to offer that I think will not be objectionable to the chairman of the committee. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Add to the proposed amendment the following proviso:

Provided, however, That no Chinese person, or any company or corporation in which any Chinese person is interested, shall ever be permitted to hold or own any mining claim or other real estate in any of the Territories.

Mr. STEWART. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It seems to me, in the first place, as though that was an extraordinary amendment to offer to this bill. I have not a copy of the original law before me which the bill proposes to amend, but it seems to me to be an abandonment of the entire principle embodied in the law which it seeks to amend.

Mr. MITCHELL. To what amendment does the Senator refer?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I speak now of the bill itself, not particularly of the amendment of the Senator from Oregon who sits nearest me.

The intention of the law of last year was to restrict, I believe, the employment of foreign capital and the purchase of large tracts of the public domain, which should be used and controlled by foreigners and by foreign capital, to the exclusion of our own citizens who desire to settle upon the public land. The amendment to the law, offered by the Senator from Nevada, proposes, as I understand, to limit the prohibition to agricultural land, and to release the mineral lands from the operation of the law, and as a reason the Senator from Oregon has had read the argument made by—I do not know the name.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Delegate from Montana.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I am not conversant with the mineral land laws, but from the reading of that statement I understand they are very important. Yet it is well known that there are large tracts of land, including thousands and tens of thousands of acres in the public domain of the United States, which are practically called mineral lands, which are useless for agricultural purposes, and if they have any use whatever, and if they have any value whatever, it is the value given them by reason of the mineral wealth that is buried in them.

If this amendment should pass, foreign capitalists would come in and purchase large tracts of land which possess vast mineral wealth, and hold them away from the occupancy of citizens of the United States who desire to prospect and, if possible, discover this mineral wealth. As I said before, it is an abandonment of the principle we intended to embody in the law passed last year in respect to restricting the ownership of lands of the United States to actual settlers and citizens of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from New Jersey allow me to make an inquiry? I inquire whether the morning business is over at this time?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I do not know. The Senator from Nevada asked the Senate to consider a certain bill, and that bill is before the Senate, as I understand the parliamentary situation.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to say, if the Senator will pardon me, that I gave my consent on the assurance of the Senator from Nevada that it was a bill which would lead to no discussion. The statement was that it would take but a moment. Now, certainly the Senator from Nevada, whatever may be his desire, would not deem it proper to present a bill which involved a discussion occupying the whole time. I ask the Senator to let the bill go over. It will evidently lead to a long debate.

Mr. STEWART. I do not know that there is any morning business pressing now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar of resolutions coming over from a former day under the practice of the Senate is morning business.

Mr. HOAR. The assurance was given to the Senate by the honorable Senator from Nevada, on which, for one, I said I made no objection, that this was an undebatable measure. The phrase was that it would take but a moment. Now it turns out to be an important matter of legislation on which there is positive difference of opinion. The Senator, I hope, will not press that at this time. I should not have given my consent if I supposed the bill was one which would lead to debate.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the Senator understand that my amendment involves a discussion of the Chinese question?

Mr. HOAR. There will be such a discussion before we get through with it. That amendment proposes to prohibit the ownership of land by a certain nationality, different from all others. That involves a very important principle.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think there is anything connected with this bill which need involve any considerable time; and I do not think any Senator is to be held responsible for all that may come when he asks to take up a bill supposing it will pass speedily. That was my opinion. I did not anticipate the discussion which has arisen.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Now, I wish to say a few words. I am unalterably opposed to the amendment to the law offered by the Senator from Nevada. I am equally opposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon, which I understand the Senator from Nevada to accept as part of this measure, and I can not consent that the bill should pass without entering my protest, and giving the reasons therefor. I think this a measure that requires and will require a great deal of discussion before the Senate becomes satisfied to pass it. Therefore, I ask the Senator from Nevada to have it go over to a future time, because I am not ready this morning to debate it.

Mr. STEWART. I might be able to enlighten the Senator a little, if he would allow me a moment.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to say that I am a member of the Committee on Mines and Mining, and that I have not had any notice of any meeting of that committee up to this time, and therefore have not had my attention called to this bill, and from the remarks made by Senators in discussing the measure I feel it to be of such importance that I shall ask the courtesy of the Senator from Nevada that it be postponed until to-morrow anyhow, that I, as a member of the committee, may have an opportunity of considering its provisions.

Mr. STEWART. I will let it go over, but I wish to make one remark before I do so, in reply to the Senator from New Jersey with regard to the suggestion of a possibility of monopolizing mining lands.

The laws as they exist are well guarded against monopoly of mines. There are no communities that are more jealous of monopoly than the mining communities. The legislation that we have had heretofore, which I had the honor in great part to initiate some twenty years ago, is satisfactory, and under those laws foreigners can not enter, they can not acquire by prospecting. They can only acquire property in mines after the American citizen has found them, perfected his title, and got his patent. Then there is no prohibition in existing laws against an alien buying, or there was not until the law of last winter. There was no grievance in that respect. The law has been in existence for a good many years, and there was no grievance, but, on the contrary, it was exceedingly beneficial to the mining Territories, whereas there was a great grievance in the acquisition of large tracts of agricultural land in the new States and Territories by foreigners. Attention was called to that, and in passing the bill to remedy that Congress included another subject that had not been discussed or considered, and as to which there was no complaint, and as to which there was no reason for the legislation. Hence the desire that it should be removed.

I think if the Senator from New Jersey will examine existing laws he will see that there is sufficient protection against monopoly in the mining lands in those laws.

With these remarks I am willing that the bill may go over until to-morrow, and I give notice that I shall call it up in the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before this bill goes over I wish to make a single remark. There is, I believe, not a single State in the Union that has through its Legislature prohibited foreign capital from being invested in the development of mines within the State. This proposed amendment to the present alien land act simply proposes to place the Territories on an equal footing with the several States in this respect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been taken up by unanimous consent during the morning hour, resumes its place on the Calendar.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT KANSAS CITY, MO.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 281, Order of Business 67.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Senate bill 281, making an appropriation for the extension and enlargement of the United States custom-house at Kansas City, Mo.

Mr. HOAR. Let the bill be read for information, and the right to object be reserved until it appears whether the bill will lead to any serious debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length for information, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill and the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States post-office, district and circuit courts, custom-house, internal-revenue office, and other Government offices, at Kansas City, Mo. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed, for the site and building complete, the sum of $1,200,000; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, after the site for said building shall have been purchased, to cause plans and specifications of said building to be prepared, which said plans and specifications shall have reference to the probable increase of the population of said city and the consequent needs of the Government during the next twenty years, but shall not involve an expenditure exceeding $200,000 for the site, or in the erection and completion of said building exceeding the amount remaining of the total sum appropriated by this act after the site of said building shall have been paid for; and no plan shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the sum which remains after paying for the site of said building: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings, and adequately provided with light by an open space of not less than 50 feet, including streets and alleys, on all sides of said building; and that no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Missouri shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall be, and he is hereby, authorized, whenever consistent in his judgment with the public interest, to sell and convey the present property of the United States in said city now occupied as a public building, with the site thereof, the proceeds of the sale of said property to be covered into the Treasury, and to be not less than the cost of the same: Provided, however, That the said Secretary may, in lieu of purchasing an entirely new site as aforesaid, purchase additional necessary ground adjoining the site of the present public building in said city, and cause to be erected thereon said new building; but in the event that said present site shall be so utilized for said new building, the cost of said building, including said additional ground, shall not exceed $1,100,000.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $1,200,000 be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULLOM. Does the bill come from a committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is reported by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. VEST. I send a letter to the desk from the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, to be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will first inquire if there be objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The letter sent up by the Senator from Missouri will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, February 4, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of Senate bill No. 281, making an appropriation for the extension of the custom-house at Kansas City, Mo.

The building as at present constructed cost, exclusive of heating apparatus, $373,515.05, and from the rapid increase of the customs and postal service in the city named, considered in connection with the statement now on file in this office that the building as at present occupied does not furnish the space needed for the proper transaction of the postal service or the accommodation of the public, it would seem that the Government interest could be best served by enlarging the building by the purchase of additional land and the construction of an extension at a total cost not exceeding $1,000,000, as contemplated by the bill referred to.

Respectfully yours,

——— ———,
Supervising Architect.

Hon. LELAND STANFORD,
Chairman Committee Public Buildings and Grounds, United States Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the letter has no signature.

Mr. VEST. That is a copy. I have the original letter. I will supply it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BECK. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inform the Senator from Kentucky that the bill as read by the Secretary is an amendment offered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, being a substitute for the original bill, striking out all after the enacting clause.

Mr. BECK. But, as I heard the letter, the estimate was $1,000,000, and the committee reported $1,100,000. Is that right?

Mr. VEST. Yes; the bill appropriates $1,000,000 for the building.

Mr. BECK. I have never seen the Department which failed to ask enough. I should like to hear some reason for appropriating more than the estimate. The estimate is generally high enough.

Mr. VEST. The estimate of the Supervising Architect is simply for the building. One million one hundred thousand dollars includes the purchase of additional ground to enlarge the present building. I mislaid the original letter, but I shall have it here and furnish it.

I want to make one statement in this connection, an astonishing one even to myself. The reports of the Post-Office Department show that the mail handled at Kansas City is in excess of that at any office in the United States, not excepting the great city of New York. The distributing pouches for the registered matter at Kansas City are greater than at any other post-office in this country. In the last year there were 954,000 registered packages distributed at that office, and this enormous increase of business is going on from day to day. The packages have increased, according to the quarterly reports there, at the rate of 10,000. All matter for the southwestern country is mailed for distribution at that point. It is simply impossible to conduct the public business in the building now constructed. At the time that building was put up it was supposed Kansas City would have a population of 100,000 or 125,000 in the next ten years. It has now a population of 175,000, and is still increasing so rapidly that I have seen myself there a line half a mile long standing out in the street, crowding in to receive their mail matter. There is now in this city a committee from Kansas City for the purpose of obtaining additional accommodations. Under these circumstances the passage of this bill is an absolute necessity.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill for the erection of a public building at Kansas City, Mo.

ANIMALS IMPORTED FOR BREEDING PURPOSES.

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar Order 275, Senate bill 1564.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no desire whatever to antagonize the measure which the Senator proposes to call up, but I think we should make more satisfactory progress if we were to call the Calendar in order. I insist on the call of the Calendar.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the bill will not elicit debate. It is purely a relief bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I have a bill that I am extremely anxious to have passed, and I have refrained from asking its consideration out of order, though I am sure it will not lead to debate. I think, and I hope my friend will agree with me, that we shall get along more satisfactorily by calling the Calendar in order.

Mr. CULLOM (to Mr. BUTLER). Take up his bill and then yours.

Mr. SPOONER. This bill is recommended unanimously by the Committee on Finance and by the Secretary of the Treasury, and is of general importance, and I hope the Senate will not object.

Mr. BUTLER. It will be reached after a little while.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that after 1 o'clock the Senator from Wisconsin has the right to move, and the Senate the right to order, the abandonment of the rule as to the consideration of any particular bill on the Calendar.

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw the objection to the consideration of the bill called up by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1564) for the relief of importers of animals for breeding purposes in certain cases.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, in section 1, after the word "persons," at the end of line 4, to strike out "being citizens of the United States;" so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remit to any and all firms or persons who shall have, prior to the passage of this act, in good faith, and in compliance with the decisions and regulations of the Treasury Department, specially imported into the United States animals for breeding purposes, whether for the importer's own use or for sale, all duties, if any shall have accrued, upon such importations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HALE. I should like to have the bill read in full.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be again read at length.

The Secretary read the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUTLER. I was going to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up a bill on the Calendar, but my friends around me suggest that we proceed with the call of the Calendar, and I therefore yield for that purpose.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill 423, a bill in which the State of Colorado is particularly interested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 423) to enable the State of Colorado to select indemnity school lands.

Mr. TELLER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BECK. When the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] rose to make his motion, I rose at the same time with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] to object to anything except the Calendar, because we have all urgent bills there which we desire to call up, and the Senator from South Carolina gave way upon the statement from me that while I would not object to the bill of the Senator from Wisconsin, I would to his bill, or any other, and the suggestion that we go to the Calendar. I do not think it is fair now that another Senator should take the floor from the Senator from South Carolina upon an objection that I was about to make. We shall all get along better by going to the Calendar and proceeding regularly.

Mr. TELLER. I am quite willing to withdraw my request, if the Senator from South Carolina will make his and wait and take the chances of the Calendar.

Mr. BUTLER. I have done that.

Mr. TELLER. I know my bill will not be reached for several days. It is a bill that pertains to the selection of school lands. It is not a personal bill. It is a bill that has the approval of the Department to settle the question of school lands in Colorado, a bill that there can be no opposition or objection to, and it ought to pass soon, so as to get over to the other House and have the matter disposed of there at an early day, because otherwise the State is prevented from making its proper selections, and the Department has withheld from settlement a large amount of land because there has been an improper selection or a deficient selection. The bill will only take a few moments.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not like to object to the consideration of a bill when the Senator says it is urgent, but there are so many bills on the Calendar of that character that we waste time in the attempt to get consideration; whereas if we take the Calendar up and proceed in regular order for half an hour or an hour each morning we shall make more progress, and the bill will be reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That there may be no misunderstanding, the Chair will read the first paragraph of Rule VIII:

> At the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of bills and resolutions, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock.

Under that rule it is obviously in the power of any Senator to move and of a majority of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of any measure upon the Calendar.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no doubt about that, and never have had any doubt about it.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Will the President pardon me for saying, with the consent of the Senator from South Carolina, that one objection obstructs that motion to proceed to the consideration, and then it requires a motion after that to proceed notwithstanding the objection, and I have not had an opportunity this morning to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the suggestion of the Senator from Virginia is not sustained by the rule. The Chair would hold that if the Senate were to proceed to the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII, then the cases in order would each be subject to objection and to debate for five minutes, and once by each Senator. The Chair is clearly of opinion that a majority of the Senate has a right at any time, by its vote, to dispense with the provisions of Rule VIII entirely during the period that elapses between the completion of morning business and 2 o'clock.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. There is no difference between the Chair and myself except that a majority of the Senate has not yet the power the Chair has ascribed to it. I only ask that up to 2 o'clock we shall have the right to decide here as a Senate whether we can consider morning business. If that is so, one objection passes over any business until 2 o'clock. There is nothing that can interfere with the order of morning business according to my understanding, and the Chair himself has decided that up to 2 o'clock he will receive morning business.

Now, what is the use of my offering a resolution here that can only be considered in the morning hour, if during the morning hour it can not be considered? I have two resolutions pending here, and I need not say I believe that the Government of the United States is interested in those resolutions, and they have a right to be considered in this session up to 2 o'clock; and, on a single objection to any intervening business, it becomes the duty of the President of this body to put the question whether the Senate agrees to take it up or not. I say it is the duty of the Chair, of the President, to say whether the Senate agrees to such a motion; and when he shall announce what his judgment is, then it is my right and my privilege to ask the Senate whether it agrees with the judgment of the President of the body, and I have not been allowed that privilege, and I intend to insist until it is accorded to me, so that this body shall not be in the power of one man but shall proceed according to the judgment of men who come here claiming to be Senators elected by the legislative bodies of their States.

I have asked that resolutions which ought to be considered in the morning hour shall be considered. They are here, but their consideration is obstructed by a Calendar which concerns nobody but Senators. I insist on the rule which seems not to control the President of the body, and I ask that the morning hour be devoted to morning business up to 2 o'clock; and if I object to any proposition made here to interfere with it, I can appeal to the Senate in open session and before 2 o'clock to vote on my resolutions. I may find Senators enough to justify me in asking for a yea and nay vote. It seems to me that if we proceed regularly, according to the rules, we shall then have the largest liberty to debate any question, any proposition that may come up. Now we seem to be a Senate that is presided over and with no rules except those which suggest themselves to the President pro tempore of the body.

Mr. BUTLER. May I not appeal to the honorable Senator from Virginia to give way until this business shall be disposed of? I really am not conscious of what the question is before the Senate to which he is speaking. I do know that there are several matters of very grave public importance on the Calendar that ought to be considered by the Senate, and I trust the Senator will realize the reasonableness of my request and allow us to proceed with the business of the Senate.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not appreciate that interruption. I do not yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia declines to be interrupted. He will proceed.

Mr. HOAR. What is the pending question?

Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire what the question is before the Senate that the Senator is discussing?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill, the title of which has been read.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood the Senator from Colorado was quite willing to withdraw that request, for the present at least.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, how is it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. When interrupted by other Senators I was informed that I was entitled to the floor. I am not objecting to the bill proposed by the Senator from Colorado; I am not objecting to any proposition that is made by the Senator from South Carolina; I am objecting to the arbitrary ruling that prevents me from getting before the Senate resolutions that are to be considered in the morning hour up to 2 o'clock. I was here when the morning hour was held to extend only to 1 o'clock, and then resolutions were allowed to be considered. I ask now again to be considered as only objecting, for the reason that I want to bring before the Senate and to a vote of the Senate a proposition to consider the British treaty in open session, and no one man's ruling shall deprive me of that right; but a majority of the Senate can. Two-thirds are required to ratify a treaty, but it only requires one man to assert the right of bringing before the people of the country the consideration of it. I have asked that morning-hour business be brought up here; I have asked that the Senate rule shall be read; I have asked that the intelligent Presiding Officer shall read it. I hold, Mr. President, that you are less intelligent than the Chair has usually been in not complying with my request. I withdraw it, if it is necessary, now.

I ask now, Mr. President, an appeal, if it be a decision of the Chair. I did not understand the Chair to say that it was anything more than a mere opinion of the rule; but if the Chair will just say that it is his decision that we shall not proceed to the consideration of morning-hour business at this time, then I will take an appeal from that decision and get a vote of the Senate out of executive session. Do I understand the Chair to have decided that we may proceed to the consideration of any business outside of the morning hour if there is a single objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When the Senator from Virginia yields the floor, the Chair will put the question upon the motion submitted by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I am not inclined to yield, Mr. President.

Mr. HOAR. Is the motion of the Senator from Colorado debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I am not debating that. I am debating the decision of the Chair, if I can understand whether it was a decision or not.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Virginia allow me to make a single suggestion to him?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. In executive session; yes, sir. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. HARRIS. Under the rules——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee will suspend one moment.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I decline to yield to anything like a statement or proposition unless it is in executive session. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests to the spectators in the Chamber and in the galleries that the rules expressly forbid expressions of approbation or disapprobation, and the Chair is confident that a suggestion of this rule of the Senate will prevent any repetition of disorder in the Chamber. The Senator from Tennessee will proceed.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply desired to ask the Senator if he would allow me to suggest a single fact to him.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Only in executive session.

Mr. HARRIS. Do I understand the Senator, then, as declining to allow a suggestion?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Exactly.

Mr. HARRIS. This is a legislative session, and I understand the Senator as declining.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Yes, sir. Mr. President, the distinction is that in order to get a motion before the Senate, composed of seventy-six men, the consent of the Chair seems to be necessary.

I am now entirely willing to submit to the ruling of the Senate if they will just allow me the privilege of having a vote on the proposition standing before it as to whether Rule XXXVII shall be changed. It seems to me that that is a reasonable request, and it is all that I do request, but the time is always consumed up to the end of the morning hour in debates on bills that if one objection obtains must go over.

I was told, Mr. President, that one objection would carry my resolution over for one day. It has been now several days, and from the time it was objected to until this day we have heard arguments which, if given to the people of this country, would have convinced them as to its propriety.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee will state his point of order.

Mr. HARRIS. The motion of the Senator from Colorado is not debatable under the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so holds. The point of order having been raised, the Chair decides that under the rules the Senator from Virginia is not entitled to proceed further.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia will take his seat. Will the Senate agree to the motion submitted by the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BUTLER. I understood my friend from Colorado consented to give way in order that I might call up a bill.

Mr. TELLER. I give way that the Senator from South Carolina may make his motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized by the Chair.

PORTER ACADEMY IN CHARLESTON.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 21, being Senate bill No. 158.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 158) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the trustees of the Porter Academy certain property in the city of Charleston, S. C.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLORADO SCHOOL LANDS.

Mr. TELLER. I now move to take up Order of Business 108, being Senate bill No. 423.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. 423) to enable the State of Colorado to select indemnity school lands, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 7, after the word "vacant," to insert the word "agricultural;" in the same line, after the word "lands," to strike out "are" and insert "can;" in line 8, after the word "not," to insert "be," and in line 10, after the word "lands," to strike out "and in subdivisions of 40 acres or more;" so as to make the section read:

That all selections of land as school indemnity in the State of Colorado may be made in quantities equal to the loss of school lands or deficiency therein, and anywhere in the land district in which the bases of selection are situated: Provided, That if non-mineral vacant agricultural lands can not be obtained for such indemnity in the district in which the bases are situated, the selections may be made in any land district in the State containing such lands.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 2, after the word "sections," to insert the words "whether surveyed or unsurveyed;" so as to read:

SEC. 3. That said State shall be allowed to select lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections whether surveyed or unsurveyed, in patented private land claims and the Ute Indian reservations within said State of Colorado, comprehended in an act entitled "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederate bands of Ute Indians in Colorado, for the sale of their reservation in the said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same," approved June 15, 1880.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 4, after the word "the," to insert the words "patented private land claims and the," and in line 10, after the word "and," to insert the words "shall be made;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, without awaiting the extension of the public surveys, to ascertain and determine, by protraction or otherwise, the number of townships that will be included within the patented private land claims and the late Ute Indian reservation in the State of Colorado, and thereupon the State shall be entitled to select indemnity lands to the extent of two sections for each of said townships, for school purposes, in any land districts in the State: Provided, That said selections shall not be made within the boundaries of said reservation and shall be made in subdivisions of not less than 160 acres.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 5, after the word "entirety," to insert the words "of such smallest subdivisions;" in line 7, after the word "for," to strike out "the entire section" and insert "such legal;" so as to read:

SEC. 5. That upon a determination by the Interior Department that a portion of the smallest legal subdivision in a section numbered 16 or 36 in Colorado is mineral land, and that the United States was not divested of its title thereto in its entirety of such smallest subdivisions by the grant to the State for schools, the State shall be allowed to select indemnity for such legal subdivision under the act entitled "An act to enable the State of Colorado to take lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections found to be mineral lands, and for other purposes," approved April 2, 1884, and thereupon the subdivisions mentioned, or such portions of them as remain after segregation of the mineral lands or claims, shall be treated as other public lands of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. CALL. I should like to know if I understand this bill correctly to allow the selection from unsurveyed public lands.

Mr. TELLER. No; this bill may be said to be simply an administration bill for the office. It gives no new land to the State of Colorado. It enables the State to select the school lands that it is entitled to within the old Ute reservation without waiting till that reservation shall be surveyed, because the area of the reservation is well known and the number of acres due is fully determined by the Department without waiting for the survey. That is all.

Mr. CALL. But is the land now open to entry?

Mr. TELLER. Open to entry, but no school lands can be taken there. They must be taken outside.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHOCTAW COAL AND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1346, Order of Business 237.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1346) to authorize the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. There are some amendments reported from the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs will be acted upon in their order.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 9, after the word "point," to strike out "to be selected by said company;" in line 10, after the words "boundary line," to strike out "between" and insert "at;" in line 11, after the word "Cliff," to strike out "and the mouth of Island Bayou," and after the word "Arkansas," at the end of line 15, to insert—also, a branch line of railway to be constructed from the most suitable point on said main line for obtaining a feasible and practicable route in a northwesterly direction to the leased coal veins of said Choctaw Coal and Railway Company in Tobucksey County, Choctaw Nation.

So as to make the section read:

That the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Minnesota, be, and the same is hereby, invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, owning, equipping, operating, using, and maintaining a railway and telegraph and telephone line through the Indian Territory, beginning at a point on Red River (the southern boundary line), at the bluff known as Rocky Cliff, in the Indian Territory, and running thence by the most feasible and practicable route through the said Indian Territory to a point on the east boundary line, immediately contiguous to the west boundary line of Polk or Sevier Counties, in the State of Arkansas; also, a branch line of railway to be constructed from the most suitable point on said main line for obtaining a feasible and practicable route in a northwesterly direction to the leased coal veins of said Choctaw Coal and Railway Company, in Tobucksey County, Choctaw Nation; with the right to construct, use, and maintain such tracks, turnouts, branches, and sidings and extensions as said company may deem it in their interest to construct along and upon the right of way and depot grounds herein provided for.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 4, after the words "main line," to insert "and branch;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That said corporation is authorized to take and use for all purposes of railway, and for no other purpose, a right of way 100 feet in width through said Indian Territory for said main line and branch of the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 23, after the word

"tribe," to insert "shall be in lieu of the compensation that said nation or tribe;" so as to read:

Provided further, That the amount awarded or adjudged to be paid by said railway company for said dissenting nation or tribe shall be in lieu of the compensation that said nation or tribe would be entitled to receive under the foregoing provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 31, after the word "force," to strike out "among the different" and insert "between the United States and said;" so as to read:

The money paid to the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this act shall be apportioned by him, in accordance with the laws and treaties now in force, between the United States and said nations and tribes, according to the number of miles of railway that may be constructed by said railway company through their lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, line 3, after the word "act," to insert "and complete the same within said Territory within one year thereafter;" so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 9. That said railroad company shall build at least 100 miles of its railway in said Territory within three years after the passage of this act, and complete the same within said Territory within one year thereafter, or the rights herein granted shall be forfeited as to that portion not built; that said railroad company shall construct and maintain continually all road and highway crossings and necessary bridges over said railway wherever said roads and highways do now or may hereafter cross said railway's right of way, or may be by the proper authorities laid out across the same.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I move to insert in the proposed amendment, before the word "same," in line 3, the words "main line of the;" so as to read, "complete the main line of the same." This is a motion to amend the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting, before the word "same," in line 3, the words "main line of the."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LESLIE BASSETT.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 128, being the bill (S. 968) for the relief of Leslie Bassett.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I will object until the Chair announces that the morning hour has closed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length, subject to objection.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I object until the Chair announces that the business of the morning hour has closed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the reading of the bill proceed.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Then after that——

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The morning hour is not up yet.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Leslie Bassett, late postmaster at Richland, Iowa, $58.69, in full compensation for amount forwarded by him to designated depository in payment of balance due the United States for the third quarter of the year 1883, and which said amount, being inclosed in a registered letter, was stolen from the mail while in course of transmittal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no amendment, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a report?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. There is a report, a brief report, stating the facts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The SECRETARY. Report 833——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Perhaps the Senator from Iowa can state the case more briefly than it is stated in the report.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The report is very brief.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that this little matter may be disposed of. It will not take a minute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be informally laid aside for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the pending bill.

Mr. BLAIR. Reserving the right to object, if there is debate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, yes; there will be no debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I ask the Senator for Iowa to state the substance of the report.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The person for whose relief this bill has been drawn was a postmaster at Richland, Keokuk County, Iowa. Under the regulations of the Department, he was required to deposit his balance with the postmaster at Des Moines, Iowa. In pursuance of the requirements of the Department he put the amount of money in a registered package, placed it in the mail, and on its way to Des Moines it was stolen at one of the intermediate post-offices. He had complied in every respect with the regulations of the Department. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads reported a similar bill favorably during the last Congress, and the bill passed the Senate without any objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is a fair case.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills received from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

The bill (H. R. 1508) to relieve certain appointed or enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps from the charge of desertion was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY.

Mr. PALMER. I am directed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to ask that the committee have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate for the rest of the week.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate for the remainder of the week.

Mr. HARRIS. There will be no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that will be the order.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. PLUMB.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLAIR. Before the Senator from Florida proceeds I desire to say that so far as I can judge of the condition of the debate upon this question the bill may be disposed of by the Senate to-day, certainly if the session should be slightly prolonged, and in any event I shall ask the Senate to dispose of the bill to-morrow. I hope, however, it may be concluded to-night. I think it may be.

Mr. CALL Mr. President, the bill now before the Senate proposes to give national aid to the States for general education upon the condition that the money shall be applied to that purpose. It has been assailed with ability and eloquence by Senators on this side of the Chamber. If the evils which they have seen in the bill should be made manifest by argument, even now, although I have twice voted for the bill, I should abandon it and give my vote against it.

But with regard to the authority which they have cited for their opinion of its unconstitutionality, the authority of Mr. Jefferson and of Mr. Madison and of the early fathers of the Republic was given at a time when the Constitution had first been put into effect. One hundred years nearly have passed since those interpretations of the Constitution were made, and it is to be remarked that every one of those interpretations has been overridden by the practice of the Government and with the acquiescence of the people. Not only that, but those great statesmen themselves proposed by an amendment of the Constitution to vest in the Government of the United States the power to aid the States, not to interfere with their sovereign authority and power.

The principle of aid to the States by the National Government in the execution of their sovereign powers in the very respect of education as well as internal improvements was admitted by those great statesmen to be a necessity for the future progress of this people and this Government. It was advocated by them first, and most conspicuously by Mr. Jefferson, whose works I hold in my hand and which I will not detain the Senate by reading. Time and again he declared that the power of the appropriation of money to the purposes of internal improvement and of education, with the consent of the States, should by an amendment of the Constitution be given to the Federal Government.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], with that glamour which his eloquence throws over a subject, said in his address to the Senate that this bill, if properly entitled, should be called a monument to Alexander Hamilton as well as a bill to encourage mendicancy. If that be true, the first stone in that monument was placed by the hands of Thomas Jefferson, who himself declared that the power of appropriating money by the General Government to aid the cause of education was a most important and necessary power to be conferred upon the Government. What, then, shall be said of Mr. Jefferson's authority as against this bill? I desire to read a single sentence to show the appreciation which Mr. Jefferson had of the necessity of national aid to education. Said Mr. Jefferson to Governor Tyler, on the 26th of May, 1810, as will be found in the fifth volume of his works:

I have, indeed, two great measures at heart, without which no republic can maintain itself in strength: (1) that of general education, to enable every man to judge for himself what will secure or endanger his freedom.

This is only one of a great many declarations of Mr. Jefferson to the effect that the cause of education and of national aid to education in universities and seminaries was an object inseparable from the public good and the future progress and prosperity of this country. General Washington, in his first annual message, says, speaking to Congress:

Nor am I less persuaded that you will agree with me in opinion that there is nothing which can better deserve your patronage than the promotion of science and literature. Knowledge is in every country the surest basis of public happiness. Whether this desirable object will be best promoted by affording aid to seminaries already established, or by the institution of a national university, or by any other expedients, will be well worthy of a place in the deliberations of the legislature.

He renews this recommendation to Congress in his second annual message. To the same effect Mr. Madison said:

While it is evident that the means of diffusing and improving useful knowledge form so small a proportion of the expenditures for national purposes, I * * * will call your attention to the advantages of superadding to the means of education provided by the several States a seminary of learning instituted by the National Legislature within the limits of their exclusive jurisdiction.

Again in his seventh annual message Mr. Madison makes the same recommendation, and again in his eighth message; and then Mr. Adams follows.

Mr. President, what is there in the principle of national aid to the States in the execution of their sovereign powers as a principle—is there anything hurtful to the States? It has been said here to be a hydra-headed dragon, but the fact is that in the Constitution of the country the provision is contained that the National Government shall aid the States when called upon by the States in the execution of their sovereign power over their own people. The legislative power of a State can not be touched, because there can be no division of legislative sovereignty, but the Constitution expressly provides that there should be national aid to the States in the enforcement and execution of their laws, providing it be done only by the request and the consent of the States.

In what respect does this differ, and with what pretense of argument or reason can the learned Senators who have discussed this subject and alarmed the country in regard to it, undertake to say that the principle of national aid to the States, with their consent, can in any way interfere with the sovereign powers reserved to them? Have we forgotten the fact that the public domain of the United States, consisting of more than a thousand million acres of land, bought with the public money, with the tax money of the United States, to the extent of upwards of $300,000,000, has been appropriated from the very inception of the acquisition of that territory to the cause of education to the extent of nearly $100,000,000, and that every State has been the beneficiary?

With what reason can this measure be opposed in the face of this appropriation of nearly a hundred million dollars of the tax-money of the people of the United States to the cause of education given to the States for the last fifty years? If the Senator from Missouri applies his principle here, he must vote to restore to the United States the millions of dollars which have been appropriated by Congress to them for the purposes of education. How can he distinguish between the tax-money applied to education by the purchase of the public land and its donation, and the tax-money applied directly?

If you choose to extend the argument further, as the public lands are indebted upon an account in the Treasury of $300,000,000 and more of tax-money, shall it be said that this money, the result of taxes imposed upon the country, expended on the public lands, converted into money and paid to the States, that because the Treasury replaces this fund and appropriates it, it is no longer the proceeds of taxes? Must it be the same identical dollar that is paid for the land and paid out again? To-day this is money, the proceeds of the public lands. It is tax-money, for it represents $300,000,000 of taxes invested in public lands; and more than a hundred million dollars of the proceeds of the sales of public lands, which represents tax-money, has been paid into the Treasury of the United States. So there is no foundation for that distinction.

But what more than that? If the Senator from Missouri applies the principles of the Constitution as he interprets it, that no appropriation can be made except under the enumerated objects of appropriation in the Constitution (derived from its express powers) the Senators from Texas and Missouri can not sit upon this floor. Mr. Jefferson, in the early days of the Republic, appropriated the public money, as he himself declared, without authority in the Constitution, under the sanction of Congress, to the purchase of the Territory of Louisiana. We have gone on making such appropriations. We have bought Alaska; we have paid a money consideration for the concessions of portions of the Mexican Republic as the result of war. Under these principles of interpretation of the Constitution all these purchases are manifestly void, if, as my learned friend the Senator from Maryland says, there is no place for necessity in the doctrines of the Constitution, and that we can not, because a law is necessary, depart from its powers. These illustrations will serve to show that there is no foundation for that argument.

The Senator from Missouri says that he will never give another vote in this Chamber in violation of those principles of interpretation which he has declared originated with Mr. Jefferson, but which Mr. Jefferson himself abandoned. The Senator from Missouri knows full well that Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Madison declared that every dollar of money appropriated by Congress to internal improvements was appropriated in violation of the Constitution, because there was no enumerated power to do it. Yet the Senator from Missouri votes every session, and will vote at this session, for the appropriation of money to the improvement of the Mississippi River, and no more strenuous advocate for that appropriation of money can be found upon this floor than himself.

The power to appropriate money for internal improvements far exceeds the power claimed in this bill. It is a power which invades the States without their consent, as was pointed out by Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Madison. It is the exercise of a direct power upon the people, while that proposed here is a power of appropriating money to aid the States with their consent, to be expended in their discretion for the promotion of general education among their people.

The difficulty with my friends who have opposed this bill so earnestly is not that there is no warrant for it in the Constitution. We have established that proposition by the experience of a hundred years, by the acquiescence in the purchase of Louisiana, by the further payment of the tax-money of this country for the purchase of large portions of Mexican territory ceded to us, and by the annexation of the State of Texas, which was without authority, under the enumerated powers of the Constitution. We still cling, and I shall always cling, to Mr. Jefferson's great principle of interpretation, that the sovereign powers of the State shall not be touched with the hand of Federal power; but we have the practice and experience of this country for a hundred years and half a hundred million dollars appropriated by the National Government in aid of education in the States in the form of public land; and yet after this long experience we are told that it has to be abandoned.

Well, what more than that? The Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON], who made an eloquent and forcible speech, will vote at this very session of Congress, in violation of every principle of constitutional interpretation which he has urged upon us, for the appropriation of money to the construction of a canal which is now projected, and which his colleague has frequently introduced here with very great urgency. Not only that, but all Senators will vote for the appropriation of 5 per cent. in money out of the Treasury of the United States to the States, upon condition, restraining their sovereign power and discretion, that it shall be appropriated to certain specified purposes, either of education or internal improvement.

The bill known as the Blair bill, whatever credit the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire may have for it, is nothing more than the same principle and the same public policy recommended by Washington, by Madison, by Jefferson, as to its provisions and its effect upon general education, except that they proposed it should be done by an amendment to the Constitution. The bill is nothing more than, and can not be distinguished by any argument from, the 5 per cent. and the 2 and 3 per cent. bills for the proceeds of the sales of the public lands paid into the Treasury of the United States, made a part of the public money, and paid out again from time to time as they may accrue. It is national aid to the States, national aid to the States in money, national aid to the States upon condition, national aid to the States upon condition of education or internal improvements.

The difficulty with my friends is that they have not only placed themselves back to the first days of the Constitution in their interpretation of it; they not only ignore the hundred years of practical application of the powers of the Constitution to the necessities of the country and its progress, but they place themselves back to a time before this age of industrial power, of industrial success, made a new and a changed world. They ignore the necessities which now demand new conditions and new treatment of the great mass of the people and of the economies upon which their very existence depends. They seem to consider in their arguments here that there is nothing in these modern days to do but to sustain great armies and expend vast sums of money for the resistance of organized force.

My learned friends who have argued this question are willing to expend an indefinite amount of tax-money for the maintenance of an army and a navy. They ignore the fact that the great industrial necessities of the day are such that a greater power than organized armies attacks the life of the State and of the people; that want, disease, and famine are evils to be guarded against; that everywhere education is the great organized power even of the armies, even of destruction; but that the great object of this age is the preservation of human life, the development of human faculties, the improvement of mankind. This it was that made Thomas Jefferson the great apostle of liberty in the hearts of the people of this country, and this it is, and not distinctions of a high or a low tariff, but his sympathies with the great masses which made him and the Democratic party which he founded so near and dear to the hearts of the people. It is the principle of human sympathy, of human progress, of institutions which give power to the people as a mass, not mere technical and arbitrary declarations of constitutional interpretations which he abandoned in practice as the Chief Magistrate of the Republic.

It is true we have a great system of government, the corner stone of which is the power of the States, the sovereignty of the States in those respects in which power is reserved to them, and the sovereignty of the National Government only in those respects which have been conceded to it. But among these powers it has been found, as Mr. Monroe so wisely declared, a practical necessity that the power of aiding the States, with their consent, by the appropriation of the public money, whether it be of lands or of tax-money, has been found to be not only a necessity but a most beneficent principle of government. Why, then, should it cease to-day? Why, then, shall that which has never before created an invasion of the sovereignty of the States be held now to be a source of great danger? Why shall it be conceived that this great American people will not rise in indignation and rebuke any Secretary of the Interior or any administration that will propose to fetter the sovereign power of a State to direct the education of its own people?

Mr. President, I have no apprehensions upon that subject. I have no fears that this people will permit a great centralized government to assume the control of their domestic relations and prescribe an iron rule for the habits and the lives and the thoughts of the people of the States. There is too great a distrust among the people of this country of any interference by a centralized power with their own control and regulation of their own domestic affairs. They do not want and will not allow any power to be vested in a majority of Congress elected perhaps from one section of the Republic to say when they shall be married and when they shall cease to be married, or to regulate and control the relation of parent and child, or the employer and the employé.

I am in favor of the passage of this bill, not only because it has the sanction of the universal practice of this Government for a hundred years; not only because it has the sanction of the advice and the example of every one of the Presidents, for that logic is too shadowy and too uncertain which undertakes to show that Madison, Washington, Adams, Jefferson, and all those great statesmen should have declared that general education of the people of the States was a necessity for the future progress and welfare of this Government and people, and a proper object of national aid, but that it must be confined to the appropriation of money derived from the sales of public lands. It is equally important, whether it be sustained or not sustained, whether it be tax-money or land-money that shall be appropriated to aid the States in its accomplishment.

My friend from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] finds authority in the enumerated powers of the Constitution to vote for appropriations to stop the progress of disease. He considers that to be commerce and regulating commerce, I suppose; but I can see no foundation for an argument of that sort either in substance or in technical correctness. The fathers, whose interpretation upon this subject we are required to take, declared that the power to regulate commerce contained no provisions of the kind.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Florida yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I beg to say to him what I have had occasion to say on more occasions than one upon this floor, that all I have ever asked in any bill I have offered or supported has been that Congress shall so regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States as to strip it of contagion. If the Senator can find ground to base a doubt upon as to Congress possessing that power, I should be glad for him to suggest it. That is all I have ever favored.

Mr. CALL. I have not the slightest doubt of the power of Congress, but I have very great doubt and, I may say, I have almost a certain knowledge that the foundation upon which the Senator places it is one of sand, and can not stand.

Mr. HARRIS. I beg, before the Senator proceeds, if he will allow me, to say that if Congress has not the power to make the appropriations to which he has referred, and which I have voted for, under the authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, it has no such power, and he can not find a clause in the Constitution from which such power can be derived.

Mr. CALL. That is the fault of the Senator's argument. That is the interpretation which was sought to be put, but where did Mr. Jefferson find the clause in the Constitution which authorized him to purchase Louisiana? Will the Senator answer me that question? The power to appropriate money, not interfering with the sovereignty of the States, to aid them in the execution of the laws for the prevention of the spread of contagion, rests alone upon the power to raise money by taxes, excises, and imposts, and to appropriate it. However you may argue as to the purposes for which it was intended, that is a power conferred upon Congress, and a power the exercise of which rests in them and them alone. Justify as you may, condemn as you may, the exercise of that power, the Constitution vests the power in the people and their representatives, and Mr. Jefferson invoked it, saying, "It was never intended; there is no enumeration here by which I can purchase Louisiana; but the public necessity requires it, and you have the power, and I justify myself before the people for its exercise. You may do it either by an amendment of the Constitution or otherwise."

The power to make appropriations for the prevention of the introduction of disease into this country is doubtless an expedient and a just power. It may be held, as Mr. Jefferson said, that the power to establish post-offices and post-roads was to include everything. He said it did not properly include the power to make a new road; that Congress has power to establish a post-road where one had already been declared, but where no road existed, where no highway had been marked out by State authority, it had no power to establish it. That was manifestly in the legal interpretation and by the common consent of the country a construction too narrow. Now Congress not only establishes roads which had not been designated, makes the roads, but has even made great railroads for the purposes of mail facilities and military transportation as a necessity.

I take it that the great principle of this Government is the sovereignty of the States as a matter of power over the subjects which are reserved to them, and the sovereignty of the National Government as a matter of power over those which are confided to it; that there can be no collision, and one can not touch the other; but that outside of that it is the very force and life of the Constitution that the National Government shall give aid to the States where it does not interfere with the exercise of their sovereignty; and that wherever the States consent to the use of money, accepting a donation to be used in their discretion, such an appropriation is not only authorized by the Constitution, but is in conformity with its very spirit and life and purpose.

But, Mr. President, let us go further. We are informed in this great organic law that to provide for the common defense is an object for which taxes shall be imposed. That is said to be a blanket clause. Suppose we admit the construction that it is intended to provide for the common defense and the general welfare according to the enumerated powers and not outside of them, the general welfare of the States and the National Government under the enumerated powers comprehends the whole subject under the latitudinous construction which you give to the regulation of commerce and the establishment of post-offices and post-roads. There is no practical distinction. My friend from Tennessee can find the power to stop contagion, internal and external, under the power to regulate commerce.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will allow me, his friend from Tennessee can find power to regulate commerce so as to strip it of contagion.

Mr. CALL. I will use my friend's language, but that does not vary the proposition a particle. The Senator from Tennessee can find power to regulate commerce so as to strip it of contagion, foreign and domestic, but there is no enumeration in the Constitution of stripping commerce of contagion.

Mr. HARRIS. There is power to regulate commerce, and I propose to regulate it.

Mr. CALL. Contagion is not commerce, and never was. Small-pox and cholera are not commerce.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One moment. The debate will proceed more in order if the Senator will wait until he is recognized.

Mr. HARRIS. I will wait until the Chair has ascertained from the Senator from Florida whether he consents to be interrupted or not.

Mr. CALL. Oh, yes; I consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CALL. Certainly I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply desired to say that I hoped my friend would not quibble upon words. All that I have ever favored, as I have heretofore explained, in respect of the matter to which he refers, is that in regulating commerce it shall be so regulated as to strip it of contagion. That is all I care to say.

Mr. CALL. If my friend can demonstrate that small-pox, or cholera, or infection of any kind is commerce, then under the constitutional provision to regulate commerce, if you are going to limit it to its enumerated power, of course you can regulate it, commerce being contagion, and commerce being small-pox and infection.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator if contagion can not be carried from one country to another, and from one State to another by all the instrumentalities of commerce?

Mr. CALL. There is no doubt of that.

Mr. HARRIS. Can it not be carried by a person?

Mr. CALL. Oh, yes.

Mr. HARRIS. Can it not be carried by a bale of goods?

Mr. CALL. Oh, yes.

Mr. HARRIS. Can it not be carried by almost every article that is transported on the thoroughfares over which commerce passes?

Mr. CALL. Yes; there is no doubt of that.

Mr. HARRIS. It is that commerce which the bills I have advocated have proposed to regulate, and to regulate in the interest of the sanitation and good health of this country.

Mr. CALL. They are all good bills, but the argument is not good. The distinction is unreal. Commerce, as I said before, though accompanied by contagion and accompanied by people and accompanied by ships and vessels, is not the thing itself. Regulating contagion and infection is not regulating commerce. Primarily, it may be connected with it, and connected with it consequentially, but it is not the thing itself, and if you are going to establish the principle of enumeration and strict interpretation, then the police powers of the State would have admitted and established and recognized jurisdiction over the subject, and would be the only power to which you could look.

It was held by the eminent statesmen whose opinions have been urged with so much eloquence, so much grace, and so much force by my friend from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], my friend from Missouri [Mr. VEST], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON], and the Senators from Texas—it was held by all the great statesmen in the beginning, except Alexander Hamilton, that there was no power in the Government to regulate commerce by establishing works of internal improvement. Said Mr. Jefferson in the work before me, "Light-houses by custom and sanction may be regarded as within the constitutional power, but not piers in the Delaware River." So strict was the interpretation of the language in that school of statesmen, whom I acknowledge to be the greatest statesmen that perhaps the centuries have produced, that Thomas Jefferson, with his wide sympathy for mankind everywhere, with his devotion to everything that elevated humanity, with his belief and his great agency in vesting power in the people as a body and without limitation, and Madison, his successor, and all recognized the necessity of this power in the Government, and held that it should be supplied by a constitutional amendment; but as to its necessity there was not one dissenting opinion.

Mr. Madison held upon the subject of the tariff, in the opinion which I have before me at length, that the power to levy imposts carried with it the power to levy even a prohibitory duty, not for the purpose of raising revenue, but for the purpose of preventing revenue, not its direct purpose, but with that effect for another purpose; but that there was no power to give bounties; and yet under that system bounties of hundreds and thousands of millions of dollars are paid under that construction of the Constitution.

While a follower of Thomas Jefferson, I am not among those who do not concede to his great rival, Alexander Hamilton, wonderful powers and the most pure devotion to the public good. The difference between him and Mr. Jefferson was then as it is now between our Republican friends and the Democratic people. He sought the happiness of the people through a government of privilege, through a government of property distinctions, while Thomas Jefferson relied upon the sentiment, the good sense, and the sympathy of the whole body of the people.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Florida will allow me to observe, in connection with what he is saying, that whatever criticism may be made on any of the desires of Alexander Hamilton before the constitutional convention met, or before it agreed upon its plan, it is to him and to no other man that the adoption of the present Constitution of the United States is due. If you subtract from the forces which were in favor of the adoption of the Constitution by the nine States which by their ratification put it in force the opinions and the arguments of Alexander Hamilton, the Constitution would never have gone into effect; and that is a thing which can be said of no other man whatever.

Mr. CALL. That is a question to which there are two sides. I freely concede the very great influence Mr. Hamilton had in the adoption of the Constitution. I am not among those who disparage his wonderful merits or the purity of his patriotism; but it will not be forgotten that Mr. Madison, and Mr. Jefferson, although he was in France at the time of its formation, were both factors, and important factors, and what particular degree of influence they had can not well now be estimated, except that from that time thereafter they came to represent the great body of feeling and opinion and thought and sympathy of the American people.

I advocate the passage of this bill and have no fear. The bill is sufficiently Democratic, and it is sustained by Democratic precedents from the beginning of Mr. Jefferson's first year until now. The principle of national aid to the States, to be used in their discretion, creates no fears with me. I see in it the Constitution of the country, itself made for the purpose of giving national aid to the States in the exercise of their sovereign powers, with an express provision that, as to the executive branch of their government, the enforcement of the laws which in their sovereign discretion is confided to them, the Government of the United States should be bound upon their request to aid them in the preservation of the public peace and the execution of their laws.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Florida allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. Perhaps it may be my fault—I have not heard all the remarks of the Senator—but I should be glad to know from what clause of the Constitution he derives the power to levy and collect taxes and appropriate money to the objects and purposes of this bill.

Mr. CALL. I derive it from this proposition: You do not deny that the Constitution gives Congress the power to appropriate public money, do you?

Mr. HARRIS. To any of the legitimate purposes confided to Congress by the Constitution, I do not. To any other purposes I utterly deny the power.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from Tennessee tell me who are the judges of the legitimate powers confided to Congress by the Constitution?

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Florida either has the power delegated to Congress by some clause of the Constitution, or he has not; and it would be a little more direct and a little more in accordance with frank dealing to name the clause that grants the power to Congress to levy and collect these moneys and appropriate them to the objects of the bill than the by-play the Senator seems inclined to resort to.

Mr. CALL. The by-play of my friend from Tennessee can not make my suggestion by-play. The question is whether the by-play is not with him. I ask the Senator from Tennessee to tell me the clause of the Constitution under which he finds the power to vote money for internal improvements.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator adopts a method in this discussion somewhat peculiar, it is said, to New England. I do not know whether it is or not, but instead of answering a question so plain that no human being can misunderstand it, he asks another wholly foreign to the subject.

Mr. CALL. That does not answer my question.

Mr. HARRIS. Nor have you answered mine, which was asked first.

Mr. CALL. Now I will answer it.

Mr. HARRIS. But I may say that it would be a little difficult for the Senator to find where I have voted for the internal improvements to which he refers.

Mr. CALL. I thought I had already answered the Senator's question in the course of my remarks. Different schools of opinion arose in this country immediately after the Revolutionary war and the adoption of the Constitution. One of those schools of opinion held that this clause of the Constitution, "The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States" was limited to the specially enumerated powers thereafter contained in the Constitution. Another school held that it was not so limited; that Congress had a discretion not only by virtue of the fact that the power as power was given to them; that power is one thing, and discretion another. Another school held that the power to appropriate money being given to the representatives of the people and the States, the discretion of necessity was with them to exercise this power, and that they were not confined by the mere technical declaration and language of the enumerated powers.

They held that they were the depositaries of power to be exercised for the common defense and the general welfare of the country. Mr. Jefferson denied that interpretation; Mr. Madison denied that interpretation. They could find no power to regulate commerce by the construction of piers in rivers, the cleaning out of channels, the construction of canals. They could find no power to create avenues of commerce by internal improvements. They could find no power to appropriate money to purchase foreign territory.

Mr. REAGAN. May I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CALL. I do.

Mr. REAGAN. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that Mr. Madison not only approved but signed bills appropriating money for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

Mr. CALL. Undoubtedly so; and it was the first tribute paid by Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Madison to the theory of interpretation which Mr. Monroe affirmed to be the only reasonable and possible one to prevent a violation of the Constitution. Mr. Calhoun came here with all his views of strict construction. His view was read the other day by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], and, without reading it at length, I will read an extract for the benefit of my friend from Tennessee, who has been always the humble and the profoundly able defender of Mr. Calhoun and his doctrines, and ask of him now to come with us in support of the principle of national aid to the States.

We do not care much about this little matter of school-books of one kind or another. We have no fears that any Secretary of the Interior or any President will dare to defy the great constitutional principle of interpretation that the States alone have power over the education of their children; but it is national aid. Now, let us see what Mr. Calhoun said about the doctrine of regulating commerce by preventing infection. He said:

The first power delegated to Congress is comprised in these words: "To lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States." First, the power is given to lay taxes; next, the objects are enumerated to which the money accruing from the exercise of this power may be applied—namely, to pay the debts, provide for the defense, and promote the general welfare; and last, the rule for laying the taxes is prescribed—to wit, that all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform. If the framers had intended to limit the use of the money to the powers afterwards enumerated and defined, nothing could have been more easy than to have expressed it plainly. I know it is the opinion of some that the words, "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare," which I have just cited, were not intended to be referred to the power of laying taxes contained in the first part of the section, but that they are to be understood as distinct and independent powers granted in general terms, and are qualified by a more detailed enumeration of powers in the subsequent part of the Constitution.

If such were in fact the meaning intended, surely nothing can be conceived more bungling and awkward than the manner in which the framers have communicated their intention. If it were their intention to make a summary of the powers of Congress in general terms, which were afterwards to be particularly defined and enumerated, they should have told us so plainly and distinctly; and if the words "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare," were intended for this summary, they should have headed the list of our powers, and it should have been stated, that to effect these general objects the following specific powers were granted.

* * * * * * *

Forced, however, as such a construction was, I might admit it, and urge that the words do constitute a part of the enumerated powers. The Constitution gives to Congress the power to establish post-offices and post-roads. I know the interpretation usually given to these words confines our powers to that of designating only the post-roads, but it seems to me that the word "establish" comprehends something more.

But suppose the Constitution to be silent—

Said Mr. Calhoun, and I call the attention of my friend from Tennessee, Mr. Calhoun's follower, the follower of a great, and bright, and shining light in learning and in statesmanship, to this language—

But suppose the Constitution to be silent, why should we be confined in the application of moneys to the enumerated powers? There is nothing in the reason of the thing that I can perceive why it should be so restricted; and the habitual and uniform practice of the Government coincides with my opinion. Our laws are full of instances of money appropriated without any reference to the enumerated powers.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. CALL. Certainly I yield.

Mr. REAGAN. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the commentators upon the Constitution of the United States, from Mr. Justice Story down, and all the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States that bear on the subject distinctly negative the proposition laid down there as coming from Mr. Calhoun, and affirm that the "general-welfare" clause is not a delegation of power.

Mr. CALL. Well, Mr. President, let us pass from that. If they do so declare, they declare it in the face of the universal practice of this Government to the contrary, and of the votes of every Senator here, because neither can the Supreme Court nor the commentators upon the Constitution make a difference, nor is it in the power of human intellect to make a difference, where none exists. The vote for the 5 per cent. proceeds of sales of public lands, after it has been put into the Treasury of the United States, and become a part of the public money which every Senator here votes for in every appropriation bill, or at least consents to its continuance, is in every respect, without the difference of a shade or a hair, the principle of aid to the States from the Treasury of the United States, and aid for education.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Texas asserted that his proposition had been established by decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and I understood his proposition to be that the Supreme Court of the United States had settled that in the taxing clause of the Constitution, which has been read by the Senator from Florida, to lay and collect taxes, to pay the debts, provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States, the words "to provide for the common defense and general welfare" did not convey to Congress a substantive and independent power. That is true, but that is not the proposition involved in this bill. The proposition is that those words give to Congress the power to appropriate money to the common defense and general welfare, but that Congress is not confined in determining what the general welfare is to the subsequently enumerated powers in the Constitution.

That is the proposition on which we who support this bill stand, and I affirm that no decision of the Supreme Court of the United States can be found which denies that proposition or limits it in any respect whatever. On the contrary, as stated by the Senator from Florida, the uniform construction of that clause of the Constitution from a very early period down to the present time is that whilst Congress can not legislate so as to acquire jurisdiction over a matter under those words, it may legislate by appropriating money to objects outside of the enumerated clauses of the Constitution.

That is the proposition upon which we stand, and not upon the proposition discarded not only by the Supreme Court but by all constitutional lawyers and constitutional writers, that the words "to provide for the general welfare" convey to Congress the right to invade the sovereignty of the States as to any particular matter reserved to them under the Constitution and assume jurisdiction over them.

The power to appropriate without the power of jurisdiction is a firmly settled principle in the constitutional jurisprudence of this country. It received the sanction of Mr. Calhoun in the language which the Senator from Florida has read. It received the sanction of Mr. Monroe, and it receives the sanction of Congress at every session by the appropriation of money out of the Treasury of the United States to purposes conceded to be outside of the jurisdiction of Congress.

Where is your Agricultural Department to-day? Where is your authority under the Constitution of the United States to establish an Agricultural Department? Where is your jurisdiction over agriculture? Where is your authority to employ men to make a geological survey of the States of this Union? Where is your authority to have books published and employ men to write them, as to the ethnology of this country? Where is your authority to do a thousand things which we do here every day? Look at your last appropriation bill, and you will find it chock full of appropriations giving money to purposes outside of the enumerated powers in the Constitution, all done under the construction of the Constitution read by the Senator from Florida, sanctioned by Mr. Calhoun, and by the uniform practice of this country from the beginning down to the present time.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the Senator from Florida allow me to reply to the Senator from Mississippi?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. I always listen with very profound interest to any views of Mr. Calhoun. No one admires his character more than myself, but I do not think it a friendly act to his memory to quote that part of his writings in his early career, in face of the utterances of the later and better matured part of his life. I do not know that he ever distinctly repudiated the language and the construction of that clause of the Constitution contained in that paper, but his whole after life was a general repudiation of that doctrine.

But that is not what I rose to say. I wish to quote the language of Mr. Justice Story in commenting upon this particular paragraph of the Constitution. Mr. Justice Story said, in section 906 of his Commentaries on the Constitution:

The Constitution was, from its origin, contemplated to be the frame of a national government, of special and enumerated powers, and not of general and unlimited powers.

He says further, in the same paragraph, that—

If the clause "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States" is construed to be an independent and substantive grant of power, it not only renders wholly unimportant and unnecessary the subsequent enumeration of specific powers, but it plainly extends far beyond them and creates a general authority in Congress to pass all laws which they may deem for the common defense and general welfare. Under such circumstances the Constitution would practically create an unlimited national government. The enumerated powers would tend to embarrass and confuse, since they would only give rise to doubts as to the true extent of the general power or of the enumerated powers.

And in secton 907 of the same work he said:

For what purpose could the enumeration of particular powers be inserted, if these and all others were meant to be included in the preceding general power? Nothing is more natural or common than first to use a general phrase and then to qualify it by a recital of particulars. But the idea of an enumeration of particulars which neither explain nor qualify the general meaning, and can have no other effect than to confound and mislead, is an absurdity which no one ought to charge on the enlightened authors of the Constitution. It would be to charge them either with premeditated folly or premeditated fraud.

If we are to be asked by the Senator from Mississippi to interpret the Constitution by the acts of Congress, I desire to say that that is one thing. If we are to judge our powers by the Constitution, that is another thing. I do not set up the acts of Congress as a standard for judgment as to the interpretation of the Constitution, for we all know that in many instances, drawn perhaps by our ideas of necessity, by our sympathies, or by some unusual cause, we have passed acts not strictly authorized by the Constitution; but this great act proposed, invading the States and taking the control of their schools, is one so paramount, so important, that we ought to hesitate and not invoke past violations of the Constitution as a reason for this great violation of it.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Texas has read a scrap from Judge Story——

Mr. REAGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will say what he knows: that the Supreme Court in all its decisions bearing on the question has affirmed that doctrine.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Texas reads from Judge Story to prove a proposition which nobody denies. I admit that to be law, and, so far as I know, no man on this side of the Chamber disputes it. We all agree, as Judge Story announces, that under these words in the taxing clause of the Constitution no substantive and independent power was granted to Congress. But if the Senator in studying Judge Story had gone a little further and learned all that Judge Story said upon that subject, he would have found that whilst Judge Story announces the doctrine as the Senator has read it, Judge Story expressly says that it is no impeachment of that doctrine, but in strict conformity to it, to hold as Mr. Monroe held and as Mr. Calhoun held, that the power of appropriating money vested by the taxing clause of the Constitution in Congress was outside of the enumerated powers. If the Senator denies that proposition as having the sanction of Judge Story, while I have not the book here, I will undertake to prove it, and to show that Judge Story distinctly and unequivocally announces the doctrine that the power to appropriate money is not confined to the powers enumerated in the Constitution.

Mr. REAGAN. I have not known of such a doctrine propounded by Judge Story.

Mr. GEORGE. Well, sir, I will bring it here and show it to you.

Mr. CALL. I do not think the doctrine of the Senator from Texas has a right to consideration here, because he will vote at this session and has voted every year in denial of it, and every other man who has been in Congress has done so. He votes for internal improvements, and he knows that the great statesmen, Madison and Calhoun, denied entirely the power as it is now exercised; and he knows as a man of reason that as compared to the power to make an appropriation, to invade the domain of a State, take possession of its rivers, construct roads without the consent of the State, as Mr. Calhoun, Mr. Madison, and all those statesmen pointed out, is essentially different from the power in this bill, which gives the money to the States upon condition of their acceptance of it. No man of reason can deny those propositions. You invade every day, under powers which your own interpretation of the Constitution and your own principles declare do not exist, the sovereign power of the State, while this bill does not do it and does not propose to do it, but asks the consent of the States.

Mr. REAGAN. If the Senator will allow me, there is a very broad distinction between the purposes of this bill and the appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

Mr. CALL. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. REAGAN. That is done under the clause of the Constitution which authorizes Congress to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations. Besides that there is no clause of the Constitution which covers education in the States. The maritime jurisdiction covers the navigable waters within the States, which goes in connection with the power to regulate commerce to make up the authority which justifies the wise policy of appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator from Texas right there if Congress has not absolute jurisdiction over all navigable streams?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir; the maritime power extends to all.

Mr. BUTLER. And no other?

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from South Carolina state when that doctrine was recognized to be correct?

Mr. BUTLER. I can state it satisfactorily to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Only one Senator can occupy the floor at a time. The Senator from Florida is entitled to the floor, and it can not be taken from him without his consent. Will the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CALL. I prefer to conclude my remarks. Let us take these learned critics of the Constitution on their own ground. My friend from Texas has been the apostle and the advocate of a bill which has had its origin in the Congress of the United States at his hands, a bill to regulate interstate commerce over railroads and not canals, not rivers, not natural highways. Where do you get the power to invade a State, not upon a navigable river, but upon a railroad or a dirt road?

Mr. REAGAN. The power comes from the clause of the Constitution which empowers Congress to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations, not to regulate the railroads, but to regulate commerce, not within a State, for that belongs to each State, but only to regulate the commerce which passes from State to State and from and to foreign countries.

Mr. CALL. I insist that that is not correct. The educational bill does not touch a State as an exercise of power. It does not purport to be an interference with the State. It says it is not. It says the State is to agree to its operation. It says the State is to accept the donation, and without its consent it can not be affected. It is an aid to the State to exercise its power, while the Senator finds, under the shadowy construction which Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Madison and Mr. Jefferson repudiated entirely under the power to regulate commerce, the right to enter the sovereign domain of the State and legislate as power, which this bill does not do. It proposes to regulate commerce by prescribing as an exercise of Federal power the rules that shall govern and limit contracts for transportation, not in places of maritime jurisdiction, but on the highways and roads of a State.

But, Mr. President, I want to say something more. If the power to regulate commerce covers contagion and infection, why does it not cover education? Are not ideas commerce communicable? Is not thought and its development a matter of commerce? And if you can get in these shadowy and insubstantial definitions the power to regulate commerce by the exercise of sovereign power within and over the contracts in a State, then why can we not apply it to education? If you are going to stretch the enumerated powers to include everything you want, why not include education? That is not the statesmanly view which Mr. Calhoun took and which he never withdrew. It is not the view which the necessities of this country and the daily practice of every Senator here, including my friend from Tennessee, require them to pursue and adopt.

This is too great a Constitution to rest upon such shadowy ideas. The common defense of the country does not mean alone organized bodies of men armed to suppress force. It means that which assails the common body anywhere and everywhere; but it does not mean, as my friend from Tennessee and my friend from Texas say, only the enumerated powers; it does not mean to invade with crushing power the sovereignty of the States over the subjects reserved to them; but it means to aid them consistently with the principle of national sovereignty over national subjects and State sovereignty over State subjects.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if I understand him to say that a majority of the two Houses of Congress have the power under the Constitution to levy and collect taxes and appropriate the money so levied and collected to any object which, in the opinion of a majority of the two Houses, would be promotive of the general welfare or beneficial to the country?

Mr. CALL. I deny that all the Congresses and all the Senates in the world have a right to appropriate a cent of money to any purpose which they merely think is necessary for the common defense; but I think they have the sole power committed by the Constitution of appropriating money, and that the obligation upon them is to appropriate it consistently with the sovereignty of the States in such manner as will provide for the common defense against any great public evil and for the general welfare.

Mr. HARRIS. To any object?

Mr. CALL. To any object which is necessary to prevent the body-politic from being destroyed, to any object that is necessary for the common defense. I repudiate the shadowy and insubstantial proposition that the enumerated power to regulate commerce means the power to create ships, to dig rivers, to build railroads, to buy machinery, and to carry on the commerce of the country, which your proposition involves as well as the power to prevent contagion.

Mr. HARRIS. I was not inquiring as to what the Senator from Florida repudiates—that happens to be a subject of indifference to me—but I did desire to know whether he believes that a majority of the two Houses of Congress possess the power under the Constitution to levy and collect taxes from the people and appropriate the money to any object which they may hold to be beneficial to the public or promotive of the general welfare.

Mr. CALL. Oh, no, they must not only hold it, but they have the power to appropriate the money. Who has the power but Congress? Do you not acknowledge that? Who has the power?

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator assert that they have the power to appropriate the money to any object which they believe, or which they may decide to be, promotive of the general welfare?

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator tell me who can decide if they can not? Who is above Congress? These ideas belong to a past age. Of course Congress are bound to exercise all their powers for the public welfare, for the common benefit, and their action is void when they touch the power of the States and their sovereignty; they fall shattered to the ground when they touch the sovereignty of the States. But outside of that, the people alone have the power, and the Congress is its depository, as said by Mr. Jefferson, subject to responsibility in elections from the people for the exercise of their duty. This is an old contest. But I find here the action on the 2, 3, and 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands appropriated to these different States, Alabama and others, amounting to $7,336,000. Will Senators, statesmen, undertake to say to the country what Mr. Jefferson never said, Mr. Madison never said, what Mr. Calhoun never said, that these seven and one-third million dollars were wisely appropriated to aid the States in the exercise of their power of education because it came from land, that because it came from land the Constitution of the country said it was good, whereas if it had come from taxes it would have been bad? We have not such an unreasonable Constitution. We have not such unstatesmanly views of public policy. We have a Constitution which says that the National Government shall be sovereign for its purposes, that it shall be created to aid the States in the exercise of their sovereignty; and here are $7,000,000 of money, the proceeds of property bought with taxes, given to the States for national aid to the States for education. And yet, unconscious of that fact, for which the Senator from Texas votes, we are met with this objection!

I ask the Senator from Texas how he holds his seat here to-day? If the principles of constitutional interpretation which he announces here are true, he is no Senator here. There is no power in the Constitution in its enumerated powers to acquire foreign territory. The right of treaty-making never could be extended to change the very autonomy of a country and its written constitution and power. It is by virtue alone of the sovereign powers conferred upon the Congress of the United States outside of its enumerated powers. The power to declare war does not require the annexation of foreign territory; the power to make treaties does not require or necessarily include the power to annex Great Britain, or France, or South America. You can not frame it that way any more than you can strain the language of the power to regulate commerce, to build wagons to carry on commerce, or to build a railroad.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. We have a Supreme Court, which is the final interpreter of the construction of the laws and the Constitution. Are its accepted judgments law? If so, the Senator will remember that in several cases the Supreme Court has decided and held that under the treaty-making power we could acquire territory.

Mr. CALL. Oh, no.

Mr. REAGAN. I put myself behind those decisions of the court as to my right and as to the right of the Senator from Florida to a seat in this body.

Mr. CALL. I hold that the power of the Government to buy territory from other countries is complete without reference to the specific enumeration of powers. I hold, with Mr. Calhoun, that if the Constitution was entirely silent on the question of appropriating public money, Congress would have the right to do it. There is no other power to do it. But I do not know that the Supreme Court of the United States, through a mandamus, can require the Senator from Texas to say that he shall vote a certain sum of money for a certain purpose. I do not hold that the Supreme Court can interpret the Constitution proprio vigore and enforce it on the conscience and judgment of Senators and Representatives of the people. I hold them to be sovereign in this country, and the Supreme Court, as an independent and co-ordinate tribunal, has no power over them, either advisory or otherwise, except as their judgments may address themselves to the reasonable conviction and intelligence of the body. We hold the power, not they, of continuing them and of removing them, and it were well that this body were wider awake to the responsibility they owe to the people for the preservation of a pure and a learned judiciary.

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator will allow me to say that I did not mean to suggest that we were bound in our judgment by the judgment of the Supreme Court, but I believe the decision of the Supreme Court on a great question like that is persuasive and entitled to consideration.

Mr. CALL. It seems to me that everybody would know that that was a strained construction of the Constitution. The treaty-making power does not contemplate the necessity of the annexation of any one or of all foreign countries. It contemplates the regulation of our relations with foreign countries, but it does not contemplate, and could not be made to contemplate, the absorption and incorporation of foreign countries in our form of government. It is not intended for such a purpose, and one hundred Supreme Courts could not make it so. It is a sovereign power of government, and was never held to be a treaty-making power, though treaties were the ordinary methods by which it was accomplished.

But let us pass on. Mr. Jefferson, whose opinions we value so much, used the following words, which I commend to gentlemen, in the fourth volume and three hundred and eighteenth page of his Correspondence, in his letter to Dr. Priestley:

> The Gothic idea that we are to look backwards instead of forwards for the improvement of the human mind, and to recur to the annals of our ancestors for what is most perfect in government, in religion, and in learning, is worthy of those bigots in religion and government by whom it has been recommended and whose purposes it would answer.

I do not apply that term to my learned friends here—they are not bigots, they are enlightened and forcible statesmen—but I do commend the principle. The world advances, and what stands is the imperishable principle of local government, State sovereignty over State subjects, and national sovereignty over national subjects, each one aiding the Government without interfering—that is the great sovereign principle of our institutions which is destined to have its hold upon the world.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator, as he has referred to the opinion of Mr. Jefferson, to hear another opinion which is very pertinent to the matter he is now discussing? Mr. Jefferson said in a celebrated letter, which has been already read to the Senate:

> Whereas our tenet ever was, and, indeed, it is almost the only landmark which now divides the Federalists from the Republicans, that Congress had not unlimited powers to provide for the general welfare, but were restrained to those specifically enumerated, and that—> and that, as it was never meant they should provide for that welfare but by the exercise of the enumerated powers, so it could not have been meant they should raise money for purposes which the enumeration did not place under their action.

That seems to me, so far as the opinion of Mr. Jefferson is concerned, to meet the precise point taken by those who oppose the passage of this bill, and I think that in that phrase the Constitution could never have meant that Congress should raise money for purposes which the enumeration did not place under their action.

Mr. CALL. No doubt we agree as to that. You stand where Mr. Jefferson stood the first day there was a Constitution, and not where he stood when he purchased Louisiana. That was his opinion, that was his interpretation, and how did he carry it out? By exercising a power which he admitted upon his own principles of interpretation could not be exercised.

Mr. GRAY. Pardon me one moment. The language I have just read was used by Mr. Jefferson within four or five years of the close of his life.

Mr. CALL. I understand that also; but I say his principles of interpretation of the Constitution originated with the struggle with Alexander Hamilton in the first days after the adoption of the Constitution, and I say that the comment on this interpretation that its own founder made was the purchase of Louisiana in direct repudiation and denial of it, for there can be no queston of the proposition that if the Constitution prevailed there was no power to do it. If there was no power to do it as a matter of law and constitutional power, it was and remains to-day utterly void. It could not be accomplished otherwise than by some exercise of legitimate power, either acquiesced in or otherwise. Be that as it may, Mr. Jefferson himself laid the first monument in the foundation of that contrary interpretation when he said, "We are bound now to violate these principles of interpretation and purchase the Territory of Louisiana."

But I want to allude to an act to promote the education of the blind, approved March 3, 1879. I do not know how my friend from Texas voted on that.

> Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $250,000 out of money—

Tax-moneys, the money of the people, as my friend from Texas would say—> out of money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, be, and hereby is, set apart as a perpetual fund for the purpose of aiding the education of the blind in the United States of America, through the American Printing House for the Blind.

> SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is hereby directed to hold said sum in trust for the purpose aforesaid; and it shall be his duty, upon the passage of this act, to invest said sum in United States interest-bearing bonds, bearing interest at 4 per cent., of the issue of July, 1870, and upon their maturity to reinvest their proceeds in other United States interest-bearing bonds, and so on forever.
> SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is hereby authorized to pay over, semi-annually, to the trustees of the American Printing House for the Blind, located in Louisville, Ky., and chartered in 1858 by the Legislature of Kentucky, upon the requisition of their president, countersigned by their treasurer, the semi-annual interest upon the said bonds, upon the following conditions.

Let us see what the vote was on that bill.

Bailey, Bayard, Butler—

I am surprised—

Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chandler, Coke—

I am again surprised——

Mr. BUTLER. I can plead the statute of limitations on that vote.

Mr. CALL—

Conover, Davis of Illinois, Davis of West Virginia, Dorsey, Eustis—

I am not surprised at that—

Ferry, Garland, Gordon, Grover, Hamlin, Harris—

HARRIS, of Tennessee! [Laughter]—

Howe, Kellogg, McMillan, Maxey, Mitchell, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Plumb, Ransom, Rollins, Sargent, Shields, Spencer, Teller, Whyte, Windom.

I find I have read the wrong list. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] did not vote on the bill.

And then came the nays—yeas 35, nays 24.

Mr. BUTLER. What is the provision of that law, may I ask my friend?

Mr. CALL. I have already read it. I will read the list again.

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Bailey, Beck, Blaine, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chandler, Coke, Dennis, Dorsey, Eustis, Ferry, Garland, Gordon, Grover, Harris, Howe, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kellogg, Lamar, McCreery, McMillan, McPherson, Matthews, Maxey, Mitchell, Morgan, Oglesby, Patterson, Plumb, Rollins, Saunders, Shields, Teller, Wadleigh, Whyte—40.

NAYS—Messrs. Davis of Illinois, Davis of West Virginia, Edmunds, Hereford, Kirkwood, McDonald, Merrimon—7.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will allow me to say that the yeas and nays were not taken in the House of Representatives on that bill, but the vote there stood, ayes 124 and noes 23. I do not know how the Senator from Texas voted, but he was part of the majority of the House at that time.

Mr. CALL. The bill is a bill donating so much money—$250,000—as a perpetual fund to the education of the blind of the State of Kentucky.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, Mr. President, my friend will permit me to read——

Mr. CALL. For a printing-house for the blind.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me read the preamble.

Mr. CALL. The Senator will not read anything different from that. I will read it.

Mr. BUTLER. The preamble there puts a different phase on it.

> Whereas the trustees, superintendents, and teachers of the various State and public institutions for the instruction of the blind, representing the interests of over 30,000 blind persons in the United States, have united in a petition to Congress to take into consideration the needs of the blind in the United States; and
> Whereas the Association of the American Instructors of the Blind, at their session in Philadelphia, in August, 1876, representing twenty-six State and public institutions for the instruction of the blind, have set forth in a series of resolutions that the especial needs of the blind are embossed books and tangible apparatus, and have recommended that if any aid should be given by Congress it would most efficiently come through increasing the means of the American printing house for the blind, located in Louisville, Ky., etc.

Showing clearly that it was a national institution. That money was not thrust into all the States as this bill proposes to do; it was confined to a single institution, national in its character; and if I were put upon my voir dire, I would say that that was a straining of the Constitution somewhat, though I voted for it. I have voted for many other things that were not strictly according to the Constitution in my judgment.

Mr. BLAIR. An examination of the record will show that this is a measure introduced and pressed by the honorable Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], who is not now in his seat. I think the whole act had better be inserted in the RECORD. The appropriation was made from public money; it was accepted by the State, and the Senator from Kentucky made a provision that the State and the corporation both should accept it before the money should be expended. With that understanding the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] voted for the bill. It was an appropriation of public money.

Mr. EUSTIS. I want to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question. I understood the Senator from South Carolina to state that a law for which he voted was unconstitutional. I should like to ask him whether at the time he voted for it he considered it unconstitutional?

Mr. BUTLER. Well, Mr. President, I regret very much to say that I did not give it that investigation which I ought to have given it, and I am quite sure that if I had I should have voted against it.

Mr. CALL. I understand that the Senator from South Carolina introduced a bill very much the same as this at one time.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; but the moment after I introduced it I began to investigate it, and I withdrew it.

Mr. CALL. And I understand furthermore that the Legislatures of South Carolina and Florida favored it.

Mr. BUTLER. On that subject there might be a difference in point of time. Six or seven years ago the Legislature of South Carolina might have done so, but I am quite satisfied that they would not now.

Mr. CALL. I have in my hand the bill introduced by Mr. Calhoun in 1839 to donate the public lands within the limits of the United States to the several States on certain conditions therein mentioned, and he goes on, in a speech made later on that subject, to say that these public lands would amount to over $100,000,000. They cost $323,000,000. He proposed to give over one thousand million acres of public land to the States upon conditions limiting their sovereignty in disposing of them. What was that? Here is this statute to educate the blind—to donate money for that purpose. It is not an invasion of any power of the sovereignty of the State of Kentucky. That sovereignty stands unimpaired if every blind child was educated with money donated and accepted from the hands of the National Government—no, not only unimpaired, but strengthened and built up to the extent that her people are improved.

But I think these Senators have gone back to the very first days of the Constitution after its adoption and to the old ideas which then prevailed—right ideas they were in part, but not perfect, as Mr. Jefferson himself pointed out, to be tested by time and adapted to the great principles of local self-government, State sovereignty and national sovereignty.

But what do we propose to do? I have alluded to the fact that we live in a new age; that this is not the age of war; that we are rapidly approaching that period in human affairs when other policies are to take the place and other dangers to be encountered—other policies than those of organizing for the suppression of antagonistic forces of one government against another. I hold in my hand a very interesting article in the Popular Science Monthly, from a man worthy of great respect and confidence, which I will not detain the Senate to read at length, but which I wish to call attention to as illustrating the public policy which demands this appropriation. It is an article upon "The Economic Disturbances since 1873," contingent on the war expenditures. My friends here are willing to vote any amount for war and for the equipment of navies. Let us see how that comports with the present economic condition of the country. Mr. Wells, in this article, states—

> That the men in actual service at the present time in the armies and navies of Europe are in excess of 4,000,000, and that it undoubtedly requires the product of one operative or peasant labor to sustain one soldier. The present aggregate annual direct war expenditure of the world is probably in excess of a thousand million dollars. We express this expenditure in terms of money, but it really means work performed; not that abundance of useful and desirable things may be increased, but decreased; not that human toil and suffering may be lightened, but augmented.

Now, Mr. President, that is not the policy of this bill; that is not the policy which the future of all governments must pursue. But we find that there have been economical disturbances of great portent in the future and demanding other and different policies on the part of governments and of States—evils which are more menacing than the march of hostile armies, than the sacking of capitals, than the outrages perpetrated upon men and women, because they assail the entire body politic and all the people, starvation, diminished employment, imperfect distribution, economic disturbances bringing with them my friend's formidable opponent that he wages war upon, infectious disease, epidemic disease. We find these are the great evils originating among the people themselves.

Now, we find a very intelligent calculation here. We find, this writer says, that there are four great causes which are bringing want and suffering and the absence of employment to the people, and yet beneficent causes themselves:

> First, the occupation and utilization of new and immense areas of cheap and fertile wheat-growing land in the United States, Canada (Manitoba), Australia, and the Argentine Republic. Second, the invention and application of machinery for facilitating and cheapening the production and harvesting of crops, and which on the wheat-fields of Dakota (as before pointed out) have made the labor of every agriculturist equivalent to the annual production of 5,500 bushels of wheat. Third, the extension of the system of transportation on land through the railroad, and on sea through the steam-ship, in default of which the appropriation of new land and the invention and application of new agricultural machinery would have availed but little. Fourth, the discovery of Bessemer, and the invention of the compound (steam-ship) engine, without which transportation could not have cheapened to the degree necessary to effect the present extent of distribution. Now, from the conjoined result of all these different agencies has come a reduction in the world's price of wheat to an extent sufficient to make its growing unprofitable on lands taken at high rents and under unfavorable climatic conditions; and legislation is powerless to make it otherwise.

In short, the whole secret of the depression of trade has been owing to these great changes in the economic condition of the world. Now, let me read from Mr. T. H. Huxley's work on "The Advance of Science in the Last Half Century:"

> The middle of the eighteenth century is illustrated by a host of great names in science—English, French, German, and Italian—especially in the fields of chemistry, geology, and biology; but this deepening and broadening of natural knowledge produced next to no immediate practical benefits. Even if, at this time, Francis Bacon could have returned to the scene of his greatness and of his littleness, he must have regarded the philosophic world which praised and disregarded his precepts with great disfavor. If ghosts are consistent, he would have said, "These people are all wasting their time just as Gilbert, and Kepler, and Galileo, and my worthy physician Harvey did in my day. Where are the fruits of the restoration of science which I promised? This accumulation of bare knowledge is all very well, but cui bono? Not one of these people is doing what I told him specially to do, and seeking that secret of the cause of forms which will enable men to deal at will with matter, and superinduce new natures upon the old foundations."
> But, a little later, that growth of knowledge beyond imaginable utilitarian ends, which is the condition-precedent of its practical utility, began to produce some effect upon practical life; and the operation of that part of nature we call human upon the rest began to create, not new natures, in Bacon's sense, but a new nature, the existence of which is dependent upon men's efforts, which is subservient to their wants, and which would disappear if man's shaping and guiding hand were withdrawn. Every mechanical artifice, every chemically pure substance employed in manufacture, every abnormally fertile race of plants, or rapidly growing and fattening breed of animals, is a part of the new nature created by science. Without it, the most densely populated regions of modern Europe and America must retain their primitive, sparsely inhabited; agricultural or pastoral condition; it is the foundation of our wealth and the condition of our safety from submergence by another flood of barbarous hordes; it is the bond which unites into a solid political whole regions larger than any empire of antiquity; it secures us from the recurrence of the pestilence and famines of former times; it is the source of endless comforts and conveniences, which are not mere luxuries, but conduce to physical and moral well-being. During the last fifty years, this new birth of time, this new nature begotten by science upon fact, has pressed itself daily and hourly upon our attention, and has worked miracles which have modified the whole fashion of our lives.

I will not read further from this eloquent tribute. Suffice it to say that upon applied science alone the safety of society depends to-day. The power of maintaining this economic system, as is stated by this writer, depends upon the advance of education. Without it the laborer is without compensation; without it unskilled labor can not subsist under our present economic laws and conditions, and a vast amount of unemployed, starving, reckless people are left in the body of the state without any power whatever to take care or provide for themselves. Our Commissioner of Labor estimated a million of unemployed people in his report of 1886.

Wealth and Progress, by Gunton, a book which commends itself to the consideration of every thoughtful man, says:

> By common consent the industrial question has become the problem of the hour. There never was a time when the demands of the labor question were so urgent nor when the failure to adequately meet those demands by a scientific solution involved so much danger to the well-being and progress of society as it does to-day.
> With this increase in wages have come increased mobility, larger social opportunities, and consequently a more highly developed and more sensitive character.
> Again, as a necessary part of this industrial differentiation and social progress, he ceased to be a ward of his master's household and became simply a seller of service. By this change he gradually became a fractional part of a highly complex system of industry, in which he is an inseparable and almost automatic portion of a vast machine, apart from which he is practically useless as a producer.
> Consequently, when the factory stops, or he is discharged, from whatever cause, he is utterly helpless to procure means for a living, because as an isolated laborer he has lost the power to employ himself. When that point is reached, which the prevalence of enforced idleness shows is painfully frequent, the laborer of to-day is not only more helpless, but he is more dangerous to society than were the laborers of the thirteenth century.

This book proceeds to show the difference between the unskilled and the skilled laborer, the educated labor of the country, the difference economically, the difference in point of order, the difference in point of sobriety, the difference in the economical production and distribution of the country.

> In India, with wages at 60 to 70 cents a week, the capital invested in production is only about $35 per head of the population. In Russia, with wages at $3.60 per week, it is $190 per capita. In Austria, Italy, Spain, and Portugal, with wages at $3.76, it is about $350 per capita. In Germany, with wages at $3.84, it is $540 per capita. In France, with wages at about $5, the capital invested is about $1,010 per capita, and in England, with wages at $7.74 per week, it is $1,300 per capita. Accordingly, in England 78.16 per cent. of the products are made by steam, as against 10 per cent. in Russia, 29 per cent. in Austria, 34 per cent. in Italy, Portugal, and Scandinavia, and 36 per cent. in all continental countries. And in England and America 4½ per cent. of the product is made by hand labor, as against 23.19 per cent. in Spain, 33.67 per cent. in Italy, and 42.37 per cent. in Portugal.

That is the condition of the United States. With the economic policies of the world making uneducated labor incapable of support, with machinery doing nearly the whole amount of human labor which human labor was formerly devoted to, cheapening production and at the same time depriving men of employment, you have to meet the problem of educating the laborer and all the people. You have to adopt Thomas Jefferson's policy, not in the literal interpretation of the enumerated powers, but with that great widespread sympathy with mankind which directed his policy toward their elevation, their education, and their improvement that demanded an amendment of the Constitution if necessary to enable it to be done.

Therefore, Mr. President, I regard education as these hundreds of millions of dollars appropriated nominally from the proceeds of public-land sales have always shown the American people regarded it, as the highest object to which the public money can be judiciously applied. I should have preferred in this bill that every dollar of this money was devoted to industrial education, to preparing men and women for the employments of life; but I have not been able to have my way in regard to it, and I am willing, as the first step towards aiding the States, even if the distribution be, as it is unquestionably, somewhat unfair as between one State and another, giving to those States that have already had the largest donations of the public land large amounts of money—I am willing, as the first step towards encountering this great evil, to devote an appropriation of the public money, whether it be from land sales or tax proceeds now in the Treasury, to the States to aid the States in the exercise of their sovereign power of educating and promoting the education of their people, not to invade them, but to aid them with their consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Several SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the motion will not prevail.

Mr. HARRIS. Is the motion debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable. The Chair will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

Mr. HARRIS. I yield for that, of course.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1527) to make bills of lading conclusive evidence in certain cases;

A bill (H. R. 2056) for the relief of Joel J. Goss; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 77) to supply the Department of State with copies of bills and other documents.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives providing for the printing of the report of the Commissioner of Education for the years 1886 and 1887.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BLAIR. Before the motion is put I will say that I should like to prefer a request to the Senate to fix a time when the final vote on the passage of this bill may be taken, and I ask unanimous consent that the debate be closed and the vote be taken on the bill and amendments to-morrow afternoon at 4 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the vote be taken on the passage of the bill now under consideration to-morrow afternoon at 4 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. PLUMB. I shall have to object to that, although I should be very glad to have some day fixed a little further in the future. I expected before the debate closed to have something to say about it, but some statistics which I have sent for are not now at hand, although they are liable to come any day. I do not care to detain the Senate, but I think if the Senator will suggest some day early next week it will accommodate a number of Senators who I know intend to speak on this bill, and I do not believe, in view of the time already occupied and the manner in which the debate has gone on, that the Senate is going to be tolerant of any disposition to crowd it to an early issue; that is to say, within a day or two.

Mr. PLATT. It ought to be got through with before long.

Mr. PLUMB. I should be glad to name some day when we can take hold of it and dispose of it. I am as desirous of that as the Senator from New Hampshire can be; but let it be with due regard for the convenience of those who are liable to be caught up by this short turn.

Mr. BLAIR. I dislike to do anything to catch up my friend at any very short turn. He has been quite free in his comments on the delay in the decision of this bill in open Senate and otherwise, and I did not really expect from him a request for such protracted delay. I should like to have him designate a time which will suit his convenience to close the debate on this question and take the final vote. Friday perhaps, at 2 o'clock, would do.

Mr. PLUMB. Friday would not be a very good day, because of the fact that the Senate is very likely to adjourn over Saturday, and we might get into the subject of an amendment of this bill on Friday and have to postpone it until Monday. If the Senator will say next Tuesday——

Mr. STEWART. Tuesday at 3 o'clock.

Mr. PLUMB. Tuesday at 3 o'clock will entirely satisfy me. If I have criticised the Senator for his delay in pressing the bill to a vote, either on the floor of the Senate or elsewhere, I do not know it.

Mr. BLAIR. I will say in regard to that matter that I have certainly so understood him, but I have personally occupied less time in the discussion of this bill in the weeks that it has been pending than was occupied by the Senators from Connecticut and Oregon yesterday and the day before. I have pressed it as fast as I could, and I shall be very glad if now the convenience of those who oppose the bill does not require a longer postponement than Tuesday at 3 o'clock, and that they would agree to a vote at that time.

Mr. PLUMB. Tuesday was suggested; and it will answer my convenience, although an earlier day might answer that purpose; but a Senator, who desires to speak on this question about the time of the final vote, has said to me that he would not be here on Tuesday, and that Wednesday would be satisfactory to him. I think that will meet the approbation of all, perhaps.

Mr. BLAIR. I will ask consent——

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. The Senator will allow me to interrupt him for one moment?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I wish to know who the Senator is who wants this bill postponed that he may be present to speak on the final vote? Who has given that information to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BLAIR. I have no means of knowing.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I should like to know who he is that wants this bill delayed in that way.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent that the final vote may be taken next Tuesday at 3 o'clock.

Several SENATORS. Say Wednesday.

Mr. BLAIR. It seems to me that it is analogous to trifling to ask another week's delay in the discussion of this bill. To-day is Wednesday; I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that the final vote upon this bill and amendments may be taken at 3 o'clock next Tuesday.

Mr. PLATT and others. Agreed.

Mr. PLUMB. I feel under constraint to object, and take the chances of what may come from that. I wish to say simply this by way of appeal to the good nature of the Senator from New Hampshire, if he has not lost it all in his accommodation heretofore, as he has allowed the bill to go over from time to time on account of just courtesy to meet the convenience of persons who wanted other bills passed, and others who wanted to speak on particular subjects, now, that there is some convenience involved on the part of certain Senators here, I do not think he ought to crowd the question when there is only twenty-four hours' difference between him and apparent unanimous consent to setting a time for disposing of the question.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Kansas does not ask any such delay beyond Tuesday for his own convenience, and I trust he will not assume to make demands in behalf of others. If any one else desires a postponement longer, I should expect, of course, those other Senators to object or manifest a desire for postponement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request for consent has not been formally submitted by the Chair. The remarks of the Senator from Kansas seem to render that unnecessary. If, however, the Senator from New Hampshire desires, the Chair will formally submit the proposition.

The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, the vote may be taken on the bill and the pending amendments, and debate thereon cease. Is there objection?

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask for information; will the bill be the regular order every day until then?

Mr. BLAIR. I suppose it must be so. If Senators desire delay, it must be for the purpose of debate.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask the question simply because I shall be out of town on Monday, and I wish to speak on the bill, which I will do on Thursday or Friday.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well.

Mr. COKE. I object to the agreement proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas objects.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, a few moments ago——

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will ask unanimous consent for Wednesday.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be through in a short time.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope we shall not enter into any further debate, pending the motion for an executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Tennessee to yield.

Mr. HARRIS. I yielded to receiving a message from the House of Representatives, and I was not inclined to interrupt the request of the Senator from New Hampshire for unanimous consent; but I certainly am not willing to open the field of debate in respect to the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee has moved that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. GEORGE. I only want to put on record a citation from Mr. Justice Story, to which I referred a little while ago.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Tennessee allow the request to be put for unanimous consent on Wednesday?

Mr. HARRIS. I will not object to any request. I will not object to suspending the motion for any request for unanimous consent that the Senator from New Hampshire may make.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks the Senator from Tennessee to yield, to enable him to put on record a citation.

Mr. HARRIS. I will yield to the Senator from Mississippi for that purpose, too.

Mr. BLAIR. I will further avail myself of the courtesy of the Senator from Tennessee to ask unanimous consent that the debate close upon this bill and amendments at 3 o'clock on Wednesday next.

Several SENATORS. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi has been recognized with the consent of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be very short. There was a difference between the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and myself as to what Judge Story's opinion was as to the constitutional power of appropriating money out of the Treasury to objects not within the enumerated powers of the Constitution. I read from Judge Story:

The other question is, whether Congress has any power to appropriate money, raised by taxation or otherwise, for any other purposes than those pointed out in the enumerated powers, which follow the clause respecting taxation. It is said, "raised by taxation or otherwise," for there may be, and in fact are, other sources of revenue by which money may and does come into the Treasury of the United States otherwise than by taxation, as, for instance, by fines, penalties, and forfeitures, by sales of the public lands, and interest and dividends on bank stock, by captures and prize in times of war, and by other incidental profits and emoluments growing out of governmental transactions and prerogatives. But for all the common purposes of argument the question may be treated as one growing out of levies by taxation.

That is section 975 of Story on the Constitution. Section 977 reads as follows:

The argument in favor of the power—

The one which I have just read—

The argument in favor of the power is derived, in the first place, from the language of the clause conferring the power (which it is admitted in its literal terms covers it); secondly, from the nature of the power, which renders it in the highest degree expedient, if not indispensable, for the due operations of the National Government; thirdly, from the early, constant, and decided maintenance of it by the Government and its functionaries, as well as by many of our ablest statesmen, from the very commencement of the Constitution. So that it has the language and infent of the text and the practice of the Government to sustain it against an artificial doctrine set up on the other side.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on the pending bill and amendments may close next Wednesday, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and that the vote then be taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that debate on the pending bill may close on Wednesday next, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and that thereafter the vote may be taken on the bill and amendments. Is there objection?

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to inquire as to the interpretation of that order, if it should be made. Suppose debate is found to be exhausted before 3 o'clock on Wednesday of the next week, would not a vote be in order on this bill between this hour and that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not decide that hypothetical question.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to know it because I have an engagement that will keep me out of the Senate. If it is understood that the vote will be taken at 3 o'clock on next Wednesday, I shall arrange to be here then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suppose that a fair interpretation of such an agreement would be that the vote should be taken at that time or before in case the Senate should be ready to act before.

Mr. MORGAN. I would object to it in that form unless it is understood that the vote can not be taken before 3 o'clock on Wednesday next.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not think there will be any danger of a vote being reached before that time, and I did understand myself that it was the intention to fix a time, and that it should not be taken before then. I can assure the Senator from Alabama that if we postpone it till then he may run the risk of being absent until that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not intend to detain the Senate, but I object to having no end. If we are going to proceed at 3 o'clock next Wednesday to vote, it is perfectly understood that the Senate is acting by general agreement, and we are going to proceed until we pass or reject the bill. I want the Senator from Alabama to understand that is my agreement, for when I make an agreement I mean it. That is the agreement with the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BLAIR. That is the way I understand it, that we proceed to take the vote on the amendments and the bill at 3 o'clock next Wednesday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And not until that time?

Mr. BLAIR. And not until that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That, then, is the understanding of the Senate, that on Wednesday next, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, debate on the bill shall cease, and the vote shall then be taken on the bill and the pending amendments, and that the vote shall not be taken until that time. Is there objection to that agreement or understanding? [A pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask leave to submit a resolution for reference to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be received, if there be no objection. The agreement as to the school bill is as stated by the Chair. The resolution offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] will be read.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMITTEE.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce be, and they are hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer to report the hearings before them relative to proposed amendments of the interstate-commerce law, and to have the same printed for the use of the committee; and that such stenographer be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like in connection with the matter just passed away to say without insisting upon it that I should like perhaps ten minutes to close the debate prior to 3 o'clock next Wednesday. I will take my chances on that.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 1527) to make bills of lading conclusive evidence in certain cases was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 2056) for the relief of Joel J. Goss was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 77) to supply the Department of State with copies of bills and other documents was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HARRIS. The question is on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I wish to understand from the Senator from Tennessee what his purpose is. I have a resolution on the Calendar, offered by myself in the morning hour, to change Rule XXXVII.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. He has not risen, sir. There was a resolution introduced by me in the morning hour looking to such a change in Rule XXXVII as that we can consider the English treaty in open session. I ask now that that resolution be taken up, which is morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee has moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I beg pardon.

Mr. HARRIS. If we can come to a vote without discussion upon the resolution of the Senator from Virginia, I am willing to withdraw the motion for an executive session until we can decide that question. I am willing to yield if we can do that without debate, but if we are going to drift into debate about it I shall insist upon my motion.

Mr. HOAR. Allow me to suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that that will be in his own power all the time, because he will have the right to make the motion at any time.

Mr. HARRIS. Except that if I withdraw it and the Senator from Massachusetts should take the floor to make a two hours' speech, I would hardly have the authority to take him off the floor to make the motion.

Mr. HOAR. I take it the Senator from Tennessee never heard me make a two hours' speech.

Mr. HARRIS. I take it for granted the Senator from Massachusetts is not going to make a two minutes' speech on this question, but I took the liberty of using his name to illustrate the idea.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee insist on his motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. HARRIS. I do, unless we can unanimously consent to vote on the resolution of the Senator from Virginia without debate.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I will not make any agreement of that sort. If I have got to make an agreement at all it will be as a Senator here, and if there is a proposition to go into executive session I do not understand it. I will make no condition with any Senator on that resolution or on that treaty, as you may call it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. CHACE. I desire to announce that I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. Not knowing how he would vote if present I refrain from voting.

Mr. KENNA. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] is absent on business, and I understand he is paired, but I can not say with whom.

Mr. WALTHALL. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] is absent on account of sickness. My colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is necessarily absent temporarily.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] generally, but I understand from some of his friends that he would vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. WALTHALL. I understood he was paired with the Senator from Vermont on political questions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am paired generally, on any question where I am informed that he would vote one way and I the other. If I am at liberty to vote, as his friends think I am, I will vote "yea."

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] is absent from the city, and requested me to announce his pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. BUTLER. I ought to have announced the fact that I am paired generally with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], who, I understand, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. CULLOM. There is no need of pairing with him.

Mr. BUTLER. There is no need of pairing with him on this question; so I shall allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 9; as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 8, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

CORRECTION.

Mr. BREWER. I think the Journal shows that the bill I reported back yesterday from the Committee on the District of Columbia as a substitute for the House bill 1184 was reported back without amendment. If that be so, that is not correct. I reported a substitute.

The SPEAKER. And the original bill was laid upon the table, as the Chair remembers.

Mr. BREWER. If it is shown in the Journal that it was placed on the Private Calendar, it is incorrect.

The SPEAKER. What is the nature of the bill?

Mr. BREWER. It is a bill to construct a bridge in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. That should not go on the Private Calendar. The Chair is informed the Journal shows the bill went to the House Calendar. The Chair will inspect the Journal, and if it be in any respect incorrect he will have it corrected.

The Journal was then approved.

IMPROVEMENT OF HARBORS IN CALIFORNIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, a report respecting the purchase of a dredge for use in the improvement of harbors in California; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

ROCKPORT AND CAMDEN HARBOR, MAINE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports of examination and survey of Rockport and Camden Harbor, Maine; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

MILITIA FORCE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting an abstract of the militia force of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Commissioner of Agriculture, transmitting a report of the operations of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the year 1887; also transmitting a statement of expenditures and list of employés in that bureau from July 1, 1886, to November 30, 1887; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES A. M'DANIEL VS. UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact in the case of Charles A. McDaniel against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE RESOLUTION REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the joint resolution (S. R. 17) to print additional copies of the United States map of the edition of 1886 prepared by the Commissioner of Public Lands; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a Senate concurrent resolution for printing the report of the National Academy of Sciences for the year 1887; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

FORT BROWN INVESTIGATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a request of the subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs having in charge the Fort Brown investigation to sit during the session of the House.

There being no objection, the request was granted.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MCCOMAS, for ten days, on account of continued illness.

To Mr. GOFF, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. TOWNSHEND, for the remainder of this week, on account of important business.

To Mr. STEWART, of Georgia, for one week, on account of sickness in his family.

PETITION OF FURNITURE MANUFACTURERS.

Mr. FORD. I have here a memorial from manufacturers engaged in a very important industry. It is signed by 140 furniture manufacturers of fourteen different States, representing an invested capital of over $16,000,000, and employing nearly 24,000 men, asking that the tariff on French plate-glass be reduced from 150 per cent. to 30 per cent., and that coal, burlaps, German looking-glass plates, sponges, etc., be placed on the free-list. I ask unanimous consent to have the body of the memorial printed without the names in the RECORD, and that the petition be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

The petition is as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned furniture manufacturers believe that the time has arrived when the inequalities of the tariff should be corrected and the surplus in the national Treasury reduced.

Therefore we respectfully petition your honorable body that the following articles be placed upon the free-list, namely: Burlaps, silvered mirrors, known in the trade as German looking-glass plates, coal, sponges. We would further respectfully request that the tariff on unsilvered plate-glass above 24x30 inches be reduced to not exceed 30 per cent. ad valorem.

There were imported into the United States last year $3,756,795.40 worth of burlaps, paying a tax of $1,176,706.42, the same being 31.32 per cent. This article never was and can not be profitably made in this country, owing to climate and other influences, and then there is no industry in the United States protected by this tax.

There were imported into the United States $1,633,656.86 worth of silvered mirrors, known in the trade as German looking-glass plates, upon which a tax was collected of $407,650.80. There was also imported $1,229,044 worth of unsilvered plate-glass, paying a duty of $1,245,304.95, the same being an average rate of 101.20 per cent., and on sizes above 24x60 inches the enormous duty of 152.94 per cent. was collected. This duty of 152.94 per cent. was the largest tax collected upon any article imported into this country for manufacturing purposes. Notwithstanding this excessive protection, it has been demonstrated that it was impracticable to manufacture glass suitable for mirrors in this country, and every looking-glass plate used by furniture manufacturers in the United States to-day is imported. The collection of these taxes does not benefit any industry in this country, but is a grievous burden to furniture manufacturers, and if our petition is granted it will divert from the national Treasury $3,573,802.54 annually, and will save this amount and many millions more to the people.

SERVICE PENSIONS.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to present a memorial of 590 voters, all residents in a single township, that of Rutland, Meigs County, Ohio. That township has no town or village of any considerable size in it. It is made up entirely of farmers, and for industry, patriotism, loyalty, and high character the people of this township are not excelled by any like community in the United States. The memorial is signed by substantially all the citizens of the township. It relates to the subject of pensions, and asks for a universal or general pension. The length of the memorial is only about a square. I ask that without the names it be printed in the RECORD, and that the petition be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The memorial is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We, whose names are annexed, would most respectfully request your honorable bodies to pass an act placing on the pension-rolls all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the late war.

The following are a few of our reasons for the above petition: The injustice done the thousands of worthy soldiers who on account of their inability, and in many cases impossibility, to prove up their just claims, thus compelling the States in which such soldiers reside to furnish them a support, which should come direct from the Government they helped to save.

We also believe there are great frauds practiced in procuring pensions, and that many are now on the pension-rolls who should not be (unless all are), whilst thousands of those who are worthy and have equal disability are left out to be supported by local levies, if supported at all.

We think our Government is in a position to do this now, and it would save a reduction in the tariff, and is a simple act of justice.

EULOGIES ON LATE HON. SETH C. MOFFATT.

Mr BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent that Wednesday the 29th day of February, at 3 o'clock p. m., be set aside for the consideration of resolutions touching the life and character of the late Seth C. Moffatt, deceased, late a Representative from the State of Michigan.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MINES AND MINING.

Mr. BIGGS, by unanimous consent, offered a resolution setting apart a day for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining; which was referred to the Committee on Rules.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present a petition for reference only.

The SPEAKER. If it is presented simply for reference it should go through the petition-box. There is no necessity for unanimous consent. Under the rule, the gentleman should put his name upon the petition and indorse upon it the name of the committee to which it is to be referred, and it will appear in the RECORD and in the Journal.

JOEL J. GOSS.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 2056, for the relief of Joel J. Goss, and that the bill be now considered.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the following-described real estate, to wit, five lots of land, containing 40 acres each, and known, designated, and numbered 278, 279, 280, 298, and 299, respectively, situate, lying, and being in the eighteenth district of the county of Polk and State of Georgia, be, and the same are hereby, released, quit-claim granted, and conveyed to Joel J. Goss, of said county of Polk, his heirs and assigns forever.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. PAYSON. Let the report be read, or let there be a statement in reference to the bill.

Mr. RYAN. Let the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read, subject to the right to object.

The report of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds (by Mr. BANKHEAD) was read, as follows:

Your committee have considered House bill No. 2056, for the relief of Joel J. Goss, and find that the records in the Treasury Department show that on October 11, 1881, a judgment for $500 and $19.98 costs was recovered by the United States in the United States circuit court for the northern district of Georgia against William M. Wilson and Joel J. Goss. In satisfaction of this judgment the land described in the bill referred to was levied on as the property of defendant Goss, sold, and conveyed to the United States. Proceedings were commenced on December 7, 1885, to put the United States in possession of the premises. On application of Mr. Goss a restraining order was granted February 5, 1886, by the United States district judge, to enable Mr. Goss to make application for a settlement of the matter. An offer of settlement, under the provisions of section 3469 of the Revised Statutes was made, but as that section has been held by the Attorney-General not to extend to claims of real property to which the United States asserts ownership and has a record title, the offer was rejected.

Mr. Goss was surety for Wilson on a bond requiring him to answer the charge of removing distilled spirits on which the tax had not been paid to a place other than the distillery warehouse provided by law. Wilson failed to appear, and the bond was forfeited, and judgment was entered as above stated. Goss had employed counsel to have the forfeiture set aside on the ground that his principal was ill at the date of the forfeiture and unable to be present in court. He was, however, prevented from making this defense by the death of his counsel, of which fact he was ignorant until after final judgment. Goss thereupon brought his principal into court, and he filed his plea of guilty, and the sentence of the court was not imposed on defendant "because of his age and infirmity." The parties resided 60 or 70 miles from the place of holding court. The United States attorney expresses the opinion that if the facts had been made to appear to the court the penalty of the bond would have been remitted on payment of the costs, as there was no willful default, and his co-defendant, Wilson, was brought before the court and entered his plea of guilty. The United States attorney says:

"I do not think this is a case where public justice requires the penalty of the bond to be enforced, and as said Joel J. Goss has shown every disposition to comply with the requirements of his bond, by bringing his principal into court and paying all costs of the forfeiture, I think he should be released from further liability."

The honorable Solicitor of the Treasury says with reference to this opinion: "In this view of the matter I concur; and as the title of the United States to the property in question can not be relinquished under existing law, I am of opinion that it is a proper case of Congressional relief."

It appears that the land in question constitutes the home of Mr. Goss, and is worth from $500 to $1,000, and that he is a poor man, having but little other property. It seems that the enforcement of this judgment would be a hardship, and would be using an unjust advantage.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS] that this bill be now considered?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLEMENTS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ICELANDIC DISCOVERY OF AMERICA.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a short memorial, signed by some 350 citizens, asking for an historical investigation concerning the Icelandic discovery of America.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the memorial will be printed in the RECORD, and will be referred to the Committee on the Library.

The memorial is as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned respectfully represent: That in the approaching celebration at Washington, in 1889, in honor of the centennial of the Constitution of the United States, it would be fitting to include a commemoration of the discovery of America by Leif Erikson, the Icelander, in A. D. 1000, and to allow Iceland, a proud and flourishing republic at the time of the discovery of America, to take an honored place in the "jubilee of republics" in 1889.

That, although the fact of this discovery is based on the authentic documentary evidence of the Icelandic Sagas, there is a vast amount of evidence in the shape of documents, records, and manuscripts of all descriptions that has been buried for centuries in the libraries at Rome; in fact, the church annals of six centuries, containing the minute details of the ecclesiastical work and establishments, the succession of bishops for two hundred and sixty-three years, etc., in the colonies of Greenland and Vinland. These facts, relating to the discovery of America, and comprising the entire early history of this country, it is the right of the American nation to possess and to incorporate in its archives.

That the work Mr. B. F. Stevens has memorialized Congress to perform, namely, "the preparation of an index of all the documents of American concern in private or public archives of Great Britain, Holland, France, and Spain, that accumulated between the years 1763 and 1783," be rendered complete and perfect by the preparation of a like index of all the records and documents bearing upon the discovery of America in the year 1000, and the colonies that existed in Vinland and Greenland until the year 1540, the date of their extinction.

That the claim of Spain and Italy, in favor of Christopher Columbus, extolled by these nations as the discoverer of America, be suspended until all the facts in the case are put in the possession of the American Government, in order that it may be fairly and justly proved how great were the discoveries, explorations, and settlements of the Icelanders, how far they made their discoveries known to the world, and to what extent these discoveries and settlements had been known and recorded in Rome, thus providing Columbus with the knowledge that made his expedition a successful one, confirmed as this was by the corroboration he found in the archives of Iceland during his visit there in February, 1477.

Wherefore the undersigned respectfully beg that Congress will authorize a thorough investigation of these records in the Vatican and other Roman libraries, and appropriate a sum suitable for the carrying out of that work and for a worthy Icelandic celebration, in 1889, in commemoration of the discovery, this to be according to the plan for a Viking exhibition submitted by Miss Marie A. Brown, and which would comprise the erection of a Viking hall, in which would be displayed the relics from the Viking period, the only way to resurrect this brilliant past (the precise period of the discovery of America) being by means of a historical exhibition, for which, fortunately, all the essentials are to be found in the museums and splendid collections of Europe, the swords and shields of the Vikings, the beakers in which they drank their toasts, the massive gold armlets and necklaces and ornate belts, specimens of their art in wood carving, tapestry, etc., and of their maritime skill in the very craft in which these masters of the world ranged the seas.

INVESTIGATION OF THE GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the special Committee on Printing, submitted, by unanimous consent, the following report:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 7, 1888.

Resolved, That the special Committee on Printing appointed by the Speaker under a resolution adopted by the House on the 30th day of January ultimo, "to make thorough investigation of the Government Printing Office during the incumbency of the present incumbent and that of his predecessor," be, and are hereby, authorized and empowered in conducting said investigation to employ a stenographer, to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, examine witnesses, and call for and examine all books, papers, records, and documents bearing upon the subject of said investigation, and that any expense incurred in conducting the same be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The committee have considered the House resolutions presented on February 7, 1888, in the House and referred to the Committee on Printing, authorizing and empowering the special Committee on Printing in the conduct and management of the investigation of the administration of the Government Printing Office to employ a stenographer, to send for persons and papers, etc., and report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, with an amendment as follows: After the word "stenographer" add the words "and a clerk."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee whether the services of the stenographers regularly employed by the House for the committees can not be obtained.

Mr. RICHARDSON. When the resolution was before the House, I stated that I had no idea that we should need to employ a stenographer outside of those regularly in the service of the House under the law, and I do not think that we shall. The resolution gives the committee the option to employ a stenographer, if at any time it should become necessary, but I do not think that we shall have occasion to exercise that discretion.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution as amended was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire also to present another report on a House concurrent resolution with an amendment, which I think will provoke no discussion.

The SPEAKER. Is it privileged?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is not privileged.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Printing.

There was no objection.

The report was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 25, 1888.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1886–'87 there be printed 6,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 12,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 25,000 copies for distribution by the Commissioner.

The Committee on Printing have considered the House concurrent resolution to provide for the printing of the annual report of the Commissioner of Education for 1886–'87, and the amendments of the Senate, and report the same back and recommend that the said Senate amendments be agreed to. The amendments of the Senate are as follows: In line 5 strike out "six" and insert "four." In line 6 strike out "twelve" and insert "eight." In line 7 strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty;" so that said resolution will provide for printing 4,000 of said report for the use of the Senate, 8,000 for the use of the House, and 20,000 for distribution by the Commissioner.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

In line 5 strike out "six" and insert "four." In line 6 strike out "twelve" and insert "eight." In line 7 strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONGRESSIONAL DOCUMENTS FOR STATE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to report back from the Committee on Printing with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. Res. 77) to supply the Department of State with copies of bills and other documents.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman present this as a privileged report?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. The resolution and accompanying report will be read subject to objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to furnish the Department of State, out of the usual number, with ten copies of each bill and joint resolution, and twenty copies of each executive document, miscellaneous document, and report of committee of either House of Congress.

The report of the Committee on Printing was read, as follows:

The committee have considered H. Res. 77, being joint resolution to supply the Department of State with copies of bills and other documents, and return same with recommendation that it do pass.

The committee file with this report a letter of date January 13, 1888, from the Secretary of State, addressed to the chairman of this committee, which they ask be made part of this report, and to which they refer for the purpose of showing the necessity for this legislation.

The following is the letter:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 13, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Permit me to call your attention to the fact that under the new rules of the House of Representatives, and by the construction of the law by the Public Printer, the Department is only enabled to obtain for its use copies of bills, joint resolutions, and the various public documents published by order of Congress by requisition to be paid for from the appropriation for printing and binding from the Department, which was not estimated for in view of this contingency.

Up to the commencement of the present session of Congress the Department received from the Public Printer 15 copies of each bill and joint resolution printed by Congress and 30 copies of each executive or miscellaneous document and report to either House.

In order to provide for the early publication and certification of the laws as enacted, and to comply with the essential demands of the business of the Department and our representatives abroad, it seems necessary that there should be some provision of law whereby the Public Printer should furnish to the Department a sufficient number of the bills, resolutions, and various documents to provide for the expeditious transaction of the public business, and I herewith submit a draught of a joint resolution to provide the documents above referred to, and beg your careful and early attention thereto.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

T. F. BAYARD.

Hon. J. D. RICHARDSON,
Chairman Committee on Printing, House of Representatives.

Inclosure: Joint resolution referred to,

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The resolution does not provide for incurring any new expenditure. It simply directs the Public Printer to supply these documents to the State Department out of the number ordinarily printed.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MASON. I ask unanimous consent to present at this time a very brief petition, and to have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The rules provide that petitions——

Mr. MASON. I know what the rules are. Do I understand there is objection?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas demands the regular order, which cuts off all requests for unanimous consent.

REDEMPTION OF NATIONAL-BANK-NOTES.

Mr. WEAVER. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER. It relates to the proper reference of a bill, the bill (H. R. 2012) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to invest the lawful money deposited in the Treasury, in trust, by national banking associations for the retirement of their circulating notes. This bill has been referred to the House Calendar, when it should have gone to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I send up the bill for the inspection of the Speaker.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to be heard one moment on this question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires first to read the bill.

Mr. WEAVER. If the Chair has any doubt upon the question, I wish to be heard myself.

The SPEAKER (having examined the bill). The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] will state his point of order.

Mr. WEAVER. My point of order is that this bill should be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the reason that it provides for the investment of trust funds for which the Government is responsible, funds amounting, according to the data we now have from the Treasury Department, to $81,600,000. The bill further provides for the sale under certain contingencies of the bonds which may be purchased with this money. It is in effect a bill appropriating money and providing for the disposition of Government property.

Now, there can be no process of reasoning with which I am familiar that would establish one rule to govern this House in the consideration of bills involving the appropriation of money belonging without any question to the Government, and another rule to control us when we are appropriating money belonging to somebody else. Certainly, when we occupy a fiduciary relation, we should be, if anything, more careful with trust funds than our own. This bill unquestionably provides for paying out of the Treasury $81,600,000, and more, of money, for the proper use of which the Government of the United States is responsible, and investing this money in the purchase of Government bonds, which bonds, in a contingency contemplated by the bill, may be sold upon the market. It is a disposition of property for which the Government is responsible.

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman will allow me, I suggest to him that as the sale of bonds is a measure involving a tax upon the people, this bill should for that reason, under another rule, receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman is quite correct.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this bill neither contains any words making any appropriation, nor requires any appropriation in order to execute its provisions. It provides simply that a certain fund which has been deposited in the United States Treasury by the national banks for the purpose of paying their outstanding circulating notes, which fund, I would remind the Chair, is being daily paid out of the Treasury without any appropriation, may be invested by the Secretary of the Treasury in United States bonds, those bonds to be held in the same way and for the same purpose as the lawful money which is to be used to make this investment. Therefore there can be no possible call for any appropriation, nor any charge upon the Treasury, in consequence of this measure. This lawful money, which is being daily paid out of the Treasury without an appropriation, because it is a fund put there for one specific purpose, may under this bill be used by the custodian of the fund for the purchase of an investment to be held temporarily for the same purpose as the lawful money which is proposed thus to be used.

The SPEAKER. Suppose after the Secretary of the Treasury has purchased these bonds they should depreciate and he should be compelled to sell them at a loss in order to realize funds to redeem notes of national banks, would not the Government of the United States be liable for the difference?

Mr. DINGLEY. These are the bonds of the Government itself. They are to take the place of greenbacks or the legal-tender notes of the Government, and the obligation of the Government in the form of bonds is as strong as its obligation in the form of notes.

The SPEAKER. The liability of the Government on the bonds is for 100 cents on the dollar, but if the Government purchases them at 125 cents on the dollar and when compelled to sell realizes only 110 cents on the dollar, would it not be liable to this fund for the difference of 15 cents on the dollar?

Mr. DINGLEY. But it must be remembered that the funds in the mean time will accumulate, which will provide for any such depreciation. But, sir, it makes no difference about what the reference may be in this direction. It seems that if the lawful money of the Government could be paid out of the Treasury without appropriation, then there would be no difficulty in doing just what is here proposed.

The SPEAKER. The point to which the Chair wishes to call the gentleman's attention is that so far as lawful money is concerned it remains in the Treasury, and the Government is liable for nothing, except the actual amount deposited; but if the Government purchased bonds and pays for them out of this fund at 125 cents on the dollar, and afterwards is compelled to sell and only realizes 110 on the dollar, then there are 15 cents on the dollar for which the Government is liable to this fund.

Mr. DINGLEY. But there is the accumulation of interest which would make up any depreciation of premium.

The SPEAKER. This is a question presented for the first time and for the first time the Chair has read the bill, and inasmuch as it is not necessary to decide at this moment, the Chair will hold it up until it is necessary to dispose of it, and will in the mean time examine the bill and the existing law.

Be it resolved by the senate (the house concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to secure legislation that will prohibit the sale of adulterated lard throughout the United States, unless on the package containing the same a true statement is given of the actual contents and of the proportion of genuine lard therein, and that they be further requested to aid in the passage of any bill now before Congress having in view the purpose above indicated.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution passed both houses of the Twenty-second General Assembly.

FRANK D. JACKSON,
Secretary of State.

GERMAN CEMETERY, PROSPECT HILL, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to submit a report on a resolution referred to that committee, and ask its present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the resolution of Mr. GUENTHER, of January 30, 1888, in the following words—

"Whereas the commissioners of the District of Columbia, in apparent violation of the act of Congress chartering the German Cemetery of Prospect Hill, in the said District, are attempting to extend certain streets of Washington through this cemetery: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia are hereby instructed to inquire into this matter and report the result of their inquiries to this House; and that the said committee is hereby empowered to summon such witnesses as may be necessary to aid this inquiry, to examine them under oath; and that the expenses of such investigation be paid out of the contingent fund of the House"— have considered the same, and report the said resolution back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BILLS OF LADING AS EVIDENCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour for the consideration of bills commences at twelve minutes after 1 o'clock, and the call rests with the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up for consideration the unfinished business, being the bill (H. R. 1527) to make bills of lading conclusive evidence in certain cases, and yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the committee had submitted an amendment to the bill, but a conference amongst the members of the committee since has resulted in an agreement to substitute a modified amendment for that previously offered and which more nearly and clearly expresses the opinions of the committee.

I ask leave to withdraw the amendment offered yesterday and substitute the one I now send to the desk, which is a change of the verbiage.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the new amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to insert in section 1, first line of the bill, the following after the word "water:" "or its agent authorized to execute and deliver bills of lading;" so that, if amended, the section will read:

"That whenever any common carrier by land or water, or its agent authorized to execute and deliver bills of lading, signs and delivers any bill of lading," etc.

Mr. OATES. I ask for a vote upon the pending amendment; that which the committee substitute for the amendment offered on yesterday. In other words, I ask that the committee be allowed to perfect their substitute before action is taken upon other amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just sent to the desk by the gentleman from Alabama, which the Clerk will again report.

The amendment was again read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on the adoption of the substitute as amended.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have an amendment which I desire to offer to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama is entitled to the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. OATES. I yield to have the amendment read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That this act shall not apply in case of any bill of lading given for goods packed in boxes, barrels, crates, or any other inclosed package, and so described in such bill of lading.

Mr. OATES. I can not yield for the purpose of allowing the amendment to be offered. I do not yield the floor.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then the gentleman will probably require to have a quorum to pass his bill.

Mr. OATES. I shall yield the floor to the gentleman from New Jersey to allow him to express his opposition to the bill as soon as I have stated the purpose of the bill to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

Mr. OATES. The object of legislation of a remedial character like this should always be to correct any error or defect that has been ascertained to exist in the law by the very best means, to avoid the trouble, to cure it, to remedy the defect. The committee think that this bill does remedy a defect in the existing law.

Some years ago a bill of lading was given by Cobb & Co., as agents of Vinton, the owner of the steam-boat Ben Franklin, plying the waters of the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers, for 150 bales of cotton. The cotton in fact was not delivered for shipment. The bill of lading was transferred for value to a banker named Pollard, in New York, who paid for it $5,900. Afterwards, when the cotton was not delivered, a suit was brought by Pollard in the United States court, in Kentucky, to recover from Vinton, the owner of the vessel. It was held by the Supreme Court that Vinton, the owner of the vessel, a common carrier, was not liable; that the bill of lading in the hands of the third party was void for the reason that in fact no cotton was shipped.

There was a question of agency considered by the court, and also the question as to the character of the bill of lading. The court's construction of the authorization of Cobb & Co. was that the issuance of a bill of lading in the absence of the delivery of the freight to the boat was outside of their authority. However, the court sets forth broadly a principle applicable to bills of lading, and cites a former adjudication in 18 Howard, maintaining the English rule, that in case a bill of lading is given by the master of a vessel, or it may be the owner of a vessel, and the freight described therein is not delivered, even though it passes into the hands of a third party, who is a purchaser in good faith, he can not recover because it is not invested with that commercial quality pertaining to a bill of exchange. It is in the hands of an innocent third party, subject to all the equities existing between the antecedent parties; and, as a matter of course, if no freight is delivered the holder of a bill of lading can not recover of the carrier.

The object of the present bill is wherever a carrier, whether it be an individual or a corporation, aggregate or sole, gives a bill of lading purporting to be for goods delivered, and that bill of lading for valuable consideration passes into the hands of an innocent purchaser before the goods are due at the point of destination, that the carrier shall, when sued on that bill for failure to deliver, be estopped from denying the recital in the bill that the goods were actually delivered.

The committee think this should be the law in the interest of common honesty. There is a doubt about how far the question of estoppel would go, some maintaining the idea that the carrier would be estopped by the recital in the bill, others holding that the case is the same as that of a promissory note, not payable in bank, not governed by the commercial law in which all the equities of the maker can be asserted against it in the hands of a transferee, unless the transferee has inquired of the maker and received assurances from him that it is all right.

There is a difference of opinion on this question. Whether the one be right or the other, there is a manifest defect in the law; and in this commercial age in a country where large shipments of grain are made from the West and of cotton from the South to the East, these bills of lading ought to be conclusive against the carrier so far as to the extent of the recital of a receipt of the thing to be shipped. For if this is not the law it either embraces these commercial transactions or the carrier places in the hands of another a paper by which he may perpetrate a fraud upon some honest party.

Therefore the bill offered by the committee as a substitute is in the interest of honest transactions, and in my judgment it ought to pass. It takes effect from and after its passage.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] desires to say anything in opposition, I will yield five minutes to him to do so.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have no doubt that this bill was intended to serve a very worthy purpose, but in my judgment the language of the bill is very unfortunate in effecting that purpose. It goes far beyond what I believe the advocates of the bill intended it should go. This matter has been discussed in the National Board of Trade for a number of years, and, according to my recollection, it has failed in every instance to receive the commendation of that body.

I can understand how some one on some occasion has executed and delivered and had discounted a fraudulent bill of lading; I can understand why it is necessary to have that practice stopped; but I can not understand why that practice can not be put a period to without extending the provisions of the law as far as this proposed legislation would extend them. Let us see what this proposed legislation says. It says that if a common carrier or its lawfully authorized agent signs a bill of lading such carrier shall be responsible to the bona fide holder of that bill of lading, not for the goods delivered to the carrier, but for the goods described in the bill of lading. Now, what will be the effect of that provision? It will be precisely this: That every common carrier will refuse to receive goods inclosed in packages until the packages have been opened for the inspection of its agents, and in nine cases out of ten that would be a very serious interference with trade and commerce. The amendment which I sought to offer exempts goods in inclosed packages from the operation of the bill.

I can understand, as I have already said, why it is necessary to have legislation of some sort upon this matter, but it is legislation which needs to be very carefully considered. The man who delivers grain in bulk to a common carrier ships an article which the agents of the carrier can easily examine and identify, but the man in New York who ships a box of silks, packed tightly as they are, ships a box containing the carrier knows not what, and the carrier has no way to indemnify or protect himself except by an actual inspection of the goods, which, as I have said, would generally amount to a serious interruption of trade and commerce.

Mr. OATES. If the goods were described in the bill of lading as a box said to contain so and so, though in fact the box contained something different, I ask the gentleman whether the carrier would be bound upon that false representation? Does he not know as a lawyer that the carrier would not be bound?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then I ask the gentleman what does the negotiability of his bill of lading amount to if it is a mere negation? You destroy the character of the bill of lading so that it will not be discounted by any careful owner of capital. I see no reason why this additional impediment to trade should be enacted. I do not care about the companies, but I represent shippers who ship very largely in inclosed packages, and I know that if this bill becomes a law in the shape proposed, we shall receive practically no qualified bills of lading, or else we shall be compelled to have every package opened for the inspection of the agent of the carrier before he signs the bill. I had hoped that the gentleman would permit some amendment which would exclude from the operation of this proposed law goods inclosed in packages, but since he refuses to yield for that purpose, all that I can do is to call the attention of the House to what I believe will be the pernicious effect of this legislation, and to resort to every parliamentary means to defeat it.

Mr. OATES. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAVIS], the author of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, these proceedings have disclosed the fact that there are certain grave abuses under existing law which should be redressed. A regularly appointed officer of a railroad or transportation company authorized to issue bills of lading does issue such bills in regular form, and if he be a broker attaches such bill of lading to a draft, negotiates that draft, which, together with the bill of lading, is forwarded to purchasers of the goods alleged to have been delivered for collection. The draft is accepted and paid when the purchaser finds that there are no such goods in existence, and that he has been deliberately swindled by the agent of the railroad. One of these agents doing business in Georgia robbed in this manner parties in my own State and New Hampshire and Maine to the extent of about $250,000.

And a similar case of rascality, not so large in amount, but still very large, has since occurred. It is a crime that can be committed with comparative impunity, because it is usual for weeks and even months to elapse before the goods represented by the bill of lading arrive. Of course, before the fraud is known the swindler can easily escape with his booty. Under this state of facts ought not the railroad company to be responsible for the acts of its agent? It is admitted that if the goods are once placed within its custody it would be. Can the purchaser have any better evidence, or, indeed, in the course of commerce between distant points, any other evidence than the bill of lading? It is regarded everywhere as an undoubted and the very best guaranty that these goods are in the custody of the common carrier to be delivered, barring unavoidable accidents, to the buyer. The commercial transactions of the civilized world are based upon the faith of this guaranty, and countless millions of dollars in both hemispheres are risked with undoubting confidence upon it.

Entire fortunes, whose loss would involve bankruptcy, are daily moving over the land and floating on the seas without a moment's uneasiness as regards the validity of these evidences of value. This confidence is, and from the nature of business must be, broad and unquestioning, as unquestioning as are the pages of Holy Writ to the child who reverently reads them at its mother's knee, and as broad as are the lakes and lands and oceans over which commerce speeds her way. Now, if it be found that this bill of lading, when duly signed by an officer, is not conclusive evidence of the delivery of the goods, it will seriously impair that confidence which is the very life and soul of business and without which it would languish and decay. All your bills for the relief of commerce would be of little avail if the officers of railroad and transportation companies can prey upon it with impunity. Why should not these companies be held responsible for the acts of their officers and agents? They act through them; the bill of lading is their instrument. That ancient principle which lies at the very foundation of common law and of justice, "Qui facit per alium facit per se," applies with full force to this case. The company must act through its officers, and the terms of the bill of lading are its official declaration, just as specifically as the report of its treasurer or the declaration of the result of the election of officers, and just as distinctly as if signed by the president and board of directors.

It is urged that the principal has not given his agent authority to commit fraud. This view is at best merely technical. This principal has given him the opportunity and the power while in the direct line of his duty to commit these frauds, against which the business community is powerless. The purchaser may be hundreds or thousands of miles from the point of supposed delivery to the common carrier; he receives the bill of lading with a draft attached which has already been honored, and which he is called upon to accept upon the instant. If he declines until he receive the goods the bank will refuse to cash future drafts, and the honest agents—who of course vastly outnumber the dishonest—who need the money to pay the seller will also decline to make further transactions with a purchaser who pursues this course.

In a word, I know that Northern purchasers of cotton will run all the risks connected with the present methods rather than to decline to accept a draft with such bills attached. They have therefore no remedy, and are at the mercy of railroad and transportation companies and their dishonest agents unless Congress afford relief.

On the other hand, the common carriers can protect themselves first by the exercise of due care in the selection of their agents and then by exercising that watchful supervision over them which will insure a faithful and efficient performance of their duties. They can also guard their interests by requiring that bills of lading shall be countersigned by a responsible officer of the company. Indeed, by taking proper precautions the railroad and transportation companies would incur but little risk. I am confident that as an act of simple justice to the holders of bills of lading the substitute reported by the committee should be adopted.

Finally, in reply to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN], let me say that as I understand the bill it would not make the common carrier responsible, where the goods were actually delivered, to any greater extent than it is responsible to-day.

Mr. OATES. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL].

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, there is an obvious wrong in permitting common carriers to issue bills of lading for goods which they have not received, permitting parties to obtain advances of money, in good faith, upon those bills of lading and afterwards permitting the carriers to deny that they ever received the goods at all. The committee have fully considered the subject. To meet the difficulty suggested by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] the shipper has only to note on his bill of lading that the contents of the boxes or packages are inclosed, and that is the ordinary and usual custom of shipping such goods now. It has been well settled that common carriers are not responsible for the kind or quality of goods, and this bill only undertakes to say that they shall not be permitted to issue a bill of lading reciting that they have received one hundred boxes or packages of goods, and then afterwards to deny that they received more than seventy. It is to meet simply the bill of lading itself and not to allow them afterwards to deny the truth of the statement embodied in the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Do I, then, understand the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] to say that in order to meet the objection which I raise against this proposed legislation I, as a shipper of goods, will be compelled to take a receipt from the company for so many boxes "contents unknown?"

Mr. CASWELL. You can do that.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But would not I be compelled to do it?

Mr. CASWELL. You, as a common carrier, are bound only by the number of boxes which are recited in your bill of lading, and to that extent you ought to be bound and not be suffered to deny afterwards, when parties have advanced money in good faith on the strength of that bill of lading, that you ever received that number.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But my point is this: In order to secure a more definite receipt from the carrier would not I, as a shipper, be compelled to open and expose the contents of the boxes to his agent?

Mr. CASWELL. The common carrier has never been obliged to describe in his bill of lading the contents of the boxes when they are not exposed, and they never will be by this bill; when he recites in his bill of lading what appears upon the face of the packages offered for shipping, "contents unknown," he is not bound any further.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, the reasons that make any measure on this subject proper or necessary arise out of the law as interpreted by the Supreme Court.

It is held that a common carrier is not bound by a bill of lading executed and delivered by its agent in the hands of a bona fide holder for value, if in fact the goods or property named in the bill of lading were not in fact delivered for shipment.

I think this construction of the law is correct; but in view of the fact of the immense growth of interstate commerce and the necessity for the constant use of bills of lading in commercial enterprises and the business of the country, I believe the law should be changed.

It is not so well settled that a common carrier is not bound by a bill of lading executed by itself in the hands of a bona fide holder for value, if in fact the property or goods named in the bill of lading had not been delivered to the carrier for shipment; but that the tendency of the decisions is in that direction can not be questioned.

It was, therefore, deemed proper to make the proposed change in the law applicable to bills of lading executed and delivered either by a common carrier or by its agent.

The effect of the measure, if it should become a law, will not be to make a bill of lading negotiable in the sense that a bill of exchange or promissory note is; but under its provisions a common carrier will be estopped from denying the truth of the recitals in the bill of lading, whether the same be executed by the carrier or its agent.

It is not proposed to conclude common carriers from any defense arising out of causes which, under the law, excuse a compliance with their contracts.

In view of the facility with which agents of common carriers defraud the public by confederating with pretended or dishonest shippers in the execution and delivery of false and misleading bills of lading, the committee approved this bill with the amendment which has been adopted and recommended its passage.

I think the objection urged by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] ought not to prevail, as in my opinion the carrier may guard its liability by proper recitations in the bill of lading.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then what effect is this law to have, if they can drive a cart and oxen through it?

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not think they can. Mr. Speaker, I will not detain the House with further observations, though if I had time I would like to have read the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. OATES. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM].

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, the object of this measure, as I understand, is that when a bill of lading is presented to a merchant or a banker he may have some certainty that he is making advances upon such property as is described in the bill of lading. Suppose an authorized agent of a railroad company constantly issuing bills of lading should combine with a person outside to issue a fraudulent bill of lading. Suppose money should be advanced upon such fraudulent bill of lading by a merchant, who in turn draws a draft upon a consignee in a distant city. Suppose after a bank advances money upon this draft it should turn out that the property described was never received by the railroad company. Then the question arises, who is to suffer, the railroad company which placed its agent in a position where he could defraud the public, or the bank or merchant that holds the bill of lading, having accepted it innocently and in the regular course of business? It seems to me proper and necessary that in a case of this kind the transporting company that placed this man in a position where he could defraud the public should suffer, not the man who innocently advanced his money.

I happen to know that a case once occurred in which a swindler in collusion with the agent of a railroad company issued a bill of lading for 100 barrels of pork. After the bill of lading was issued, the party receiving it borrowed money upon it from a banker; but when the property arrived at its destination and was opened, there turned out to be, instead of 100 barrels of pork, 100 barrels of sand. Now, the railroad company placed that agent in a position to consummate this fraud; and the bank which advanced the money upon the bill of lading, which was apparently issued regularly by the railroad company, should not be asked to suffer loss through the fraudulent act of the company's agent. This bill will prevent such occurrences; will make railroad and steamboat companies responsible for the acts of their agents, and not require the general public to suffer by frauds of which it could have had no knowledge.

I hope that the bill will be passed in the form reported, though I have no particular objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN]. He may be correct in saying that under the operation of this bill the railroad companies may require the opening of all packages. The bill may compel transporting companies to see that they place no man in a position where he can defraud the public. I do not know that the amendment is necessary; yet I see no particular harm in it. The transporting companies will at any rate be compelled to look out what freight they receipt for and whom they authorize to issue receipts.

The great amount of money advanced upon bills of lading as security necessarily demands safety, and the law should be so plain as to protect beyond question the business man and his banker.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I have heard but one objection urged against this bill, and I think that is a misapprehension of the effect of the bill in case it becomes a law. That objection is raised by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN]. He maintains that a common carrier would be responsible for the contents of sealed packages when he did not know the contents when he gave the bill of lading. Under this law, in the event it becomes a law, and I hope it will, the common carrier is presented with a sealed package for transportation. If that be described in a bill of lading or in whatever form it may be, said to contain or purport to contain whatever the shipper says, and that bill be transferred to a purchaser, and the box, bag, or package, as described, is transferred and delivered by the railroad company or other common carrier, and the contents turn out to be different and there was no change of the contents by the common carrier, but the fraud rested with the shipper, the common carrier would not be responsible; that fraud would exist for adjustment between the shipper and the transferee of the bill of lading. If the shipper sold that bill of lading to a party for value, and that party saw fit to accept that description of the common carrier who only represented and described in that bill that it was said to contain so and so, it is no warranty on his part that it did contain it. The common carrier is responsible for the delivery of the box, bag, or package delivered to him. Therefore the gentleman's objection is not well founded.

Why, sir, this bill simply proposes to make a common carrier, if he has a dishonest agent who gives a bill of lading for goods not delivered, responsible for the act. It is based on principles of the broadest equity. It is a maxim of the law that where one of two parties must suffer, that party who is the most in fault must bear the loss. In case of the purchase of such a bill by an honest broker, or banker, or factor, he who is most in fault should be responsible for the loss. In the case of the purchase of such a bill, who is most in fault and ought to be responsible for the loss—the common carrier who has given the false bill, or the man who, acting in good faith, believes the common carrier has thus acted, and pays his money for it?

I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; there being on a division—ayes 108, noes 4.

The substitute was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. OATES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RETIREMENT OF CIRCULATING NOTES OF BANKS.

Mr. DINGLEY. I call up for consideration a bill (H. R. 2012) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to invest the lawful money deposited in the Treasury in trust by national banking associations for the retirement of their circulating notes.

Mr. WEAVER. That does not do away with my point that this bill must be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Speaker of the House is holding that point under consideration.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let it be reserved.

The Speaker took the chair.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration, by instruction of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill the title of which has just been read. I wish to say in reference to that bill, that an arrangement has been made by gentlemen on both sides of the House that its further consideration shall be postponed for one week.

The SPEAKER. Not waiving the question made by the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. DINGLEY. No, sir.

Mr. WEAVER, I do not wish to be precluded by the remarks of the gentleman from Maine as to any arrangement. I ask him with whom he made any such arrangement?

Mr. DINGLEY. It is not necessary I should make any answer to that question.

Mr. WEAVER. I had a conversation with the gentleman, and said this, which I will verify, that I would take the matter into consideration. I can not consent to any arrangement.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the bill be reported.

The bill was read.

Mr. DINGLEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from Iowa made the point of order that this bill should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole, and allows that point of order to be reserved.

I now move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until after the morning hour for the consideration of bills on Wednesday next.

Mr. WEAVER. That motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. It is in order when the bill is up for consideration.

Mr. WEAVER. With the point of order pending?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order if insisted upon.

Mr. MILLS. This is a very important bill. I think the House ought to take some time for its consideration, and have an opportunity to examine it fully. I am willing that the motion of the gentleman from Maine shall prevail.

Mr. WEAVER. With the understanding that it shall be considered in the morning hour, I have no objection; but I do not waive the point of order when it comes up.

Mr. MILLS. I do not care when it is considered. I only want to have time.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask that it be permitted to go over with the point of order pending.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The right of a committee to call up a given bill for consideration in the morning hour exists under the rules. If the consideration of that bill be entered upon and not concluded in that hour it goes over until the next morning hour, and if not concluded in that second morning hour it goes upon the Calendar as unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. That is the rule.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Then the parliamentary inquiry I wish to submit is this: whether, in view of the existence of that rule, it is competent for the gentleman from Maine, by a mere motion changing the hour for the consideration of this bill, to change or alter the rule which fixes the order of business for the House. If there is a point of order to be made against such a proceeding, I wish to make it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has had occasion heretofore to decide that question. The rule of the House is, as stated by the gentleman from Kansas, that under no circumstances can a committee, under that particular rule, occupy more than the two hours, one on each morning, in the consideration of a given bill.

But the Chair has decided that when a bill is up for consideration during one of these hours, it must be considered under the general rules of the House, and under those general rules is subject to any parliamentary motions, the motion to postpone the consideration to a day fixed being one of them. Hence it may be postponed to a particular day, not being made thereby a special order for that day in the ordinary sense of the term, but an order to be called up for consideration on that day, and the House can then decide whether it will or will not consider it. That, of course, will take it out of the morning hour, unless a contrary arrangement be made.

Mr. BLAND. It does not relieve it of the disabilities of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It will, unless otherwise determined by the House.

Mr. BLAND. If the bill is sent to the Committee of the Whole, there may be no reason for objecting to its consideration in the way proposed; but unless it goes to the Committee of the Whole there may be some doubt as to the propriety of allowing this motion to go through.

The SPEAKER. The Chair perhaps had better decide the point of order at once.

The Chair was at first inclined to sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from Iowa, upon the ground that this bill did, or at least might, create an additional liability on the part of the Government. But upon examination the Chair finds that the liability of the Government is fixed and limited by existing law, which is not proposed to be changed by the bill.

Under no circumstances can the Government become liable for a larger sum than is required to redeem the outstanding notes of national banks. For this sum the Government is liable in any event; so that this bill can make no difference in the liability of the Government in that respect, whether the bonds shall fluctuate in value or not. The Government is liable under the law as it exists for every dollar of national-bank notes for the redemption of which money has been deposited; and it is entitled, the Chair thinks, as the law now stands, to any part of that money which may remain after the redemption of the outstanding notes.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the Chair permit me a moment?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. WEAVER. It is true that the Government is liable for the redemption of the notes; but the law provides that the national banks shall deposit with the Government every dollar necessary for the redemption of these outstanding notes, dollar for dollar. Now, if the Government of the United States invests that money in an enterprise that may result in loss, why, the Government has squandered the funds which the national banks have deposited for the redemption of their outstanding notes, and hence must make good the loss. I think the Chair was right in his first impression as to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. While it is true that the Government may lose in its financial operations, the question that the Chair is called upon to decide is, whether this particular bill creates an additional liability. And the Chair holds that it does not.

Mr. WEAVER. But I only claim that it may create a liability.

Mr. BLAND. It seems to involve a tax, under the rule, for the issuance of the bonds.

The SPEAKER. The Government is not to issue any original or new bonds under the provisions of the bill. If the Government purchases the bonds, and afterwards it is necessary to sell them to realize funds to redeem outstanding national-bank notes, it sells the old bonds, the liability for which is already fixed by law.

Mr. BLAND. It would authorize the sale of bonds, and that would certainly involve a tax.

The SPEAKER. The Government is now liable for those bonds.

Mr. BLAND. If they bought them at a premium and sold them for less, that is a loss for which the Government would be liable.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated the Government may possibly in the future incur some loss in its financial transactions; but that does not present a question of order. It is a question of policy to be determined by the executive department of the Government if this bill becomes a law.

Mr. BLAND. Then we will oppose any postponement of this bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. My point is this: The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] has brought this bill before the House in the morning hour, and under the rule we are entitled to debate. I wish to know whether, so long as any one wishes to debate the bill, the gentleman can make his motion to postpone its consideration to a day certain.

The SPEAKER. The bill is now up for consideration, as the Chair has stated, and is subject to all the usual parliamentary motions. Any gentleman who is entitled to the floor for that purpose may make the motion to postpone to a day certain, or to postpone indefinitely, or to lay on the table, or for the previous question, or any other of the usual parliamentary motions which can be made during the pending of a legislative proposition. There is no time fixed for debate. Any gentleman who gets the floor under the rules is entitled to one hour for debate, and may yield portions of his time to other gentlemen. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] is recognized for one hour. After his hour expires the Chair, under the practice which prevails, would recognize some gentleman in opposition to the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. But as I understand, there has been no debate so far upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. None whatever.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask the gentleman from Maine will he consent to debate?

Mr. DINGLEY. The consideration hour of to-day has almost expired.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. There will be another hour to-morrow.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have moved that the consideration of the bill be postponed, in order that various gentlemen who have not yet investigated the subject may have an opportunity to obtain needed information upon it, and that certain information which the Secretary of the Treasury is seeking may be obtained.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. My suggestion is that it would expedite us in understanding the bill, if its provisions and the necessity for its passage should now be explained to the House by the gentleman from Maine, or other gentlemen, in this morning hour and the morning hour to-morrow. I think the gentleman from Maine ought to consent to that.

Mr. DINGLEY. Allow me simply to say I should be perfectly willing to go on with the debate now; but gentlemen on both sides have besought me that this bill should not be entered upon in debate to-day, so that all members may have an opportunity to obtain further information. In response to their request I have made the motion. I am not particularly concerned about it myself.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. They could read the RECORD to-morrow and obtain the needed information from the gentleman's statement. As I understand it, the procedure of the gentleman from Maine really prevents debate at this time.

The SPEAKER. The hour for consideration has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I am very happy to hear it.

Mr. SPRINGER. The bill will come up again to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It can be called up to-morrow in the morning hour.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. HEARD. I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on the District of Columbia, having been necessarily absent when that committee was called this morning. I make the report now, in order that it may be printed.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEARD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 4283, a bill (H. R. 6899) to incorporate the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railroad Company of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. 4283 was laid on the table.

MERCHANT TAILORS' NATIONAL EXCHANGE.

Mr. MASON. I renew my request to have a short petition printed in the RECORD, the objection having been withdrawn. I ask also that the names be printed. There are only six names.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The petition, which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned delegates, representing the Merchant Tailors' National Exchange of the United States, the business of the members of which exchange is the manufacture of fine custom work to order, having waited upon the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and solicited the privilege of laying before the members of said committee facts illustrating the discriminating injustice of the present tariff law against the business of merchant tailoring, and having been refused the privilege of a hearing by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, beg leave to lay their petition before your honorable bodies.

The object of our visit to the Capitol was to bring to the attention of the Committee on Ways and Means the fact that under the existing tariff we are required to pay heavier rates of duty on the material for garments than are demanded upon finished garments of the same material imported from other countries, while the rates of labor paid for the manufacture of custom clothing in this country is never less than 200 per cent. above the wages paid for like work in England or on the Continent. We beg to submit to the consideration of your honorable bodies the fact that, with this difference in the wages of home and foreign labor, and the discrimination of the tariff against domestic producers of fine clothes, including alike the merchant and his employés, leading houses find it to their advantage to maintain establishments in foreign countries, while foreign houses maintain corps of solicitors, whose advertisements soliciting custom are found from time to time in the advertising mediums of our leading cities or circulated by circular letters through the post-offices.

The undersigned therefore, on behalf of the Merchant Tailors' National Exchange, petition your honorable bodies to do the many thousands of American citizens engaged in the manufacture of clothing in this country the simple justice to increase the rates of duty in harmony with the increased amount of labor involved in the production of clothing, as well as a compensation in the rates of duties for the difference existing in the rates of wages for the same work in this and other countries.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM MILLIGAN,
President Merchant Tailors' National Exchange, Philadelphia.
G. W. MATTHEWS, Chicago, Ill.,
ROBERT STEWART, Philadelphia,
C. C. F. EICHELER, Baltimore, Md.,
GEO. T. KEEN, Washington, D. C.,
JOHN PATTERSON, New York,
Delegates.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, submitted the following proposed amendment of the rules; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Amend the rules by adding the following as Rule XLVII:

"The bills founded on reports from the Court of Claims under the acts of March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, favorably reported from a committee in and remaining undisposed of by a former Congress shall, with the accompanying reports, be committed to the Committee of the Whole House and treated as petitions, and shall be first in order for consideration on the Private Calendar."

DUTIES ON AGRICULTURAL MACHINERY.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE, by unanimous consent, presented the following petition; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned would respectfully petition your honorable body to abolish all import duties on agricultural machinery, such as plows, harrows, seeding-machines, hay and grain harvesting machines, thrashing-machines, straw-cutting machines, feed-grinding mills, farm vehicles, including farm wagons, that may be imported to the United States from countries that admit like machines manufactured in the United States free of duty.

Your petitioner would represent that he is a manufacturer of agricultural machinery at the city of Madison, Wis.; that he believes that import duties on all such articles of manufacture are superfluous and useless; that they only harm the producer, and are of no value to any one.

Your petitioner would further represent that the law imposing such duties works harm to the manufacturer of the goods named, in this, that there are citizens who continually represent that the import duties on the goods named compel the agriculturist to pay much higher prices for them than he would if no duties were imposed, which allegations, while incorrect and untrue, nevertheless cause ill-feeling on the part of agriculturists toward the manufacturers of such implements, which ill-feeling may be wholly avoided by abolishing the import duties on them.

Your petitioner would further represent that he believes American workingmen should be protected against foreign cheap labor by suitable import duties, but that the manufacture of agricultural implements is in such advanced state, and that our implements are so superior to those of foreign manufacture, that none will be imported if the duties on them be wholly discontinued.

Trusting that Congress will take early action on this petition, your petitioner will ever remain,

Your obedient servant,

J. A. JOHNSON,

President Fuller & Johnson Manufacturing Company, Madison, Wis.

SOPHIA B. MOORE.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3902) for the relief of Sophia B. Moore, and to put the same upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims be, and it is hereby, authorized to grant a rehearing in the case of Sophia B. Moore vs. The United States, No. 3446 of said court, with full power and jurisdiction to hear and determine and render judgment for the proceeds of the rosin and turpentine claimed to have been seized by the United States officers at the capture of New Berne in March, 1862, and belonging to William P. Moore, jr., which rosin and turpentine are claimed to have been taken to Philadelphia, libeled, and sold by the marshal of the eastern district of Pennsylvania, under the direction of the Federal court, and the proceeds thereof deposited in the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to have any effect or operation beyond the case herein specially named.

Mr. REED. Let the report be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read, the right to object being reserved.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3902) for the relief of Sophia B. Moore, report as follows:

The facts out of which this bill for relief arises will be found stated in House Report No. 723 of the Committee on War Claims of the Forty-eighth Congress, a copy of which is hereto annexed and made a part of this report.

Your committee adopt the said report as their own, and report back the bill and recommend its passage.

[House Report No. 723, Forty-eighth Congress, first session.]

Upon the capture of New Berne in March, 1862, by the Union forces, there was seized by them a large quantity of personal property, consisting of rosin, turpentine, tar, lumber, etc., belonging to the citizens of that city, which was shipped under the directions of Commodore Rowan to New York and Philadelphia, where the several cargoes were proceeded against in the admiralty courts of the respective districts, and under the decrees of said courts the property was sold and the proceeds held to await the final decrees of the courts.

The owners appearing as claimants in the New York court, the proceeds of those shipments were by the decree of that court turned over to such claimants. No claimants appearing in the Philadelphia court, it was, in May, 1864, decreed by said court that whereas the property so seized was not lawful subject of prize of war, but was captured property under the provisions of the act of March 12, 1863, that the proceeds of such property (after deducting all expenses), amounting to $44,318.26, be turned into the United States Treasury, where it was placed to the credit of the captured and abandoned property fund.

This fund being in the nature of a trust fund, as declared by the Supreme Court, for the benefit of the owners thereof under the provisions of the several acts of Congress relating thereto, has been held separate and apart from other moneys of the Government and only subject to the claims of the lawful owners thereof, established by legal authority; and, so far as this committee are advised, no portion of this particular part of such fund, placed therein under the decree of said court, has ever been disbursed.

Among the articles so seized were 2,000 barrels of rosin and 50 casks of turpentine, belonging to William P. Moore, jr., a brother of memorialist, who afterwards died, leaving the memorialist his sole legatee, she taking upon herself the support of her widowed mother. The net proceeds of this property, as included in the decree of said court, were $15,270.

The memorialist, by her guardian (she then being a minor), instituted suit in the Court of Claims for such proceeds under the provisions of the act of March 12, 1863, and although the court unanimously found the facts to be as above stated, yet a majority of said court held as a matter of law that the act of March, 1863, was not retroactive in its operation, and therefore that the court had not jurisdiction in the premises.

It seems to your committee that the case comes within the spirit of the several acts of Congress relating to captured and abandoned property, if not within the letter, and as the court has established the justice of the case in favor of the memorialist, which facts as found by said court are fully sustained by the proofs, this committee deem it advisable, inasmuch as the Court of Claims has in its files the evidence upon which the former judgment was rendered and may hear any additional evidence that may be adduced by either party, that the court should retain the control of said matter for the purpose of adjudication, with complete jurisdiction thereof, and therefore, for the purpose of correcting the technical want of jurisdiction in said court, report the accompanying bill.

Mr. REED. Can the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] tell us whether the question of loyalty is involved in this case?

Mr. SIMMONS. Not at all.

Mr. REED. Why is it that the Court of Claims declined to decree in favor of this party?

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] that the refusal of the court was not upon that ground, but upon an entirely different ground. The Court of Claims passed upon the question of loyalty of the claimant and decided it in favor of the claimant. It further passed upon the question whether the claimant had in fact owned and lost the property, and it decided that question also in favor of the claimant. But the claimant brought the proceeding before the court under the act of March 3, 1863. The property was seized in May, 1862, and the court held that the act of March, 1863, had no retroactive operation, and that, therefore, the court was without jurisdiction to determine this case. The action of the court was purely upon the ground of a lack of jurisdiction.

Mr. REED. Was there not a series of proceedings with regard to all this abandoned property?

Mr. SIMMONS. There were two lots of this abandoned property. One lot was shipped by order of Commodore Rowan to New York City. Shortly after it was shipped the claimants appeared in court and instituted proceedings and obtained possession of the funds arising from the sale of that property. The other lot was shipped to Philadelphia, and there taken charge of by the admiralty court; and a decree was made ordering the property to be sold, and the proceeds to be placed to the credit of the captured and abandoned property fund.

Subsequently the court held that this property was not lawful prize of war, but that it was captured and abandoned property, and ordered that it be credited to that fund to await the application of claimants. No claimant ever appeared in the Philadelphia court, and none has ever appeared to claim that property until this memorialist made her application. The proceeds of the sale of the property sold under the order of the admiralty court in Philadelphia amounted to $44,000. That money is now in the Treasury. No part of it has ever been paid out; no part of it has ever been claimed by anybody but this memorialist.

Mr. REED. But were there not a series of actions or claims made against the Government in respect to this fund called the captured and abandoned property fund?

Mr. SIMMONS. None in respect to this particular lot.

Mr. REED. No, but in regard to the general fund.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think not, only——

Mr. REED. Claims which are now barred by the statute of limitations.

Mr. SIMMONS. Well, sir, I don't know whether they are barred by the statute of limitations or not. That question was not presented before the Court of Claims. This action was instituted many years ago, and the unfavorable judgment was rendered on account of the legal technicalities to which I have just alluded. The court found that the property was lost; that it was taken possession of by the Government; that it was sold; that the money is now in the Treasury; that it is separate and apart from any other money in the Treasury, and that this claimant, who was an infant at the time of the seizure, has never been paid any part of it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. This bill will be reached on the Private Calendar in a very short time, and as it involves a very important matter and a large sum of money I think it had better wait for its turn.

ANDREW GLEESON.

Mr. WARNER. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a bill now on the Private Calendar, the bill (H. R. 2592) for the relief of Andrew Gleeson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Andrew Gleeson the sum of $289.17, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full payment for furnishing and grading materials (earth, soil, and gravel) upon the grounds south of the Executive Mansion, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, during the fiscal year ending June 30, A. D. 1882.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MANSUR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2592) for the relief of Andrew Gleeson, having considered the same, submits the following:

This claim was before the Committee on Claims of the Forty-ninth Congress, which submitted the annexed report, which is adopted by this committee. The bill is returned with the recommendation that it do pass.

"The Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6794) for the relief of Andrew Gleeson, having considered the same, submits the following report:

"That the claimant, Andrew Gleeson, had a contract with the proper officers 'for furnishing and grading materials (earth, soil, and gravel) upon the grounds south of the Executive Mansion during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1882.'

"By the terms of this contract Mr. Gleeson was to furnish and grade the materials in such quantities as the officer in charge might direct.

"Mr. Gleeson left the city for a time, leaving his contract and its performance in charge of an agent, who failed to prosecute said work to the satisfaction of the Government, and accordingly the contract was annulled, and 'all retained percentage or other moneys due him by reason of said contract had under its terms become forfeited to the United States.'

"The total amount so forfeited was $289.17, consisting of $115.77 percentage retained on two payments made Mr. Gleeson, August 26 and December 5, 1881, respectively, and $173.40 for work performed under the contract and not paid for. On March 31, 1882, the Government being satisfied that the failure on the part of Mr. Gleeson 'to carry out his contract was not due to neglect on his part, but rather to bad faith on the part of his agent, it was determined by General Wright, in charge of said work, not to class Mr. Gleeson 'as a defaulting contractor.' Mr. Gleeson then requested to be permitted to go on with his contract, but this was refused, the contract for said work having been let to another at the same price which Mr. Gleeson was to receive. The committee is of the opinion that Mr. Gleeson acted in good faith, and the Government has sustained no loss by reason of any of his acts.

"Therefore, the committee is of the opinion that the amount retained from the claimant, as stated above, should be paid him, and return the bill (H. R. 6794) with the recommendation that it do pass."

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. FRANCES MARSHALL.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent to take up from the Private Calendar and put upon its passage the bill (H. R. 326) for the relief of Mrs. Frances Marshall.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Frances Marshall, widow of General Humphrey Marshall, of Louisville, Ky., the sum of $1,086.83, being the net proceeds of the sale of a library belonging to her, but erroneously seized and sold as the property of her husband, Humphrey Marshall, under an order of the United States district court for the southern district of Ohio, under act of July 19, 1862.

Mr. PAYSON. Let the report be read, the right to object being meanwhile reserved.

The report (by Mr. PENINGTON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 326) for the relief of Mrs. Frances Marshall, report as follows:

The facts out of which this bill for relief arises will be found stated in House Report No. 3046, of the Committee on War Claims of the Forty-ninth Congress, a copy of which is hereto appended and made a part of this report.

Your committee report back the bill, and recommend that the claimant be paid the sum of $1,086.83, the amount actually covered into the Treasury from the proceeds of the sale of said library.

[House Report No. 3046, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5262) for the relief of Mrs. Frances Marshall, having carefully considered the same and accompanying papers, submit the following report:

The facts out of which this claim against the United States arises are fully set forth in the affidavit of claimant, which is as follows:

"STATE OF KENTUCKY, County of Jefferson:

"The affiant, Frances E. Marshall, on her oath, states that heretofore, to wit, in the year 1861, she was sole and absolute owner of a large and miscellaneous library, consisting of a great number of works, from the pens of the most celebrated authors of ancient and modern times up to that time; that she is unable to give a full detailed statement of the names of the different authors or the titles of the books she owned; that her said library was most excellent and the books therein most elegantly bound; and her said library was of very great value; that her said library was packed in a great number of boxes and shipped from her country residence, 'Buckland Farm,' on the Kentucky River, the title of which was in her at that time, to Carrollton, Ky., for greater safety, the country being at that time full of soldiery and in a state of uncertainty; at that point affiant is informed they were afterwards seized by the United States authorities and taken to Cincinnati, Ohio, and neighboring cities, and sold at public auction, and the money, or some part of it, realized from the sale was forwarded to Washington, D. C., and paid into the Treasury of the United States, said money not by any means representing the value of her splendid library; that the statements contained in this the foregoing affidavit are true."

This affidavit is properly executed before a notary public of Jefferson County, Kentucky, and bears date of February 12, 1886.

Harvey M. Buckley, colonel of infantry in the Union Army, and others, in affidavits, fully substantiate the statement made by Mrs. Marshall.

The proof clearly shows that the library, or at least a large portion of it, belonged to and was purchased by Mrs. Marshall, and was her own separate property, held in her own right.

The committee are satisfied that the claimant was loyal to the United States Government.

Your committee therefore report the accompanying bill (H. R. 5262), with the following amendment: In lines 6 and 7 strike out the words "one thousand eight hundred," and insert the words "five hundred," and recommend that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to object; but I believe this matter was up in the last Congress and created some considerable controversy. I would like very much an opportunity to examine into the case. I really think these war claims ought to take their regular course and be considered on the Calendar as they are reached. Judging from what we have done thus far, enough of them will get through even if taken up in regular order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman will allow me a word of explanation. I think he is mistaken in supposing that this bill has heretofore provoked any controversy. In the last Congress this bill was passed by unanimous consent upon the motion of Mr. Willis, of Louisville, then my colleague. The proposition is to pay Mrs. Frances Marshall for a library which she claims was her property, though seized and sold as the property of her husband. Upon the case as then submitted by Mr. Willis the bill was favorably reported by the committee of the last Congress, and was passed by the House.

Mr. BURROWS. Did it pass in the last Congress?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It was passed by this House in the last Congress and went over to the Senate, where it failed because, in consequence of the late period of the session, it was not reported.

Mr. BURROWS. If the minority of the Committee on War Claims do not make objection to the bill, I shall not object.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The bill has been reported again in this House during the present Congress, the report being unanimous.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Was there not a minority report upon this bill in the Forty-ninth Congress?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I think not; there was no minority report. The proof in support of the claim was made mainly by the gentleman named in the report, Mr. Harvey M. Buckley, a gentleman of very high character, belonging to the Republican party, who was colonel of a Federal regiment during the war and knew all the facts. It was upon his testimony principally that the claim was reported favorably in the last Congress and in the present by the Committee on War Claims, there being no minority report in either case.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe it does not appear from the statement embraced in the report of the committee how much of the money derived from the sale of this library was covered into the Treasury.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The amount is something over a thousand dollars.

Mr. HOLMAN. That fact, it will be observed, is not stated in the report. It is stated that "the money, or some part of it," was covered into the Treasury. Has my friend from Kentucky any knowledge as to the facts?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have no knowledge of the case except from the reports; no personal knowledge of the case at all. The amount in the bill as reported by the committee is, I understand, the amount which was covered into the Treasury. I have not examined the papers myself, but the case has passed an examination by the committee. The bill was introduced in this Congress by my colleague [Mr. CARUTH], and in the last Congress by Mr. Willis. My interest in the matter arises from the fact that this lady has been, during most of her life, a resident of the county which I represent here. Although at present she is living in Louisville, she and her husband and family were formerly residents of my district. Her husband was formerly a member of Congress, representing a part of the district which I now represent.

Mr. HOLMAN. Upon the facts stated, it would seem that whatever sum of money was covered into the Treasury ought to be refunded.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The bill was reported at this session by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. PENINGTON].

Mr. PENINGTON. The report says the amount recommended to be paid is the net amount covered into the Treasury. The property in question sold for the sum of $1,800, and the amount of $1,000 was only paid into the Treasury. This bill met the approbation, not only of the committee, but of the House itself in the Forty-ninth Congress, but the committee to which it was referred at this Congress deemed it proper to adopt the former report that this applicant was not entitled to the whole receipts of the sale, but only to that portion which had been covered into the Treasury.

Mr. HOLMAN. I find, on looking at the report, the amount is stated at $1,086.83, the amount actually covered into the Treasury. I was misled by a statement in the report which was appended to this. I take it for granted the amount stated is correct.

Mr. PENINGTON. It is.

There was no objection to the consideration of the bill, and it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOPHIA B. MOORE.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection I made to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3902) for the relief of Sophia B. Moore, which was called up by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. He informs me that he is about leaving the city. While allowing the bill to be called up and voted on, I shall vote against it.

The bill was again read.

There was no objection to the consideration of the bill, and it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SIMMONS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HUBERT M. POTTER.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. I move, by unanimous consent, to take up for consideration the bill (H. R. 2457) to increase the pension of Hubert M. Potter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Hubert M. Potter, late private Company B, Fourteenth United States Infantry, to the amount of $50 per month.

The amendment of the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

Strike out "$50 a month" and insert "$45 a month."

The amendment was agreed to.

There was no objection to the consideration of the bill, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RETIREMENT OF CIRCULATING NOTES.

Mr. BLAND, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to print in the RECORD the following amendment, which he intended to offer to the bill (H. R. 2012) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to invest the lawful money deposited in the Treasury in trust by national-bank associations for the retirement of circulating notes.

It is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to purchase the bonds of the United States not subject to call with the moneys now held or that may hereafter come into the Treasury for the redemption of national-bank notes: Provided, That not more than ten million of said bonds shall be so purchased in any one month. The purchase of said bonds shall be made from month to month, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. The bonds so purchased shall not be counted as part of the sinking fund, but shall be canceled and destroyed.

SEC. 2. For the purpose of redeeming national-bank notes the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be engraved, printed, and issued coin notes of the United States in like denominations now authorized for silver certificates, which said coin notes shall be redeemable in standard gold or silver coin of the United States, at the option of the Government, on demand; that said coin notes shall be a legal tender in like manner and for all purposes for which gold or silver certificates are now by law a legal tender, and may be reissued, and to provide sufficient coin for the redemption of coin notes he shall from time to time coin the full maximum of the amount of silver bullion authorized to be purchased and coined in pursuance of the act of February 28, 1878, authorizing the coinage of the standard silver dollar and to restore its legal-tender character.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to establish such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

MONUMENT TO GENERAL W. H. HARRISON.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hold in my hand a resolution adopted by the Board of Trade of the city of Indianapolis, in favor of an appropriation of money to aid in the erection of a monument to General William Henry Harrison, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That we respectfully and earnestly request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to aid in securing the passage of House bill No. 1740, asking an appropriation of $20,000 for the improvement of the ground and the erection of a monument as provided by the bill regarding the grave of General W. H. Harrison, North Bend, Ohio.

On motion of Mr. HOLMAN, the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Library.

TERMS OF UNITED STATES COURTS AT MISSISSIPPI CITY.

Mr. BUCKALEW, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 1589) to provide for holding the terms of the United States courts at Mississippi City; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, to report the same back favorably with some amendments, together with a short report. I give notice that I shall move to take up the bill as early next week as I can get the floor for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 21) granting a gold medal to Capt. Charles de Arnaud, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the joint resolution was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 325) granting to the Billings, Clark's Fork and Cooke City Railroad Company the right of way through the Crow Indian reservation, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DANIEL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 136) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay certain creditors of the Pottawatomie Indians out of the funds of said Indians, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 671) to provide for the sale of the site of Fort Omaha, Nebr., the sale or removal of the improvements thereon, and for a new site and the construction of suitable buildings thereon, to report it without amendment. I will accompany the bill in a few days with a written report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 27) to prevent the obstruction of navigable waters and to protect public works against trespass or injury, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1241) to prevent obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City, by dumping or otherwise, and to punish and prevent such offenses, and making other provisions in connection therewith, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1248) to effect a rearrangement of the grades of office in the Subsistence Department of the Army, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 361) to authorize the Duluth, Superior and Wisconsin Railway Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the St. Louis River, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1525) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Cumberland River, between Burnside, Ky., and Carthage, Tenn., or the south fork of said river, between Burnside and Tateville, Ky., reported it with amendments.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1001) granting a pension to George W. Fisher, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill postponed indefinitely.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1680) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the Plainville Post, No. 298, of the Grand Army of the Republic at Plainville, Kans., six condemned brass cannon for monumental purposes, have instructed me to report the same back adversely, recommending that the bill be indefinitely postponed. I desire to say in this connection that during the Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh, Forty-eighth, and Forty-ninth Congresses the Committee on Military Affairs has uniformly reported adversely upon all such bills, because there are no condemned brass cannon or iron cannon on hand for this purpose.

The report was agreed to, and the bill postponed indefinitely.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments:

A bill (S. 1405) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River, at or near the city of Oquawka, in the State of Illinois, and to establish it as a post-road;

NEW SENATE MANUAL.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am instructed by the Committee on Rules to report the revised edition of the Manual prepared under a resolution of March 3, 1887, by the Committee on Rules, and I submit a resolution from the committee to print 1,500 copies of the revised Manual.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate, under the direction of the Committee on Rules, 1,500 copies of the revised Senate Manual.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the resolution should go to the Committee on Printing, under the rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think it needs to go to the Committee on Printing. It provides for printing a document for the use of the Senate, and under the rule of the Senate I do not think any such reference is required.

Mr. ALDRICH. Very well; I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 4) providing for the disposition of undistributed copies of the Rebellion Records and other public documents, to report it with an amendment, and recommend its passage. I ask that it be now considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That all copies of the Records of the War of the Rebellion, reports of the Tenth Census, and report of the Public Lands Commission remaining undistributed, of the quota of ex-members of Congress, shall be put to the credit and distributed upon the orders of their successors, respectively, in the Forty-ninth Congress, in accordance with existing provisions of law: Provided, That copies of the above-named documents standing to the credit of ex-members who, in consequence of changes in the boundaries of Congressional districts, have no direct successors in the present Congress, shall be sold at cost or distributed to libraries yet unsupplied: And provided further, That this resolution shall not be construed as withholding, from parties already named to receive complete sets of said documents, the volumes yet to be issued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the Committee on Printing will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend in line 7, after the words "in the," to strike out "Forty-ninth" and insert "Fiftieth;" so as to read:

That all copies of the Records of the War of the Rebellion, Reports of the Tenth Census, and Report of the Public Lands Commission remaining undistributed, of the quota of ex-members of Congress, shall be put to the credit and distributed upon the orders of their successors, respectively, in the Fiftieth Congress, in accordance with existing provisions of law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear simply an explanation of it, as it is just reported.

Mr. MANDERSON. The joint resolution is designed simply to dispose of those copies of the Records of the Rebellion, the four-volume work on the Public Domain, and the Census Reports which are undistributed by the lists of the members of the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. COCKRELL. How would that affect a Senator still in the Senate who has not sent in orders to include all the copies to which he was entitled?

Mr. MANDERSON. It does not affect him at all. It only applies to those who have passed out of Congress in either House, and provides that their successors may have the distribution of these works. I will ask, for the information of the Senate, that the Secretary read a letter from Dr. Ames, the superintendent of the distribution of the documents. It explains the matter quite fully.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not object, but I feel like pressing a little further the inquiry made by the Senator from Missouri. For instance, I had to buy five volumes of the Confederate Records at $5 a volume to supply a historical society which had been neglected. I have been able to keep up the sets after the first five volumes. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether the effect of the joint resolution will be to break up the sets, either of the Census Reports or of what I choose to call the Confederate Records, which have been commenced since I bought the first five volumes?

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not understand that the effect of the joint resolution will be as suggested by the Senator from Virginia. It is simply to reach the cases that are named, where a member of the Senate or House of Representatives who was in the Forty-seventh Congress had the distribution or the naming of the list on which the Records of the Rebellion should be distributed and has passed out of Congress, so that his successor may dispose of any copies of the Records of the Rebellion that he did not dispose of. They are lying, as is shown by the letter of Dr. Ames, in the War Department without distribution. Take, for instance, the case of the late Senator from Rhode Island, Senator Anthony. I understand that in the War Department there are large numbers of volumes of the Records of the Rebellion, after volume 5—from volume 1 to volume 5 the series is entirely exhausted—which remain undistributed, and this measure would permit the present Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE], the successor of Senator Anthony, to make a distribution of those works.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Printing whether any arrangements have been made for the reprinting of those first five volumes?

Mr. MANDERSON. Not as yet. The House committee have that matter under consideration, and I understand they are about to report in that regard to reprint the first five volumes of the Records of the Rebellion. But that is not contemplated by the pending joint resolution.

Mr. HOAR. No; that is not contemplated by the joint resolution, but at the same time it seems to be a proper occasion to make the observation.

The Senate, I suppose, is well aware, and certainly the Senator from Nebraska knows better than anybody else, the great waste of our former method of distributing those documents. They were put to the credit of the Senator or Member of a particular Congress at the time of their publication. The consequence is that of a costly and valuable book like the Medical and Surgical History of the Rebellion, and especially this book, which, when it comes out, will be, I suppose, a hundred volumes or more before it is finished—two or three volumes would go to one member, who would distribute them to his friends as he chose, and then the next two or three volumes would go to somebody else having no knowledge of where the first had gone, and the entire set absolutely rendered worthless to anybody, or nearly so, from the fact that the consecutive volumes were not in the same place.

After a great deal of difficulty the Senate were persuaded to adopt the present system, which is that when the publication of one of these books, which comes out as a serial, is ordered, the then Member of Congress, or Senator, shall put on record a list of the persons to whom he wants it sent. He may have it sent to himself if he chooses, but he will give in a list of libraries, or eminent soldiers, or eminent scholars, and the law then requires the entire series to go to the same place, and that would make the set complete.

This principle was not adopted in regard to the Records of the Rebellion until the first five volumes had been published. The consequence is, I suppose, that there are hundreds of libraries and soldiers all over the country, and thousands of scholars, who have been selected under the law, and who get the entire set of Rebellion Records except the first five volumes; and to make those sets of complete value we ought to reprint those volumes as soon as possible. We have really wasted the whole publication of the first five volumes, pretty much.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will make a suggestion in regard to that publication, which applies to some other books besides. There are private dealers who would be very glad indeed to make application at the Printing Office to have the first five volumes, the stereotyped plates of which are preserved, reprinted in very considerable numbers, so as to purchase them at cost, with the 10 per cent. added, under the usual law. For example, one publisher told me that he would be very glad to order a thousand copies and pay for the press-work and paper and 10 per cent. added, as he has applications all over the country for them. Of course he would put on something for profit, 25 or 50 cents a volume. He says those books are worth now four, five, or six dollars in the market, while we have the stereotyped plates lying idle in the Printing Office, and men are willing and anxious to purchase them.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Connecticut why that can not be done without any action by Congress?

Mr. HAWLEY. This publisher, for some reason or other, finds that he is unable to do it. He offers to take a thousand copies of those first five volumes under the terms of the law to-morrow, if he can get them printed.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will answer the inquiry of the Senator from Colorado. I understand that the privilege of ordering additional copies of works that are being published can only be availed of under the law while the work is being published and before it is issued from the Printing Office; that is, the order must come in advance of the publication.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is correct.

Mr. MANDERSON. And therefore we can not pursue the course suggested by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. TELLER. I knew that might be done, but I was not familiar enough with the statute to recollect that that should be done before the publication.

I want to say a word about the Rebellion Records. In the Forty-seventh Congress the policy suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts was adopted, and the then members of Congress, if they made their selections, selected the people to whom the entire series was to go. I do not know how the Senator from Rhode Island, who was used as an illustration, will find out to whom the Department will send these books, without duplicating them, because the War Department declines to inform a Senator, or anybody else, to whom these books are going.

Mr. HOAR. Is not the record in the Interior Department?

Mr. TELLER. There is no such record in the Interior Department; it is kept in the War Department. I applied to the War Department to know what persons in my State were receiving the Rebellion Records, having had several applications from libraries that wanted the Rebellion Records, and I was notified that my predecessor and his colleague, the member of the other House, had designated the full quota of the State and that the books were then being sent out; and on inquiry as to whom they were sent to, I was informed that that was a state secret; that I could not be informed what citizens of Colorado were getting the Rebellion Records; and therefore I was unable to notify the libraries so that they might negotiate with the people who had them, as I had intended. Why this should be the case I do not know. It seems to me most absurd that a matter of simple record as to who is receiving a public document should be concealed in the War Department; but such is the fact, as I have it under the signature of the Secretary of War.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the honorable Senator that I think every member of this body would concur with him in adopting an order to the War Department to send in a list of persons who were receiving those books.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should think so.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will state that I had no trouble in securing a list of the parties to whom the Rebellion Record was ordered to be sent by my late colleague.

Mr. TELLER. I have a letter signed by the Secretary of War, evidently in his own handwriting, stating that the list could not be furnished.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will say that I had the same refusal from the War Department. I was unable to find who obtained the books furnished according to the lists of members of the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is most extraordinary.

Mr. TELLER. The Department said that it was a matter which could not be made public.

I have not moved in this matter, because, so far as that particular document is concerned, it is not a matter of any consequence whatever; but I hold that every public record, I do not care what it is, is an open record to the people of this country. While I had for a short time the honor of presiding over an Executive Department every paper in that Department was open to the inspection of any citizen of the United States who wanted to inspect it, by an order that I signed. I understand the order is still in force in that Department of the Government, and it ought to be so in every Department of the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, if there be no objection. Having been read at length, another reading at length will be waived if there be no objection, and the question recurs on the amendment of the Committee on Printing, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 7 the committee report to strike out "Forty-ninth" and insert "Fiftieth;" so as to read, "the Fiftieth Congress."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I wish to hear the joint resolution read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read at length.

The SECRETARY again read the joint resolution as amended.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to the joint resolution, but I wish to embrace this opportunity to make a remark in regard to these public documents.

I do not know what may be the experience of other Senators, but since I have been in the Senate, some eight years, I have found that the distribution of certain public documents is a positive nuisance, to say nothing about the waste of public money. I have now in a room in this city several hundred volumes, bound in calf at the expense of this Government, which I can not give away, can not trade off, can not dispose of, unless I put them in the fire; they are utterly useless. I have sent them to libraries; there is no room for them there. I have personally asked on my return to my home in Missouri different libraries to take them. They say they have no storage room for them. They are utterly useless; reports of bureaus that no man ever reads, that there is no possibility of their ever being looked into, except by some man who, having had the penalty of death imposed on him, has had it commuted by a court to imprisonment for life, and then possibly he might have an opportunity to look into them.

How many hundreds of thousands of dollars are thrown away upon these publications I do not know; but it is a fact, and I doubt not but that every Senator here will corroborate my experience in regard to the matter. How long this thing is to go on is of course not within my knowledge or that of any other living man; but it has gone on for years.

You have these volumes sent to you, bound in calf, with your name upon a piece of red morocco on the back. I sent once to a second-hand dealer, one of those men engaged in the business of buying Government books. I sent him into the room and asked him to look at them, and then to make me a bid. I think there were four hundred and fifty-odd volumes. He offered me $8, and thought it was a personal favor to me to give me that much. I suppose they cost the Government of the United States $2 or $3 a volume.

And yet we permit this system to go on. I call the attention of the Committee on Printing to it. It is a nuisance. I have spoken to brother Senators, one conspicuously from New England. "Why," he said, "my people are anxious to take these books." I said, "Let me ship them to New England, if they want this sort of literature."

Of course there are emergencies in which reference to these books becomes necessary, but they are here deposited, set after set of them, in all the Departments. To-day the upper portion of this Capitol is crammed full of old Government publications to the roof, and the Architect of the Capitol reported to our Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in the last Congress that if a spark of fire should touch this old material that has been there for years, it could not burn down the Capitol, but the gas from the fire would blow off the roof.

There is not a Department of the Government that has not got these old books in cellar and garret, and yet there is a continual stream of them pouring out of the Government Printing Office, and appropriation after appropriation is made. You might as well take the money and throw it into the Potomac River.

As to this particular measure, I have not the slightest objection to it. I know a case in point. I believe its general provision is to let the successor in Congress of any Member or Senator take the undisposed-of publications.

Some years ago I had an application made to me by a postmaster—I was about to give the point—in Missouri, asking me to go to the Postmaster-General and get authority for him to dispose of, I think, two hundred and odd volumes of publications by the Government, which had been sent to a member of Congress then dead, who had years before represented a Missouri district in Congress. I will not give the locality, because he may have some distant relatives living. The postmaster at that place said he could not find anybody who would take them; that he did not want to pitch them into the street; that they were combustible, and he was pressed for room in his office. I went to the Postmaster-General and got the order that he could distribute them to anybody. The Postmaster-General said to me, "Anything but to have them shipped back to Washington. My Department is full of such publications. The Post-Office Department has no use for them." An order was issued to this local postmaster to give them away.

I have no doubt that member of Congress thought he was manufacturing history when he delivered speeches and they were put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is a commentary upon public life and upon the labors of those of us now living who think we are making something like fame and reputation when even a local postmaster is unable to find anybody to take our quota of public documents after we are dead.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that one of the plagues of my Senatorial life—I was about to say the greatest plague—is to try to find some means for a careful distribution of the documents and books which are allotted to me as a Senator. Many of them, as has been suggested by the Senator from Missouri, are not sought for; the people whom you send them to do not want to give them house-room, and they go, I have no doubt, if you do send them out, to the dealers in old paper just as quickly as the receivers can dispose of them.

Some valuable books are published by Congressional order. These we usually get in very small quantities, and then comes an extensive demand for them, and it is with the utmost difficulty that we can furnish them, if they are in serial form or come in successive volumes, to the people to whom they should go to enable them to keep up their sets; and if by any means we should be transferred to private life our successors could not probably keep up the sets.

It seems to me that this whole business of the publication and distribution of books and documents by Congress ought to be revised, and that some other method of distribution ought to be adopted.

But I rose to say that I think the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who is at the head of a committee to investigate the methods of doing the Government business, has some plan in mind which that committee is to report to the Senate for a different system of distribution. I think we should all feel relieved if it could de done differently. I said that the books were a great plague. The seeds are a greater.

Mr. TELLER. I have no doubt there is a great waste of public money in the publication of what are called public documents. My experience, however, has not been like that of the Senator from Missouri. I represent a community that is largely without libraries, as every new community is, and I believe there never has been a book published from this Capitol since I have been in public life that my constituents have not willingly taken, and I never have had as many as they were willing to take of all classes of public documents.

We published some years ago some very valuable public documents of a scientific character, and it would be naturally supposed that a new community like ours would pay but little attention to those. For every one that the Government gave me for distribution I venture to say that I have had ten applications, and for every valuable document that the Government publishes and allows a Senator to distribute I think I have had on an average ten applications. Take, for instance, Hayden's Geological Reports. I have bought hundreds of volumes of those reports myself for my constituents because I could not meet the demand.

Mr. VEST. The Senator will permit me to say that of course I did not speak of Hayden's reports or the valuable publications of the Government. Some of those I have purchased at my own expense and sent out, but here is what I mean: Does the Senator from Colorado say now that his people want the bureau reports?

Mr. TELLER. What do you call a bureau report?

Mr. BUTLER. A report on commerce.

Mr. VEST. Yes, on commerce and navigation. I will give a list, if necessary.

Mr. BUTLER. The miscellaneous documents.

Mr. TELLER. I will say that I have distributed year by year every one that has come to me, and I never had one returned.

Mr. BUTLER. Of course not.

Mr. TELLER. I never had any complaint that they were not received, and I have had repeated applications for even such things as the Army Register and for all agricultural reports, which are much laughed at in these days. I have had many applications after I have distributed my quota. Take the Geological Bureau reports that now come out; I have repeated applications for those reports and for public maps of all kinds that the Government distributes. Take a recent publication of the Government called "Cattle and Dairy Farming."

Mr. PLATT. You got eleven copies.

Mr. TELLER. I got eleven copies. Three or four hundred copies would not supply the demand in the State of Colorado. The result is that I can send a book to a library here and one there, and not all the public libraries of the State are supplied even with those.

The only document I have ever known that can be said to have been published in excess, is what we call the Abridgment—122 copies to each Senator—consisting of the reports of the various heads of Departments and of bureaus. That may be excessive, although I have never had any trouble to get rid of mine. Newspaper offices, public libraries, and the people who are establishing libraries are all willing to take them and always have taken them.

I agree with the Senator from Connecticut that the method of distribution is vicious. I think they should be distributed through some organized Department of the Government and not through Senators and Representatives. We did so distribute the last census reports through the Interior Department, and I think that distribution has been the most satisfactory of any distribution of public documents which has been made. The Interior Department has sent up from time to time, as I know, a plan for distribution upon that same basis of all the public documents practically, but it has never met with any favor from the legislative department of the Government.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I think the difficulties suggested by the Senator from Missouri are more difficulties that pertain to the system of distribution than the publication of the documents themselves. My experience is certainty quite different from his. I find demand from my State for about every report and every book that is published by the Government; if not from one source, it comes from another. Some of his criticisms perhaps are such as should be made, but certainly they are not proper nor are they germane to this resolution, which I understand he does not oppose.

The books referred to by the Senator from Missouri, that are ornamented with a red patch upon the side and his name upon the patch, as I understand it, are not received by him for distribution among his constituents. The books which assume that form are simply the Department and the bureau reports that come to him for his own use, marked with his own name, for reference. If he does not see fit to keep them, I venture the assertion that it is not necessary that he should offer them for sale to some second-hand book-dealer. If he does not need them for his own constituents, I have no doubt there are other Senators whose constituents would be very glad to receive them. If he has documents of that character to dispose of, I think I can place them without any difficulty.

But, Mr. President, I do not think that there is an excessive publication of the work of the various bureaus and Departments of the Government. If we are to go to the expense of maintaining a Department of Agriculture, certainly the result of the explorations and the investigations of that Department should be given to the public that are interested in that science. If we are to maintain a Bureau of Education, the reports of that bureau should be given to those who are interested in that topic.

I simply rose for the purpose of expressing my regret that there should be such a condition of things in the State of Missouri as is described by the Senator from that State. It seems to me it is about as good an argument as I have heard in favor of the passage of the Blair educational bill.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I take it that the State of Missouri in intelligence will compare favorably with the State of Nebraska. At any rate, I invite any comparison the Senator may see fit to institute.

It is true that the books to which I referred are sent to every Senator and Member for his own personal use, and it is absolutely true that no Senator or Member ever uses them, and that is the point I made in my remarks. They are rubbish. They are sent to us here ostensibly to be used in our public duties. There is not a Department, there is not an office in the city of Washington, where the same books are not accessible—not one of them. As a matter of course, I could send them to Missouri, as the Senator from Nebraska could send them to his State. I can send them to Alaska, and they will never be returned, as the Senator from Colorado said, because his constituents and mine have not the franking privilege. When once they arrive they stay there, because it costs something to send them back. They go free one way and not free the other. But I want some Senator to tell me that there has been any general demand, or even any demand, from his State for the reports of these bureau officers on commerce and navigation. What the Senator from Nebraska says is not a proper answer. He speaks of agricultural reports and geological reports. They are an exception. I can not get enough agricultural reports to supply the demand from my State. I have purchased them here in order to send them out.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator wants an answer, I will say that all the States that are interested in commerce and navigation are anxious for the reports on that subject.

Mr. VEST. I am not inviting any of my Republican friends to take these books. If any Democratic Senator wants them, he is welcome to several hundred volumes which I have on hand. If they are to go out to the country, I want them sent, if they are worth anything, from this side of the Chamber. While I am giving them away I do not propose to contribute directly or indirectly to the campaign fund of the Republican party. [Laughter.]

So much for that. But I assert what is absolutely true, and I say no Senator here will deny it, that hundreds of thousands of dollars are thrown away every year on the publication of a lot of absolute trash that is worthless.

My friend from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] informs me that he tried to give away some of his documents for waste paper, but the man would not pay the transportation a few miles on them. If any Senator wants to see the immense amount of money wasted in this way, let him go to the upper part of this Capitol. Here for four years the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has reported to the Senate a bill for a hall of records. The Senate has passed it every time, but the House of Representatives has always refused to take it up and pass it.

I have here reports from the Quartermaster-General, from the Secretary of the Treasury, from the Secretary of the Navy, from the Secretary of War, stating that their Departments were so full of old books and rubbish that the valuable documents are imperiled in the event of a conflagration. The Quartermaster-General's Department has been on fire twice and the fire was put out only by accident, and if a general conflagration had occurred and that building had been burned, it would have cost this Government millions of dollars. Why are these Departments so full? Why is the upper part of this Capitol full now clear to the dome with this rubbish and trash for which we are paying year after year, and which is worth nothing?

I repeat every word that I said. I apprehended when I said anything about it that some Senator would avail himself of the opportunity to advertise the superior literary taste of his people. That is a cheap sort of buncombe. I am willing to compare the intelligence of the State of Missouri with that of any other State in the Union, and her educational advantages, and as to the intellectual endowment of her people I leave their progress and their history to speak for itself. As to the point I make now, it is unanswerable, and there is not a Senator here who can say one word against it. It is a positive truth, to be found anywhere within this Capitol.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, there is nevertheless some mitigation of what the Senator says. The crowding in the Departments at the other end of the Avenue is partly by reason of the monstrous accumulation of their official records, their own records and papers that they must keep. They are in a dangerous condition. There ought to be a hall of records, there ought to be a large fire-proof store-house for them. That crowding is not so much due to the unnecessary printing as it is to the accumulation of manuscript that troubles many of them, largely referring to the war of the rebellion.

The Senator is perfectly correct in saying that had the documents in some of these Departments burned at the time of the occasional fires which have occurred, there would have been a loss of millions on millions of dollars, and the greatest extravagance we are guilty of, in my opinion, in these things, is the failure to put up a proper fire-proof hall of records.

Mr. TELLER. I rose to say substantially what the Senator from Connecticut has said. The complaint made by heads of Departments of a lack of proper fire-proof storage is not for these books, is not for the class of publications the Senator from Missouri is complaining of, but for just such things as they are required to keep for proof and for the adjudication of claims that come before the several Departments.

For instance, in the General Land Office they must keep all the old plats, they must keep all the maps; they must keep these for proof at all times as the law now stands. There is no provision as to when they may dispense with them, and I do not know whether that could be safely provided for or not; but they must keep the records. They are not books, they are not publications, they are the records; and anybody who will walk through the Interior Department will find the aisles filled with cases, filled with books, filled with papers that are indispensable to the Government. If the Interior Department building were to burn up and they should all be burned up, there would be confusion in that Department that never could be cleared up. That Department building has been on fire, as we all know, and a large number of things were burned. It cost the Government, I think, three or four hundred thousand dollars to replace the things burned up; and all the time all the heads of Departments are demanding some place to put the records, the public records—not the books, but the public records.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, there can be no mistake about the fact that there are a great many of the documents published by Congress that the people of the country will not read after they are sent out. I know in my own experience that I have sent out many books that I felt really ashamed to send out. I send a valuable document to one person, and perhaps to his next neighbor I send a book that is inferior, because I have not a sufficient number of the kind of books all would want, and I have been ashamed to be compelled to send a certain class of books that I knew nobody would appreciate or would read. I have found that in my State a certain class of books are not taken out of the post-office. I do not think that is a reflection upon the intelligence of the community I represent, for I think that if one was sent to me and I knew the character of it I would not take it out of the office. Take, for instance, the President's message, with the accompanying documents, a number of volumes. Who wants them? They are valuable to a certain extent, but the great body of the people do not want them when they come out in book form; and I remember once that I gave to Mr. Merchant, the late superintendent of the folding-room here, a large number of messages of President Grant and President Hayes, because I did not want to distribute them; none of my constituents wanted them and nobody appreciated them.

I say to the chairman of the Committee on Printing that there are publications emanating from near that quarter which I think are multiplied too often; I mean the Congressional Directory. We generally have about three editions of that every year, at enormous expense.

Somebody gets paid for it. The clerk of the Printing Committee, who gets it out, I suppose gets compensation for that. One edition of that a year would be enough; but we have three editions of the Congressional Directory year after year put out, at an expense to the Government.

There is a great deal of unnecessary expenditure in the publications we issue. While there are many valuable books published that the people desire to have, there are a great many books ordered here that have no value in them and that the people do not want.

I rose to say, however, that there was one feature of this joint resolution that I did not exactly approve of. It provides that documents ordered by the Forty-ninth Congress shall be turned over immediately to the members of the Fiftieth Congress, so that the gentlemen who composed the Forty-ninth Congress will not have any of the books published by that Congress if they have not already received them. I should be glad to put in an amendment limiting the time, so that after a certain period, if they are not disposed of by the members of the Forty-ninth Congress, they should be turned over to members of the Fiftieth Congress. I think the gentlemen who were members of the Forty-ninth Congress ought to have the privilege of distributing the books which they ordered published for a certain period. If they do not do it, then turn them over to the Fiftieth Congress.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will say to the Senator that is the present law. The retiring members of the Forty-ninth Congress had the right of distribution of documents until the 1st day of December after their term expired, under the law as it now is.

Mr. SAULSBURY. But some of these books are not published until after the expiration of the time limited.

Mr. MANDERSON. Any that are issued by the 1st of December they have a right to distribute.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I think there is a great deal of merit in publishing valuable books and distributing them. The people of the State that I represent in part have always manifested an approval of this practice of the Government, and there is a constant demand for the valuable publications made by the Government.

The system of distribution by the Senators and Members of Congress in my opinion is the only proper system. If you choose to have it done by a bureau under their direction, that would simplify the matter somewhat, but it ought not to be taken away from the Senators and Members. If there are publications that are useless or in excessive number, the Senator from Missouri should have introduced a resolution to limit them, and not condemn the system at large. If these great accumulations have occurred here that are useless, nothing is easier than to have those portions of them that are not of value, either now or in the future, disposed of in some way, and nothing easier than to limit the publication of the reports of the Executive Departments of the Government. I think perhaps there is an excess of numbers ordered in some instances and large quantities of them sold to the junk-shops here every year. That is easily remedied, and I suggest to Senators who find fault with the system of publication and distribution to confine their objections to such publications as are not valuable and useful to the people.

I can not get enough of the Agricultural Report or the Geological Survey, nor of other occasional publications. The people are eager to receive them, and it is necessary that they should pass between the people and their representatives here. For myself I approve the publication of useful documents and their distribution among the people as widely as possible.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, whatever may be the opinion of any Senator on this floor as to the propriety of printing the number and character of the books that are printed under the order of Congress, this resolution has no earthly reference to that question, and upon a reading of the resolution I do not think there is a Senator on this floor who will oppose its adoption. I ask that the resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution as amended, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That all copies of the Records of the War of the Rebellion, reports of the Tenth Census, and report of the Public Lands Commission remaining undistributed, of the quota of ex-members of Congress, shall be put to the credit and distributed upon the orders of their successors, respectively, in the Fiftieth Congress, in accordance with existing provisions of law: Provided, That copies of the above-named documents standing to the credit of ex-members who, in consequence of changes in the boundaries of Congressional districts, have no direct successors in the present Congress, shall be sold at cost or distributed to libraries yet unsupplied: And provided further, That this resolution shall not be construed as withholding, from parties already named to receive complete sets of said documents, the volumes yet to be issued.

The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear the resolution read again.

The resolution was read.

Mr. MANDERSON. If there is any desire to examine it, I will not ask for its present consideration. It may be printed and go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution lies over under the rule, and will be printed.

JOHN SNODDY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], coming over from a former day.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill 2974, Order of Business 158, which I suppose will lead to no debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2974) for the relief of John Snoddy.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask that the bill be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. For information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The bill was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2974) for the relief of John Snoddy. It proposes to instruct the Postmaster-General to adjust and settle the claim of John Snoddy, postmaster at Big Spring, Tex., for money-order funds amounting to $220, remitted by him to the postmaster at Dallas, Tex., January 22, 1887, and which funds were stolen in transit by train robbers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to inquire whether there is not a general public law authorizing the Postmaster-General to adjust losses of this character?

Mr. REAGAN. There is, and the reason why this case was not acted on by the Post-Office Department was that the postmaster instead of making an application to the Department within the time prescribed by law made it to a subordinate somewhere in Texas; but the evidence shows that the affidavit of the postmaster was presented that he put the money in a postal envelope, mailed it, and delivered the mail in the presence of a witness, who carried it to the railroad, and the affidavit of the witness is also presented that the postmaster had performed the conditions required by the act in placing this money in the mail-bag and in delivering it to the carrier. The agent of the Department reports upon it. There is a written report, and in making the report I ask that two papers to which it refers be made part of it, which are not embodied in it. The agent of the Department examined this matter, and the letter of the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department accompanies these papers, in which he says that on the authority of the agent of the Department there is no doubt that this money was lost in the transshipment.

It was mailed after 3 o'clock in the afternoon at Big Spring. Near Gordon the train was robbed during the succeeding night, east of Dallas. The mail was robbed before reaching Dallas, and the money taken by train-robbers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The thing I desire to be informed about particularly at this moment is what is the difficulty at the present time which prevents this postmaster from appealing to the Postmaster-General under the general law.

Mr. REAGAN. As I stated to the Senate, it is that the law requires that application shall be made within a specified time, and it was not made to the Department in the specified time, though it was to a subordinate of the Department in Texas.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that stated in the report?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

Mr. REAGAN. I should like to have the accompanying papers read also. I would say that the bill has passed the House of Representatives, and the report about to be read is the report of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. REAGAN January 30, 1888:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have considered the bill (H. R. 2974) for the relief of John Snoddy, postmaster at Big Spring, Tex., and report the same back to the Senate with the recommendation that said bill do pass.

The facts in this case are that said Snoddy, on the 22d day of January, 1887, mailed $220, money-order funds, by placing the same in a registered-package envelope, and sealing the same and securely locking it in a mail-bag and delivering the same to the proper mail-carrier in the presence of S. G. Flowers. That the train which carried this package left Big Spring at 3.45 p. m. January 22, 1887, and that said train was robbed by masked men east of Gordon before reaching Dallas on that trip; that said money was mailed, as required by the orders of the Post-Office Department, to the postmaster at Dallas, Tex., and that this money was at that time taken by the robbers.

The facts in the case are shown by affidavit of Snoddy, the postmaster, the affidavit of Flowers above named, and from the report of Post-Office Inspector L. J. Randall, which papers accompany and are made part of this report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The report does not state the matter mentioned by my friend from Texas, that this officer did undertake to apply in season, but made a mistake in respect to the official to whom he gave the notice. Where is the evidence that supports that statement?

Mr. REAGAN. At the conclusion of the report it is stated that there were papers accompanying it that were to be made a part of the report. When I picked up the printed report I found that those papers were not incorporated in it. How that happened I do not know.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are they here, so that we can hear them?

Mr. REAGAN. I do not know whether the papers are at the desk. If they are, let them be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers are with the report, and will be read, as their reading is called for.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., August 3, 1887.

SIR: The Superintendent of the Money-Order System has referred to this office your letter of the 12th ultimo, relative to the loss of money-order funds ($220) remitted by you for deposit January 22, ultimo, and lost in transit.

In reply thereto you are informed that the act of Congress approved March 17, 1882, prohibits the allowance of any claim for credit on account of such losses unless presented to the Postmaster-General within three months from the date of such loss. (See page 759, Postal Guide of January, 1887.)

As no claim was presented within the time prescribed by the act, no credit can be allowed on account of the loss.

Very respectfully,

EDWIN E. BRYANT,
Assistant Attorney-General, Post-Office Department.

JOHN SNODDY,
Postmaster, Big Spring, Howard County, Texas.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., December 13, 1887.

SIR: With reference to your verbal inquiry concerning the claim of Mr. John Snoddy, postmaster at Big Spring, Tex., for a credit of $220 on account of money-order funds remitted by him to Dallas, Tex., January 22, 1887, and stolen by train robbers, I have the honor to inform you that the loss of the funds in question was first brought to the knowledge of the Department by a communication from the General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, stating that the mail-car on the Texas Pacific Railway was robbed at a point 3 miles east of Gordon, Tex., at about 3 o'clock in the morning of January 23, 1887, of several registered packages, including one from Big Spring to Dallas, postmarked Big Spring, Tex., January 22, 1887.

From the files of the chief post-office inspector it appears that a circular letter of inquiry was addressed to Mr. Snoddy by the inspector, who was stationed at Austin, Tex., in which the former was requested to fill certain blank spaces in the form transmitted, with a description of the letter and its contents. From Mr. Snoddy's reply it appeared that the letter contained $220 in money, but the fact that the money belonged to the "money-order fund" was not mentioned; and so far as appears from the records of the Department no further report of the matter was made by Mr. Snoddy prior to July 12, 1887, on which date he addressed the following communication to the Superintendent of the Money-Order System: [Date, address, etc., omitted.]

"I sent $220 to Dallas on the 22d of January that was stolen by train robbers, and I have not been allowed credit for it yet."

The letter having been referred to this office, Mr. Snoddy was informed that as he had failed to present a claim within the time required by the act of March 17, 1882 (22 Stat., 29), no credit could be allowed. A careful examination of the files of the Department since then fails to show the receipt of any communication from Mr. Snoddy which by the most liberal interpretation of the act can be construed as a claim for credit or reimbursement.

I transmit herewith extracts from a report made by L. J. Randall, post-office inspector, under date May 10, 1887, which furnish all the information of value in the possession of the Department bearing upon the fact and amount of the remittance and the circumstances under which it was lost.

Very respectfully,

E. E. BRYANT,
Assistant Attorney-General, Post-Office Department.

Hon. SAMUEL W. T. LANHAM,
House of Representatives.

[Extracts from report of L. J. Randall, post-office inspector, dated May 10, 1887.]

* * * * * * *

This is the investigation of loss of $220, money-order funds alleged to have been mailed for deposit by postmaster Big Spring, Tex., addressed in R. P. E. [registered-package envelope] No. 45 to postmaster Dallas, Tex., on January 22, 1887.

I inclose herewith statement of money-order account Big Spring, Tex., for January 19, 20, 21, and 22, by which it will be seen that balance January 18 last was $504.44; amount to remit, $313; instead of which postmaster remitted $340 on the 19th.

As will be seen from statement of balance, advices, and remittances, on same sheet, there should have been remitted January 20, to cover actual surplus on hand January 19, 1887, the sum of $26; no remittance made.

Again, January 21 there should have been remitted, to cover actual surplus on hand at close of business January 20, $67; no remittance was made January 21, 1887.

The actual surplus on hand at close of business January 21 is shown to have grown to be $106. This, as contemplated by the rules, is the amount that should have been remitted January 22, 1887. Instead of this, the postmaster remitted the sum of $220, he claims.

As will readily be seen, had the postmaster at Big Spring complied with the requirements of the P. L. and R. [Postal Laws and Regulations], 1879, the actual surplus on hand at close of business would have amounted to $106, less $67, or $39, which amount would be now being looked after, instead of $220, as is now the case. * * *

The train on which this registered-package envelope went off left here [Big Spring] at 3.45 p. m., January 22, 1887, and was robbed by masked men east of Gordon, before reaching Dallas, same trip. The mail-car was entered, and there is, I suppose, no doubt that this package was taken, among many others, as reported to you some time since.

I have no doubt that John Snoddy, postmaster at Big Spring, Tex., actually mailed in registered-package envelope No. 45, addressed to postmaster Dallas, Tex., January 22, 1887, $220, money-order funds, for deposit, and that it was taken by robbers as above indicated.

In view of the fact that the postmaster did not remit $67, the actual surplus of money-order funds on hand at close of business January 20, 1887, on the 21st of January, as required by the regulations, I do not recommend that he have credit for that amount; but inasmuch as the remittance of an excess is not forbidden, and as he actually had, as shown by his books, cash to the amount of $258.01, money-order funds, in his possession, I recommend that he be credited $220, less $67, the amount he should have remitted January 21, 1887, or $153.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The recommendation is that he have $220, less the money that he sent at his own risk.

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator will have noticed in the report that while there were $67 forwarded at former times less than might have been forwarded at the time in question, the amount required by the regulations of the Department to be forwarded was but $147, and the postmaster overpaid at that time the difference between $147 and $220; so that the point suggested is purely technical. The Government was not injured. The fact is, the postmaster forwarded to the Department the amount between $147 and $220, which he need not have forwarded; so that so far as the equity is concerned there is no doubt about the loss of the money, and the report shows it, and the Government is not in any way wronged.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right; I am satisfied.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair announces the regular order to be the consideration of resolutions coming over from a former day under objection.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. DOLPH. Is that motion debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. DOLPH. I hope the Senate will not adjourn to Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can only proceed by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. DOLPH. We are all anxious to get at the bills upon the Calendar which can be passed as soon as reached. I hope we shall have one day for the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us vote without debate. We have too much debate on things that are debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEWART. I move to proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 120, Senate bill 1176.

Mr. PLUMB. I object to anything being done until we complete the formal morning business.

Mr. STEWART. The morning business is concluded.

Mr. PLUMB. I beg pardon; it has not been concluded.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the Senator from Kansas if he will consent to let his resolution go over?

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection to the resolution to which the Senator refers being sent over; but there is another resolution on the Calendar which ought to be passed.

Mr. REAGAN. I want the post-office resolution to go over for one day.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 120.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1176) to authorize the sale to aliens of certain mineral lands. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. HARRIS. So I understand, but I want to appeal to the Senator from Nevada and other Senators to let us go to the Calendar to-day. I understand there is no Senator who wishes to proceed with the argument on the educational bill. If we proceed by a motion, as the Senator is now proceeding, to take up a particular bill, we shall spend hours of the day in a scramble for consideration. I therefore appeal to the Senator to let us go to the Calendar and consider unobjected cases under Rule VIII, and we shall probably reach his bill at an early period if we proceed in that regular way.

Mr. STEWART. This bill was taken up yesterday by unanimous consent. I think there will be no difficulty about it. I think the debate is over, and we can pass it in a moment.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator is entirely mistaken. The debate has just begun.

Mr. STEWART. If it has just begun, we had better have it continue. I adhere to my motion. I think an important bill of this kind ought to be considered. It will be 2 o'clock in a few minutes, and the regular order for that hour will not interfere with it.

Mr. PLUMB. There are resolutions of inquiry of very great importance pending on the Calendar, and resolutions which will be passed as soon as they are reached. It is the orderly mode of transacting business to let them come forward in their order and be disposed of. I do not think the Senator from Nevada will make anything by his motion at this time. He will have plenty of opportunity to bring up his bill, and if it is brought up now it will take more time.

Mr. STEWART. I will yield.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate proceeds by unanimous consent only. Will the Senate agree to the motion of the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. STEWART. I withdraw my motion.

THE MAIL SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair then lays before the Senate the first resolution coming over from a former day, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A resolution submitted by Mr. PLUMB, January 30, 1888, directing the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to make a thorough inquiry into the cause of inefficient mail service.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the Senator from Kansas to let that lie over for one day.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution lies over, retaining its place for consideration on the Calendar. The next resolution will be stated.

TREATY WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

The CHIEF CLERK. A resolution submitted by Mr. RIDDLEBERGER January 31, 1888, to consider in open session the treaty now pending between our Government and Great Britain.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, Senators around me suggest that there is no occasion for the further consideration of this resolution, and I think they are right. I only would prefer to state, if it is allowable while the resolution is pending, that I think the British lion has been whisked off by a vote of 23 to 21. I only say that now, so that it can go out in open session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next resolution upon the Calendar will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A resolution submitted by Mr. RIDDLEBERGER January 31, 1888, to amend Senate Rule XXXVII.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. That is the resolution looking to the change of rules. That, of course, relates to the same matter; in other words, under which I thought I could get a so-called treaty with Great Britain before the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. I rise to a point of order. The Senator is violating the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia will suspend.

Mr. HAWLEY. He is consciously and defiantly violating the rule.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I beg pardon; I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. HAWLEY. I make the point of order that the Senator's remarks are out of order, because he is consciously and defiantly violating the rules of this body, which he is sworn to support.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia will not be permitted to speak of any matters in executive session while the doors of the Senate are open. The Senator from Virginia will proceed in order.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. These resolutions are in order, and I want the resolutions disposed of as the Chair himself may suggest, but I do not propose here or anywhere else to be called out of order at all times and under all circumstances by anybody.

RAILROAD RECEIVERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next resolution on the Calendar will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A resolution submitted by Mr. CALL, January 31, 1888, relative to the management of railroads by receivers appointed by United States courts.

Mr. HARRIS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida not being present, the resolution will lie over, retaining its place.

MILITARY CEMETERY AT MOUND CITY, KANS.

The next resolution on the Calendar was the resolution submitted by Mr. PLUMB, February 2, 1888, relative to the military cemetery at Mound City, Kans.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate as to whether the military cemetery at Mound City, Kans., is under the charge of his Department, and, if so, whether adequate means have been taken for its care and protection.

The resolution was agreed to.

LAND-OFFICE FEES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next resolution will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK read the resolution submitted by Mr. PLUMB, February 2, 1888, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate whether the charges made by registers and receivers of land offices for reducing to writing testimony in contest and other cases is greater than the cost of performing such service, and, if so, whether, in view of the financial needs of those called on to pay these charges, the same might not properly be reduced to an amount sufficient only to cover the cost of the same.

The resolution was agreed to.

ALIEN OWNERSHIP OF MINERAL LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are no further resolutions coming over from a former day,

Mr. STEWART. Now I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 120.

Mr. TELLER. I inquire what became of the resolution that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] offered? Is it not still on the table?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions on the table do not come up under the order of morning business, but only those coming over from a former day under objection. The Senator from Nevada moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1176) to authorize the sale to aliens of mineral lands.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. When this bill was up yesterday I offered an amendment, not supposing it would lead to any discussion; but inasmuch as one Senator on each side of the Chamber has objected to it and indicated opposition to the amendment, and as in all probability it will lead to some debate, and inasmuch as I am very anxious to have early action on the bill reported by the Committee on Mines and Mining, and do not wish to obstruct its passage, I shall, with the consent of the chairman of that committee and of the Senate, withdraw the amendment, giving notice that I shall offer it at some more opportune time to a bill which it will not probably delay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon withdraws the amendment proposed by him yesterday. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. BECK. Let it be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment reported by the Committee on Mines and Mining, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the act entitled "An act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, etc.," approved March 3, 1887, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting after section 4 of said act the following:

"Provided, however, That this act shall not relate to, or in any manner affect, the title to mineral lands or mining claims in the Territories of the United States, which have been acquired or held under the mineral-land laws of the United States, nor to mills or other reduction works or property used in the production of metals from said mineral lands or claims; but, as to all such mineral lands, mining claims, mills, reduction works, and other property, the laws of the United States and of the Territories shall be and remain the same as though this act had not passed."

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. President, I do not feel disposed to make any captious objection to the bill which has just been read by the Secretary; but I was not at the committee meeting when the bill was considered, and did not hear the views expressed by those who were advocating its passage. I have not yet been able to hear any expression of views from those gentlemen who advocate the passage of this bill to remove the objections that I find on an examination of it.

I assume that Congress in 1887 adopted the policy it deemed proper as to investments by aliens in the public lands in the Territories and in the District of Columbia, and that policy as applied to investments by aliens in lands also applied equally to investments in the mining interests of the Territories. If that policy was a wise policy, if that policy adopted by Congress in 1887 in reference to the public lands was a policy which the wisdom of experience has shown to be proper, I can not see why an exception should be applied to the mining interests of those Territories. And for that reason, without going into further discussion of this bill, as I may perhaps do upon another occasion, I would oppose the passage of the bill unless there can be an explanation to convince me that the policy adopted by Congress in 1887 in reference to lands should not be applied to the mining interests of the Territories.

There is another provision I desire to call to the attention of the Senate in connection with this bill. Under the second section of the act of 1887 it is expressly provided that foreign capital owned by aliens may be invested by associations or incorporations in the purchase of lands and in the development of the mining interests of this country to the amount of 20 per cent. of the capital stock. It strikes me, Mr. President, that where the law of 1887 has given the right to an alien to come and join with American citizens, and in the investment of the capital stock of corporations to hold one-fifth of that entire stock, the liberality of that legislation is sufficient to bring to the far-off Territories all the capital that will be necessary in the development of their mining industry, while at the same time the law controls and limits the power of aliens to control and affect in any way those mineral industries against any American interest that may exist and be affected by the control those corporations or associations have.

If that is liberal enough, and it strikes me that it is, I certainly do not think that Senators will come upon the floor of the Senate and argue before the Senate that there is not sufficient surplus capital in this country to develop all the mining interests of our Territories. We know that capital is anxiously seeking investment in that as in every other industrial interest that we have in this country. We require now four-fifths of the stock of mining corporations in the Territories to be held by American citizens and allow one-fifth to be held by foreigners. If the policy of the law in respect to lands is correct, I can not see the injustice of it in reference to the mining interests.

There is another provision of this bill to which I desire to call attention. The language used here in the tenth line is "which have been acquired or held, or which may be acquired or held." The act of 1887 is not retroactive in its character; it is prospective entirely; and why is this language in this bill inserted at all, which can have no other purpose than to protect a title acquired by aliens at a period when the laws of this country prohibited that title being acquired? There is nothing in the law of 1887 that affected in any way rights acquired prior to its passage and approval, and therefore if this clause of the amendment is to have any force or meaning it must be to cover the cases of parties who in direct violation of the law of Congress have acquired titles which they are now endeavoring to protect by the passage of this bill; otherwise there is no meaning or purpose in that clause of the amendment.

These are some of the reasons, Mr. President, that I have deemed it proper to call the attention of the Senate to before they acted upon this bill. Now I ask those Senators who favor its passage to explain the necessity of the exceptions which they make to the general policy declared in the act of 1887, and also to explain the necessity of that provision in the amendment referring to titles acquired subsequent to the passage of the act of 1887 and between the date of its passage and the approval of this act.

Mr. STEWART. I do not desire to occupy the time of the Senate in regard to this bill, but it is a very proper and necessary bill to pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. STEWART. I ask that that be laid aside informally.

Mr. BLAIR. One moment. I would like to ascertain whether there is any one who desires now or very soon to address the Senate upon the educational bill. Does the Senator from Connecticut desire to speak to-day?

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to speak upon the bill, but I am going out of town, and prefer to speak next Tuesday, immediately after the morning business. I know the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] told me he would speak on Monday. That is all I know about the speakers on the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. Unless some gentleman desires to speak now, it may be laid aside informally.

Mr. HARRIS. I understand that there is no Senator who desires to debate the educational bill to-day, and I would therefore suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that it be laid aside informally, remaining the unfinished business, but let the day be devoted to the disposition of the bill under consideration, and then to the Calendar in its regular order under Rule VIII.

Mr. BLAIR. I have been absent at a committee meeting, and wish to inquire whether any motion has been made that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to Monday.

Mr. HARRIS. It has been acted on and adopted.

Mr. BLAIR. I assent to the bill being laid aside informally. I presume the whole afternoon can be occupied with other matters; but, lest any Senator may desire to speak on the educational bill and should make the fact known to me, I desire to reserve the privilege of calling up the regular order.

Mr. HARRIS. It can be called up at any moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will be informally laid aside.

Mr. DOLPH. Is the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee agreed to, that we then go to the Calendar?

Mr. EDMUNDS. We shall see about that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No agreement other than that stated by the Chair could be made at this time; that the unfinished business be informally laid aside, another bill being before the Senate.

The bill (S. 1176) to authorize the sale to aliens of certain mineral lands continues before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STEWART. This is a very important bill. The act to which it is an amendment was a very unfortunate one so far as the mining interests were concerned. There is no State that excludes foreign capital in the development of its mines. This bill, if it passes, will place the mining Territories in this regard precisely on a level with the States, and they will have the same laws with regard to the use of foreign capital. Foreign capital has been used in the development of mines throughout the mining regions for the last thirty years without injury to any one.

The mining law as it stood before the passage of the alien land act did not allow foreigners to prospect for or locate mines, but only to acquire title after the patent was issued. I may as well explain how it occurred.

There is a class of men in the mining regions who have devoted themselves for a generation to prospecting for mines. When they have discovered a mine, it becomes necessary to secure capital to work it so as to obtain the metal. They have been in the habit of proceeding to the money centers—New York, San Francisco, and London, the principal points, and sometimes to Chicago—to make up companies to secure capital for the purpose of developing mines. In that way most of the mining has been carried on, and there has been no discrimination as to where the capital came from, and there is no danger of any monopoly in this, for they usually pay a sufficient price, and then the mine is worked out in a few years. It is not accumulating capital for all time, as when you acquire agricultural lands; but the usual life of a mine is ten years, when it is worked out. So there is no monopoly about it.

The money invested in the development is paid out to our people for labor and machinery, and no one has ever suggested that any evil whatever came of it. The present law cuts off the investment of money by foreigners, which is really more for the benefit of our people than for that of anybody else, for we furnish the labor and the machinery, and it is a very small portion of the produce of the mine that is paid out in dividends. Occasionally there is here and there a brilliant success in mining, and that leads others to go on with the business, but it is not in the aggregate a very profitable business. It is, however, a very exciting business, on account of the occasional prizes that are won.

I do not wish to limit the market; I do not wish to limit the places where our miners may go to get aid for the development of our mines. They were not limited until this law was passed. This law was passed to prevent the accumulation of large quantities of agricultural land, which when once secured may remain in the hands of foreigners for all time, and they may accumulate large properties to the exclusion of settlers and to the exclusion of our people. It was thought by the last Congress that it was proper to stop this.

Mr. FAULKNER. May I ask a question?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. FAULKNER. I understood the Senator to say that the mines were generally worked out in ten years.

Mr. STEWART. I should think that would be about the average life of a mine.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask for information, is there any law which limits the time within which the operations in the development of mines shall occur after a patent has been granted?

Mr. STEWART. No; previous to the issuance of a patent the actual work is done. After the patent is issued there is no limitation of time so far as the act of Congress is concerned; but most of the States and Territories pass pretty stringent statutes of limitation, so that they will take care of themselves in that regard. There is no difficulty about that, and it can be fixed in that way. Both the States and Territories have the power to pass those acts. The alien land law would not reach that question. If there is any defect about people not working their mines, the States and Territories can reach it. The simple question here is whether we will allow foreign capital to be used for the development of our mines, by which our own people get employment, by which our mechanics can be employed, and have a large trade in supplying implements of mining and so on, and as to which before this law no complaint was made, and from which no evil effect resulted in the experience of thirty years, and there was no suggestion that monopolies could arise.

You might as well say that foreign capital should not be used in the development of any other interest; that we should not borrow foreign capital to be invested in railroads. It would be a great hardship to discriminate in this country against the Territories in this way, and against a class of men struggling for a generation there to find something that they could have a market for everywhere and secure money for its development. It would be a very hard law, and I do not think this feature of it was considered by Congress when it was passed. I think they had reference to agricultural lands, and made the law general without considering what effect it would have on the mines.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask a single question of the Senator from West Virginia, who I see is a member of the committee, the three Democratic members being the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], who has evidently given the bill quite thorough consideration since yesterday morning. He announced yesterday that he had never been apprised of a meeting of the committee. I should like to know what members of the committee reported this bill. That may influence my vote very much.

Mr. STEWART. That demands an explanation. The Senator from West Virginia was not a member of the committee when the bill was first considered. His name was not printed in the list, and is not now printed in the list of committees we have been going by—that in the RECORD—and the clerk of the committee was misled by that fact, and did not send the Senator a notice. We regret it very much; but it had not been observed that he was a member of the committee, and he did not get the notice of the meeting for that reason.

Mr. BECK. Was the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] or the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] present at the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STEWART. I do not think they were.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I have listened attentively to the discussion of this bill on both sides and confess that I am not satisfied about what ought to be done. It seems to me that this is a matter relating to the public lands of the United States. There is a committee in charge of the investigation of matters of that character; and while I have no disposition to make a motion to reflect on the committee that has had this matter under consideration, still if it is right and proper and a bill that ought to be passed, investigation by another committee will certainly do no harm, and I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the bill be committed to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. STEWART. That seems to me to reflect upon the Committee on Mines and Mining. All the members of the committee had notice except the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], who was omitted by mistake. I hope a motion of that kind will not prevail, for I undertake to say that the two questions are entirely dissimilar. The question of monopolizing agricultural lands and the question of monopolizing mineral lands have no relation to each other, and if the Committee on Mines and Mining is not competent to consider this particular question the committee had better be abolished.

Mr. BECK. I did not rise for the purpose of reflecting on the committee; but when it is admitted that three out of the seven members of the committee were not present when the bill was considered and know nothing about it, those three being the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], all on this side of the Senate, and the other four gentlemen on the committee, the chairman, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], his colleague [Mr. JONES, of Nevada], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], on the other side, all, I may say, from one corner of the country, I do think the bill ought to be further considered by the full committee. I want to vote intelligently on it, and I desire information from the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Senator from Arkansas to be kind enough to withdraw his motion in order that I may move that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I agree to the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont; and I would say that in making the motion I submitted I had no intention to reflect upon the Committee on Mines and Mining; but it occurred to me that the bill should have gone in the first place to the Committee on Public Lands, and my intention was to send the bill where I thought it ought to have gone first.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to commit to the Committee on Public Lands being withdrawn, the Senator from Vermont moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And on that motion I simply wish to say that I think the action of the Committee on Mines and Mining, while it was a mere mistake, was still irregular, for the reason that no notice was issued to one of its members. The explanation is, of course, perfectly good as a matter of honor and fair play and all that. Supposing all the other members had been present, and all of them but one had notice sent to them, whether they got it or not—mistakes in transmission will happen—the case would be different; but here no notice was started out from the committee-room, and therefore the committee, if they had had a purpose to exclude the member, as of course they had not, just as if the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations should issue a notice to all the members but one and then proceed to act, it would be irregular. As in this case, it was a pure accident in respect to which not the slightest reflection can be made upon the Senator from Nevada or upon the clerk of the committee. The action of the committee, as I believe, was irregular.

In the next place, I should be glad to have this committee on the merits consider how, consistently with the act that we passed a year ago on this whole subject, the rest of it, after this amendment shall have become a law, can stand on principle. If it is proper for people owning mining lands in the United States to mortgage them to foreigners, to foreign corporations, to other people holding capital, why is it not proper for me owning four or five acres of land in the State of Vermont to raise money from a foreigner by mortgaging my little place to him in the same way? I do not see the principle upon which this difference can be made in allowing foreign interests and foreign capital to get possession of the mining property of the United States, while you say they shall not get possession of the pastures of the farmer.

I should be very glad to have the committee in their report explain upon what ground the distinction can be made. Of course the broad ground can be taken that the whole act was ill advised, though I do not agree to that ground, and that the acquirement of real property in this country should be open to the enormous accumulations of foreign capital. I do not agree to that, but that is a ground that can be stated and supported by some arguments, on the principle that capital is free and everybody ought to have a right to mortgage his property to anybody that will lend him money on it, or to sell it to anybody who will buy. But if the principle of the original law is right, it is not clear to my mind, and I do not know that it can be made clear, why we should say that it is good for the interests of the United States that foreigners shall own its mines while they shall not own its agricultural lands or its village lots.

Mr. FAULKNER. I simply desire to say to the chairman of the committee that I have no personal complaint in reference to the fact that no notice was sent to me of the meeting of the committee which considered this bill. I am confident that there was nothing intentionally improper on the part of the committee, or the chairman of the committee, or its clerk, in not sending me notice. I know the Senator too well to think for one moment that there was any omission except that which is due to the omission from the RECORD of my name as a member of the committee.

Mr. BECK. I rose, not for the purpose of reflecting on the committee or the clerk, but desiring information and desiring to have it from the gentlemen appointed on the committee. Looking at the question just as the Senator from Vermont does, that the law of March 3, 1887, is to be repealed at this time, in part at least, by this bill, and not being prepared to repeal it, believing that the policy now suggested is a bad one, but being open to conviction if I hear a full discussion after investigation, I desire it to go back to the committee because I wish to vote according to my conviction after receiving proper enlightenment.

Mr. STEWART. I ask the Senator from Vermont if there is any prohibition in the law of his State against foreign capital being used in the development of the marble quarries.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, and there is no prohibition against foreign capital being invested in buying my farm. I wish there was. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of any Senator present if there is any provision in any State law in the United States against foreign capital being used in the development of mines. I believe there are some restrictions upon the acquisition of real estate by foreigners, but there is a very wide distinction between the two cases.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no distinction in the State of Vermont between a mine, a quarry, and a farm. The foreigner can buy the farm and mine both if he choose. There is no distinction between the two classes of property.

Mr. STEWART. There is a decided distinction in the nature of things. It does not require a very rich man to hold 100 acres of agricultural land; he can develop a small farm with a small capital; but a silver mine is of no more use to a poor man than a mountain of iron if he can not get the money to develop it. If he can get the money he can develop it; but he can go on 160 acres of land and till it. The cases are entirely different. In the case of agricultural land there is a chance for the laboring man to be excluded by the monopoly of land. In the case of a mine there is no chance whatever for the laboring man being excluded in that way, because it is of no use to him unless he can obtain money to develop it. I say there is a great difference between shutting off the means of getting money to develop his mine whereby he can have a chance to labor and to live, and monopolizing agricultural lands and thus depriving him of a home. There is nothing parallel in the cases, and the people of the Territories universally feel that they are deeply injured by the operation of the law as it now stands.

Inasmuch, however, as one member of the committee was not notified, and inasmuch as it has been suggested that further investigation is wanted, I shall consent to have the bill rereferred to the Committee on Mines and Mining; and I give notice here now that on Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock there will be a meeting of that committee, and I hope the gentlemen present will take notice of it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the bill goes back to the committee, in answer to the suggestion made by the Senator from Vermont, I should like to read what Governor Stevenson, of Idaho, said in his report for 1887 to the Secretary of the Interior, and which coincides with the views expressed by nearly all the Territorial governors in their annual reports.

Governor Stevenson said:

> The business of mining is one of the great industries of Idaho, and requires for its successful prosecution the expenditure of large sums of money in the development and exploration of mines and in the erection of quartz mills, smelting works, and other necessary machinery.
> The mines in this Territory are mostly undeveloped and are in the hands of poor men who are not able to make the necessary improvement and work their valuable mines successfully; consequently they are anxious to lease or sell portions of them to capitalists who are willing to invest their money in mining enterprises. The risk and expense of developing mining properties are great, and there are so many avenues for the safe investment of money where, if the returns are not so great, they are yet more certain and secure. For the purpose of carrying on large enterprises of this kind resort must be had to those places where capital is abundant and seeking investment and rates of interest low. Several large and important mining transactions were about being consummated by mine owners in Idaho with foreign capitalists when the act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens became a law. But for the passage of this law and making it apply to mining claims a large amount of foreign capital would have been invested in opening up and developing our mines.
> Had this law been applicable to agricultural, grazing, coal, and timber lands only, it would have been just and right, for the acquiring of large tracts of land by foreigners is in conflict with every principle of our free institutions.
> The holding in case of mineral land must of necessity be so limited in area—

I read this in reply to the suggestion made by the Senator from Vermont. It shows the great difference between the two propositions—

> The holding in case of mineral land must of necessity be so limited in area, and the expenditure of money and labor so great in order to make it productive, that it can not be claimed that the holding of this class of property by aliens is any serious injury to any one; but it certainly results in great benefit to the miners of this Territory. When a mine is worked, all the alien will have is a hole in the ground, which is of no value whatever to either alien or citizen.
> I would, therefore, earnestly recommend that said "alien land act" may be so amended by Congress as to exclude from its operation mineral lands in this Territory.

It was a matter for some time of doubt whether the law as enacted applied to mineral lands, but on reference to the Attorney-General I believe it was held that it did so apply. Under the law the amount in area of mineral lands that may be taken up is very limited, so many feet long and so many feet wide that any one person, alien or citizen, can take up under the mining laws, whereas it is different in regard to grazing lands and in regard to agricultural lands. The object of the law is to prevent foreigners coming here, investing millions of dollars, and monopolizing large tracts of country in the Territories, and in that way establishing a land monopoly in this country. Here in the Territories a man discovers a mine; he is unable to get the capital in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, or San Francisco; a foreigner comes along with a million dollars and he takes the risk, buys the mine, and expends a million dollars in developing it. It happens to turn out a good venture and produces several million dollars. There is just that much wealth added to our country. If it turns out a bad venture, we have the benefit of the million dollars while it is being developed. Our working people get the benefit of that. If it turns out bad, as I say, all there is to it is a hole in the ground. There is no control given here. If it is a good thing, as I said before, the country gets the benefit of the development, the ores are worked here, and the country is enriched.

So it seems to me there is a very wide difference between the proposition to limit the control of a foreigner's interest in our grazing and agricultural lands and the proposition to limit that class with reference to our mines.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish to take up time if the bill is to be recommitted; but I think it right to say that I do not agree with the governor of Idaho in his reasoning at all. It has been considered by all civilized countries for a great many hundred years that in the matter of mines that produce precious metals in particular—and those are the ones we are now speaking of, and not iron and coal mines, etc.—the public, political interests of the country demanded that those mines should be kept nearer under general public control than ordinary lands. I think if I should take my chance in the next hundred years in the Western Territories, whether I would own various townships around a mine or be the proprietor of that mine, if it was good for anything, I should much rather be the proprietor of the mine, and I should be a much more important character; I should have a greater influence upon the politics and social progress of the country round about than I should if I were the owner of the townships of agricultural land.

That has been supposed to be agreed to by everybody in the course of human experience in civilized countries; and therefore if there were any distinction to be made at all, it would be that the alien foreigner should have less opportunities of control over the mines of the country of the precious metals than he should in buying land which when he died would descend to some particular person or be escheated to the State, as the case might be, than to have him get up a syndicate and quasi-corporation to hold possession of the resources of precious metals in the country. So it seems to me that whatever of difference there is furnishes an argument the other way; but I do not care to go into it now.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to say one word in reply to the Senator from Vermont. I am aware that it was the theory in barbarous and in semi-barbarous times, and I might say in almost civilized times too, that the king was the owner of all precious metals; and the reason assigned was that all the goodly things belonged to the crown, and therefore the mines belonged to the crown and the crown had a good title; but I think in the United States we have a different theory about the business. We think here that a mine is good to be worked and developed, and it is a good means of support to the community where it is, and gives employment to the people. But it does not give any great political power to those who do not live there. I suggest to my friend from Vermont that if he owned a silver mine in Nevada, and did not stay there and exercise his influence there, he would have no overwhelming influence there, or in any Territory, on account of owning the mine.

Mr. TELLER. How about his bank account?

Mr. STEWART. The chances are that his bank account would not be largely swelled. If he owned the mine and furnished the money to run it, the people there would appreciate him very much; but I do not think he would control the political action of his neighbors in any respect.

The fact is that the development of capital in mines is of great advantage to the mining Territories. It is the means by which they have been developed, and it is the means by which they have been able to settle up the agricultural lands and have a market. There is no monopoly in them. There is no citizen of that country who wants a law of this kind passed. They all want the mines developed; they want to get all the capital turned in that direction that they can; and there can not possibly be any evil that will result from it.

Still I want to have the bill considered by a full committee, and I will consent to have it recommitted.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, while this subject is up I wish to say something on the general question, without, however, committing myself as to what I may finally do on the bill or some measure like it.

The law upon the statute-book is the result of a bill introduced by me in this body in 1884. It represented what I believed then and believe now to be a wise and sound public policy. I do not doubt at all that the people of the Territories are a little impatient about it, and that the interest of some of them might be at least temporarily promoted by removing the restriction against the holding of mines by foreigners and foreign capital; but that is not alone to be taken into account. The mines are a part of the national possession. If they are not the property of the king, they are the property of a greater than the king, the people of the United States, and such uses as are made of them should be consistent with the public interest of all the people of the United States.

I am not, and have not been for many years, one of those who look with great favor upon projects for the immediate development of all our resources of public domain. I am entirely willing, so far as I am concerned, to leave some portions of it undeveloped for the succeeding generation. I would be glad if the population of the United States had spread itself less widely over that public domain, and that there were more of it left to be handed over to the succeeding generation. I can conceive that in the race of personal interest, in the desire to reap everything that is in sight or everything that can be brought into sight, we are, to some extent, discounting the future. I believe that in many of the Territories, if not in all of them, where mines are found, it will be just as well to have a more thorough development, covering a smaller area, a smaller number of mines, and make the business a more legitimate one, than to go around the country hawking prospectuses and finding capitalists, which, as the Senator from Nevada, in a very candid way, a moment ago said, would result probably in the depletion of the bank account of the investor. Plainly speaking, the fact is proved that the people of the Territories intended to overreach some outsiders by means of the prospect of the mine, and the law is in the way of it.

Mr. STEWART. I beg pardon; this bill does not apply to Nevada.

Mr. PLUMB. I am not talking about Nevada; I am speaking of the people of the Territories.

Mr. STEWART. I thought the Senator said Nevada.

Mr. PLUMB. If I did I did not mean it, but I meant the Territories. I say the logic of the Senator's remarks was to the effect that, after all, there was much more money sunk in mining property than was realized, and consequently it tended not to the profit, but to the poverty of the investors. If that be true, then of course these enterprises would not be called entirely legitimate, and they would be without the pale of recognition by the law. But I believe that as a sound, fundamental policy the holdings of real estate within the limits of the United States ought to be limited to those persons who are citizens of the United States, and who are willing to assume the burdens of citizenship in order to obtain its benefits.

I do not care whether there be to-day a foot of land owned by a foreigner in the United States. I would be just as actively in favor of the passage of such a law and its enforcement as is sought now to be amended if there were not a single case of alien land-holding within the United States. We have gone to the other extreme, and very unwisely, as I think. We have sought not only the investment of foreign capital in all our enterprises, but we have sought the introduction of foreign labor and foreign population. We have had great benefit out of it, no doubt. The country has been enriched; perhaps the race has been enriched. It has tended powerfully, of course, to the development not only of the country, but of all the people in it, and it has contributed largely, too, to the general spread of civilization and of the ideas which are potential in republican government throughout the world.

But we have done this with too little regard, as I think, to some of the consequences which we now begin to realize. We might have gone more slowly and more safely. We might have made the invitation a little less wide and yet got all the advantages and less of the disadvantages. I think, on the whole, the sentiment of the country is pretty clearly crystallized in the idea that it is about time to call a halt; at all events to amend to some extent the invitation which we have heretofore made broad enough to cover every person of the human kind. This movement to limit the holdings of real estate in the United States to persons who are citizens is in the direction of that public sentiment.

While I do not wish to put aside without due consideration the wishes of the people of the Territories, I want simply to say that when this question comes to be considered it ought to be considered in the larger aspect of that which concerns the people of the United States with reference to the Territories by a policy which they regard as, I believe, fundamental, and not simply with reference to the local aspects of the case. Some of these considerations I have presented, and when the bill comes up again I may have something further to say directly upon that point, as well as upon the general subject.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I was content when the motion was made to recommit the bill to let it be referred back without saying anything, but the discussion has reached to some extent the merits of the bill, and I now desire to say a few words upon it.

Within a few years past foreigners have become the owners of a very large amount of the lands of this country, of millions of acres, and out of that fact a public sentiment has grown in opposition to a holding of the lands of this country in such large quantities by foreign holders. This sentiment is one that is not at all unnatural. So far as I know the general policy of the common and civil law in all countries where those systems have prevailed has been against the holding of lands by foreigners. Of course there have been statutory modifications of it.

In addition to the objections which existed in olden times to foreigners holding lands within the country, under the class legislation and influences of most European countries large amounts of capital have got into individual hands. That large amount of capital seeks investment at very low rates of interest in Europe, and at low rates of interest here, and it has turned to seeking investment in the lands of this country.

We have seen in various countries besides our own the evils of foreign landlordship. The Irish people to-day are the sufferers from foreign landlordship. That is the real affliction of that country, which has ground the Irish people down for the last two hundred years. While we may not expect such a thing to occur to the same extent in our country, when we see the millions of acres of land of this country being secured by individuals, by corporations, and by syndicates from foreign countries, there is enough before us to have awakened the sentiment which gave rise to the passage of the law of the last Congress to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens. That law was passed in answer to a strongly developed public sentiment, and I trust we shall not undertake to break into the principles of that law.

It seems to me that the danger of the investment of foreign capital, of foreign influence, and foreign landlordship is just as great in mining communities as in agricultural communities in proportion to their extent. It was suggested a few days ago that the mining interests occupy but a small portion of the country. I do not know exactly in what sense that expression was intended to have been understood, but we know that the mining region extends through all the Territories and includes some of the States of the Union. This bill provides—

That this act shall not relate to or in any manner affect the title to mineral lands or mining claims in the Territories of the United States which have been acquired or held, or which may be acquired or held.

I take it that the words "which have been acquired or held" are surplusage. If there were titles vested under the existing law, then we could not interfere with those titles by legislative enactment. I take it that those words are not necessary and that the other words contain the essence of the bill, that is, those lands "which may be acquired or held." There is no limitation under the bill as to the manner in which they may be acquired. They may be acquired by purchase, or they may be acquired as a citizen of the United States could acquire them.

It was suggested by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] a few moments ago that only very small portions of these mineral lands could be acquired by a single individual. I have not studied the general subject and do not profess to understand it as he does, but I understand that to apply to the first acquirement of these small holdings. I do not understand that it extends to a prohibition against consolidating various claims in the same ownership after the right has been acquired.

Mr. TELLER. No, of course not.

Mr. STEWART. No, it does not.

Mr. REAGAN. So that really, if this bill be passed, there is nothing to prevent foreign owners and syndicates from acquiring any amount of the mineral lands of this country which they have capital to acquire and which other persons may be disposed to sell to them. That is creating an interest and a power over the domain of the country which is not in accordance with the history of nations upon that subject.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. REAGAN. In one moment. I know that in most of the States foreigners can take land by purchase, subject to divestiture by office found, but in most if not all of them they can not take land by inheritance. So much of the common law and so much of the civil system still prevail throughout this country.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. REAGAN. I will hear the question.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he knows of any law in any State in the Union similar to this in respect to foreigners owning stock in a corporation? There is a limitation in the act of 1887 providing that foreigners shall not own more than 20 per cent. of the stock of a mining corporation. They can not own more than that; otherwise it involves a forfeiture. Is there any law in any State of the Union whereby foreigners may not own any amount of stock in corporations, either for mining purposes, for manufacturing purposes, or for other purposes? Is there any such limitation by law in any State in the Union?

Mr. REAGAN. I am not able to answer the question the Senator asks. If there is no such law, I think there ought to be a limitation. If this bill shall pass in its present form, it repeals the provision of the existing law limiting the right to own stock to 20 per cent. of stock in mining associations, and aliens may own the entire amount of capital stock. I do not wish to see men and corporations, under class legislation, fostered by class interests and by special privileges in foreign countries, extort money from the people of those countries and come here and invest it in our lands and our mines in order to give them a foothold here and enable them to place our people in the same condition in which they have placed the people of their own countries. I should regret to see this or any bill pass repealing the provisions of the law in that respect.

Mr. STEWART. I supposed, Mr. President, that the Senator from Texas was at least opposed to a contraction of the currency. I thought he was in favor of a liberal amount of money if it could be obtained from the earth. If the law is preventing the production of a large amount of gold and silver by keeping capital out of the country, it is a discrimination against the people of this country.

Mr. REAGAN. I have no fear about limiting the production of gold and silver in this country by a refusal to pass this bill, but I would put the mines into the hands of American citizens to produce those precious metals.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think it would be very easy. We notice with what comfort and ease people can enjoy the misfortunes of their neighbors. I think that if almost any State in the Union were put under the iron rule in regard to its industries that the Territories are put under by the law of 1887 as it stands, they would find reason to complain. None of the States have put themselves in such chains. None of the States have prevented their citizens from getting aid to develop their industries wherever they could obtain it.

There is a wide difference between getting money to develop mines and monopolizing the agricultural lands. I am in full sympathy with the spirit of the law so far as it relates to agricultural lands, because, as I before remarked, the agricultural lands are the homes of the people, and they ought to have them for that purpose. They do not need any foreign capital to make the soil; it was laid there by nature, and if they are allowed to go upon it they can make homes; but a silver mine in the mountains is as worthless as a desert without capital to develop it.

So far from interfering with our laboring men and bringing them down to the level of European laborers, it gives labor to them; it makes more labor and raises the price of labor. It is the laboring men who want these mines opened and who want the capital obtained to develop them. Throughout the whole country it is the laboring men who are demanding that capital shall not be kept out of the mines and they thereby kept out of employment. It is the laboring men who ask for this legislation, and it was the laboring men who protested against having the agricultural lands taken away from them as homes. There is no parallel whatever in the cases. It is an unjust restriction upon the development of the Territories and a discrimination against their development which no State in the Union has put upon its own industries. As I said before, all the mining States hold out inducements to put capital into mines and to give employment to the people. There is no restriction made by the States.

The law does not affect my State, but it affects my neighbors. It affects the Territories. They have universally asked for this amendment, and they are waiting for the action of Congress to relieve them because they supposed it was an oversight in the law. They did not suppose there was going to be any attempt made to destroy their industries.

Suppose the State of Kansas were deprived of the use of money wherever she could get it for railroads or for homes for her people. I will guaranty that in the laws of the State of Kansas there is no prohibition upon a foreigner owning stock in a corporation to be managed in this country. All railroad corporations go to Europe for money when they feel disposed to do so; the country is developed by those means; and if we can get money cheaper there than here, why not let us get it?

Senators talk about the mineral lands as if they included the great body of our lands. There is not one acre in ten thousand of the public lands that is mineral. The mineral lands are little places in the mountains, which would be entirely a desert but for the mines. There is not a mining claim in all this country that is on agricultural land. In the whole region you can not find a place where there is a mining claim on agricultural land. The mineral lands are usually in high mountains where it is entirely a desert, so far as grazing and agricultural products are concerned. The amount that one person can take is 1,500 feet in length by 60 feet in width along the claim. The space occupied by them is comparatively nothing. It does not extend to the great body of the lands.

You talk about these being mineral Territories, when, if there was one acre in ten thousand that is mineral you would have a marvelous country. The mines are only little spots of land fit for no other purpose, and only made valuable by the use of money to develop them.

All these Territories have been developed by money brought from outside the Territories. You would have had no inhabitants in those Territories had it not been for money brought from outside to develop them, to put in machinery, and to open the mines. That is the way the mines have been developed; and now it is proposed to discriminate against them. It is proposed that Congress shall say that no foreign capital shall be used, because that is what it is, and then the law is directed, so far as the Territories are concerned, against the use of foreign capital. So far as the agricultural lands are concerned the law is directed against the use of agricultural lands, but when we come to the Territories it provides that you shall not use foreign capital; that a foreigner shall not have more than 20 per cent. of stock in a corporation that is engaged in opening and developing a mine.

There is no danger of any permanent monopoly, because when the mines are worked they work them out and that is the end of them. There is nothing permanent left; but the advantage to the country is immense; it is immense in developing new States and Territories, in developing their industries and building up agriculture; it is immense to the commerce of the world, by pouring gold and silver into the channels of commerce, and giving it life, and preventing ruinous contraction and hard times.

Why this restriction, why this blow at mining, I do not understand. I suppose that the provision in the law was put there by a mistake. I do not suppose that it was really intended that the new Territories which are now being developed should not have the same chances that the others have had from the beginning to develop their resources. If this rule had been applied formerly, a very different state of things would have existed in this country, for a very large amount of the money that has been paid out to laborers in the Territories came from Germany, from France, from Holland, and from England. No word of complaint came from any one, and the people received the benefit of it; and to cut them off now would be an unjust discrimination. Such a law would never be thought of or tolerated in a State for one moment.

I am glad that this discussion has taken place. We shall again consider the bill in the committee, and bring it before the Senate at a future time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the bill is recommitted to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. STEWART. Let the bill go back to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is disposed of.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the joint resolution (S. R. 6) for the removal of all political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States upon Abram C. Myers.

EMMA S. FREE.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like at this time to move to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 431) granting a pension to Emma S. Free, widow of Thomas S. Free, late major of the United States Army, was indefinitely postponed. The bill was reported adversely by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER] January 31, 1888, and was postponed indefinitely. I ask that the vote may be reconsidered with a view of having it sent again to the Committee on Pensions for further consideration. Further testimony has come to my possession.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed may be reconsidered, and that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

STATUE OF SPENCER F. BAIRD.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill 140.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that the request be put in such a form that the unfinished business will be informally laid aside to consider the bill indicated by the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 140) for the erection of a bronze statue of Spencer F. Baird, late Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution to contract for a statue in bronze of Spencer F. Baird, late Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, to be erected upon the grounds in front of the National Museum; and appropriates for this purpose, and for the entire expense of the foundation and pedestal of the monument, $15,000.

Mr. MORRILL. The bill proposes a monument in front of the National Museum for perhaps the most distinguished civilian who has died in our country during the past year. His eminent scientific services are known to all of us. His unselfish and untiring work as Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, with all the branches attached to it, has been conspicuous for years; and I think that perhaps there has been no measure proposed for a monument that will receive a more hearty response than this.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPOSITIONS OF WITNESSES.

Mr. COKE. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (S. 832) to provide an additional mode of taking depositions of witnesses in causes pending in the courts of the United States.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that, in addition to the mode of taking the depositions of witnesses under dedimus potestatem or otherwise, now provided by law, in causes pending at law in the district and circuit courts of the United States, it shall be lawful for such courts to make rules and regulations allowing the taking of depositions or testimony under dedimus potestatem, or otherwise, as near as may be, according to the mode prescribed by the laws of the State in which the courts are held.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that he had been directed to transmit to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the papers in relation to the claim of J. D. & C. T. Hewlet.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1022) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands in Kansas; and

A bill (S. 1754) for the relief of Henry H. Marmaduke, of Missouri.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1514) relating to the record of wills in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 1844) to promote agriculture, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 4342) to discontinue the coinage of the three-cent piece;

A bill (H. R. 5723) to amend section 461 of the Revised Statutes, regulating fees for exemplifications of land patents, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 5870) to amend the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia for the protection of girls and for the punishment of the crime of rape.

SIGNING OF PATENTS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator if he will yield to me to call up House bill 5514, that the Secretary of the Interior is quite anxious should pass, it being for his relief, allowing the Assistant Secretary to sign patents. It will only take a moment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will withdraw the motion for that purpose. I can renew it at any time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5514) to amend section 4883 of the Revised Statutes. It proposes to amend section 4883 of the Revised Statutes so as to read:

SEC. 4883. All patents shall be issued in the name of the United States of America, under the seal of the Patent Office, and shall be signed by the Secretary of the Interior or under his direction by one of the Assistant Secretaries of the Interior, and countersigned by the Commissioner of Patents, and they shall be recorded, together with the specifications, in the Patent Office, in books to be kept for that purpose.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill to amend section 4883 of the Revised Statutes to enable the Assistant Secretary of the Interior to sign patents.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PENSACOLA.

Mr. PASCO. I should like to call up the bill (S. 1723) providing for the completion of the public building in the city of Pensacola, Fla., as originally designed.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty-two;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to have the United States court-house and post-office building in the city of Pensacola, Fla., completed as originally designed, including tower, basement, and attic stories, fences, grading, and heating; and the sum of $32,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose herein mentioned.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No report accompanies the bill.

Mr. PASCO. I will state that the appropriation is recommended by the Supervising Architect and is according to the original specifications and estimates.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are there any papers from the Supervising Architect on the subject?

Mr. PASCO. I have a letter from the Supervising Architect in the committee-room, stating that $32,000 will be sufficient, and upon that estimate the committee reduced the appropriation from $50,000 to $32,000. That report of the Supervising Architect was before the committee when the bill was considered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I must say with great respect (not as applying to this particular case, for I know nothing about it) that I am very much afraid we are acting rather rapidly and without due consideration on the subject of public buildings over the United States—as well in the State of Vermont as elsewhere, I will add. I should like to have some definite official information about this possible change, and I should be glad if the Senator would not press the bill at this moment, and get the official papers, as the Senator has them not with him now, wherein it is represented, I have no doubt, as the Senator states, but so that it will go into the RECORD and show exactly upon what grounds it is that the Senate passes the bill.

Mr. PASCO. I should like very much to get the bill through to-day, as certain days have been fixed in the other House for the consideration of bills of this kind, and the building is in an unfinished condition. I should like very much to get the bill through to-day. As proposed to be amended it is in exact accordance with the report of the Supervising Architect.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator from Florida will permit me, I will state to the Senator from Vermont that I happen to know personally the correctness of his statement in regard to the report of the Supervising Architect. We took the matter up in our committee and examined it carefully at the last meeting, and reduced the amount from $50,000 to $32,000 in conformity with that report.

This is one of the most deserving bills of the kind that has been before the Senate. The public building at Pensacola is unfinished and its usefulness is considerably impaired by reason of that fact. A large proportion of the money necessary for the construction of the building has been expended, and this is simply to utilize it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much has the original appropriation been increased altogether?

Mr. VEST. I think this is the first increase of the original appropriation.

Mr. PASCO. This is the first increase of the regular appropriation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What was the original appropriation?

Mr. VEST. It was $150,000, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. PASCO. I think that was the amount.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And this makes $32,000 more.

Mr. VEST. It makes $32,000 more, which is absolutely necessary to complete the building. The Department has expended the money that was appropriated. Pensacola is a very important point, and after this money has been expended nothing will remain to be done.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why did not the Department keep within the appropriation?

Mr. VEST. That is one of the questions that it is beyond the ability of any Senator to answer. This thing has occurred over and over again. It has occurred in bills where we have specifically provided that the Department should not expend one dollar beyond the appropriation, and still it was spent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. When are we to stop it?

Mr. VEST. That is another question of the future. There are a good many questions connected with public buildings in this country. If the Senator will tell me when we are to abandon the present system, then I shall be able to tell him when we can stop it; but I am afraid that it is impossible to go into the question of the public buildings of the country now. The tariff and the Blair bill sink into insignificance when we come to that. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALE. I am afraid the Senator from Missouri is right in estimating the importance of these measures, and I only rise for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senator from Vermont to what the Senate will have to consider very soon, not only upon this bill, but upon dozens, and it may be scores, of others touching the removal of the limit that has been fixed in times past, by deliberation and due consideration, first by committees and then by Congress, upon buildings all over the country.

It has been the fashion to introduce bills and refer them to the proper committee here and in the other body, and fix a limit for the cost of the building, which ought to be the chart followed by the Department in erecting the structure. So far from that being the case, the Committee on Appropriations has before it, referred to it, estimates from the Department covering long lists of public buildings all over the country, estimating for sums beyond the limit already fixed by law.

I do not say that in a given case such a condition may not be inevitable from peculiar circumstances and conditions surrounding the construction of one of these public buildings; but that Congress should proceed deliberately and declare what a building shall cost in one place and another in twenty different cases, and that then the work should proceed deliberately without regard being paid to the limitations fixed by Congress, and we be called upon in an urgent deficiency bill to make up the sums which it is estimated will be needed to finish the building, is something which ought to be investigated; it is something which ought to be looked into. Otherwise we may as well fix no limits hereafter to any building. Otherwise we may as well understand that we will declare that a building shall be put up in Texas, or in Maine, or in Vermont, or in Minnesota, or California, and that we leave it to the sweet will of the Department and the persons who are urging them to increase the cost and size of the building, and that we will exercise no jurisdiction whatever over the matter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And that sweet will is the will of a man who owns property in the place and has charge of the building.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly. I hope the Senator from Vermont in looking into this subject will not let his efforts stop at this one building, about which I know nothing and against which I have nothing to say. Against the increase of the limit I have no arguments to urge, as I know nothing whatever about it; but I do know the general condition, that we are to be called upon in an urgent deficiency bill, where Congress has fixed limits, in dozens, perhaps scores of cases, to appropriate more money, perhaps aggregating hundreds of thousands or millions of dollars in this direction. The Senate ought to look to it very carefully before we take any step in this direction.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will permit me, I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds present, but I simply want to state that we are now wrestling with this question.

Mr. HALE. With the question of expending beyond the limit of appropriation?

Mr. VEST. With the question of limiting the expenditure. We have before us three bills, and we passed all our time at the last meeting of the committee in considering the propriety of enacting some general measurs which would apply to the whole country. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] is very much interested in this subject. All I want to say, in justice to the committee, is that our next meeting is called specially with reference to this very matter, and we propose to formulate and bring into the Senate a general bill. It is a very difficult subject. The Postmaster-General dealt in his report very largely with it, and formulated a bill which was introduced at the beginning of this session by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER]. The Senator from Nebraska introduced a bill, and the Senator from Kansas introduced one. Out of these three bills we hope to make one which will receive the sanction of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Are they general bills?

Mr. VEST. It will be a general bill providing that a public building shall be erected where it is necessary, under the suggestions of the Department, in towns having a certain population. I merely speak generally.

Mr. HALE. With a limitation of classification as to population?

Mr. VEST. We propose to classify them and get rid of this eternal importunity and log-rolling.

Mr. HALE. Such a bill would not get rid of it. We may pass all the general bills in the world, and the individual case will still arise where the Department will want more money to complete the building.

Mr. VEST. When such a bill comes before the Senate, it will be possible for the Senator from Maine to turn his intellectual brain in that direction. If he and the Senator from Vermont will bend their energies and investigation in that direction, for one I shall be exceedingly obliged to them.

Mr. HALE. It would not be of any use.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will permit me, I will say just a word about my experience upon the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I personalize him because our relations are exceedingly friendly and have always been so. He wants a public building in the State of Maine, which, by the way, is the best supplied State in the Union in that direction.

Mr. HALE. Then I do not want the public building.

Mr. VEST. There are more public buildings, according to population, in that State than in any other State in the Union. The Senator wants a building in his State. He comes to me and says, perfectly justified by our social relations in doing so, that he is immensely interested in that measure; that, in other words, Liberty will lie bleeding in the streets if he does not get it, and he solicits me to do what I can. He gets a report from the Supervising Architect, who says the public service demands it. He has a court there, an internal-revenue office, and, of course, a post-office. It would be churlish in me to say I would oppose his bill; and he knows better, perhaps, than myself—for his public service has been longer—in what a position a member of this or the other branch of Congress puts himself when he poses as a general reformer and obstructor to the expenditure of money for any purpose whatever.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator let me interrupt him? I am greatly pleased with the imaginative sketch which has been presented by the Senator, and we are all of us pleased with those imaginative sketches of his, but I do not want it to go on record that I am in the position of beseeching the committee to increase an appropriation for a Maine building.

Mr. VEST. Not now. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALE. It happens that the one public building I have in my mind in Maine is perhaps what has called my attention to the subject I have just spoken of. I refer to the public building at the capital of the State, where the appropriation was ample for a large, handsome, suitable building for the business which will be carried on there, and yet there is an estimate for an urgency deficiency for a sum that surprises me, and I do not think it ought to have been sent in. So I am not in the position now of urging the Senator from Missouri to yield his virtue on the committee to my importunity.

Mr. VEST. I know that is the case.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to help the Senator from Missouri with my experience in this matter. If the Senator from Missouri knows, as he is very familiar with this great question, and will tell me how much the post-office building at St. Louis cost, I should like to give him a little history. Did it cost a million or a million and a half dollars?

Mr. VEST. Oh, that was not a circumstance. I think we spent three and a half million upon it.

Mr. HALE. About five million.

Mr. VEST. Yes; I could not state the amount accurately, but considerably over $3,000,000.

Mr. DAWES. I was on the committee in the other branch when the persons interested first came to Congress for a new post-office building in St. Louis. They said if they could have the old post-office building and $300,000, it might be bound as firmly as it could be in the law, they never would ask for another penny. Thereupon such a bill was passed. The Supervising Architect of the Treasury went out to St. Louis and they gave him a dinner. At that dinner it was announced that Cincinnati had a post-office building which cost a million and a half; that Chicago had a post-office building which cost six million; and was St. Louis to be content with a post-office building that cost only $300,000? Not by a good deal; and the Supervising Architect of the Treasury assured them, in the face of the law, that they should have a post-office building equal to that of their rival cities. I understand my friend to say that it cost several million dollars. The law authorizing the post-office at New York had limitation put upon the appropriation as strong as it could be made. When it was commenced the original act prescribed that it should be completed for a certain sum.

Mr. BECK. For $3,000,000.

Mr. DAWES. For $3,000,000, my friend from Kentucky, who remembers these things a great deal better than I do, says. They came back for another million, and it was inserted in the bill at their request, so that they might be sure to have it, that the total cost should not exceed that limit. It exceeded that limit, and they came for another appropriation. The same limitation was put in the law; and in the face of it, and with a standing law which makes it unlawful, indictable, impeachable, to exceed the limitations of an appropriation, it has gone on until $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 have been appropriated. The post-office building in Boston has run up into the millions in precisely the same way.

Mr. BUTLER. How many millions?

Mr. DAWES. Three or four millions; I do not know how much.

Mr. BUTLER. About $9,000,000.

Mr. DAWES. They have never been able to be rewarded quite equal to some of their rival cities, but enough to indict every man who had any connection with the excess of expenditures over the limit of the appropriations. Until somebody is brought up under the law to realize that the law is made to be obeyed by officials, this never will be cured.

Mr. TELLER. Is the building any too large now?

Mr. DAWES. It cost too much.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I desire to say a single word. I have noticed that the spasms of economy always occur in regard to small States with a small representation. Where such a building as the one under consideration will cost $100,000 the great buildings in other States cost millions of dollars. We have passed several bills at this session appropriating more than a million dollars for a public building. I want this talk about economy to be expended upon those buildings and not upon a building of moderate cost, like the one at Pensacola, which the public business imperatively demands.

No one is to blame for this deficiency of $32,000 unless it is the contractor, who has to buy his supplies at varying rates, or the architect. You can not make a law that the material which enters into a public building shall be the same price and value that it was when the estimate was made for the cost of the building. The architect is not to blame. If any one is to blame it is Congress that votes the limitation. I do not know how my honorable friend from Missouri is going to pass a bill which will prevent future Congresses from appropriating as much money as they see fit for public buildings. But let that be as it may, it is Congress, it is ourselves, and not the Supervising Architect or the Secretary of the Treasury who are to blame for the extensions of the limit of the appropriations.

I wish to add that Pensacola pays a large amount of revenue to the Government. This building is imperatively demanded. The Supervising Architect certifies the fact that it will not be complete and useful for the purposes for which it was designed without this small amount of money.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I want to indorse very heartily what the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] has said about the place where economy is applied in legislation. New York got six or seven million dollars for a public building, and I noticed the other day that one newspaper in that city devoted an entire column to the abuse of Congress for the proposed expenditure of $50,000 or $100,000 upon public buildings in different parts of the country remote from New York. The cities get everything they want, without any reference at all to the cost, to the rental value of the buildings, or anything of that kind, and when they obtain it they then very coolly propose to close up the entire subject and have no more public buildings anywhere. It is a wrong tendency. It is a part of a general tendency to carry everything to the large cities at the expense of the country. It is not wholesome, but quite the reverse.

I think that wherever the Government has public business to transact of any magnitude it ought to have its own building to transact it in, all the more because the absence of a building very often leads the Government, directly or indirectly, into real-estate speculations. The Post-Office Department had an inspector in Kansas during last summer who excited the acquisitiveness of people living in different parts of towns interested in property, and so on, to bidding for the location of a post-office building, and he succeeded in getting, in places of 4,000 and 5,000 people, persons interested in real estate in certain parts of the town, not only to give the rent for perhaps five years for nothing, or at a merely nominal sum, say a dollar a year, or something of that kind, but to furnish the most elaborate fixtures for the use of the Government. I regard that as an offense. I do not think the Government ought to engage in business of that kind, and yet that is what it is doing. That is the reverse side of the picture which has been drawn here of the extravagance in public buildings in large cities.

But something has been said about the reasons for these deficiencies. Mr. President, it is the old story of a dollar for the dress and $10 for the trimmings. Every public building which is put up costs ten times more for superintendence and extras and contingencies than it ought to do. Out of $100,000 appropriated to erect a building, say, out in Kansas, at least $10,000 of that money will be spent before ever a lick is struck. There is the city of Wichita, where the Government has simply a naked lot. There is no more danger of its being carried away than of this Capitol being carried away, and yet it has a watchman and a superintendent, but no man at work.

Mr. HALE. They are watching the land.

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, they are watching the land. I do not know but that they are watching the Republican politicians out there. At all events, the watchmen are there, and they are getting paid for it. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] says to me that the Republican politicians there need watching. If they do you will have to appoint a great deal more clever people than you have done out there in order to make that watching very effective.

Mr. KENNA. The Senator entirely misunderstood my remark, if he alludes to me. I said there were no other kind of politicians out there to be watched.

Mr. PLUMB. I have in my hand the report of the commission for the construction of the Congressional Library building, which has in it some paragraphs which are a sample of that which pertains to the construction of every public building in the United States. It shows that we are getting a large amount of services of architects, a large amount of washing of towels, and hiring of coupés, and things of that kind, and a very little building. During the last year there have been spent for literally contingent items in no wise represented in the construction over $38,000.

Mr. HALE. On that building?

Mr. PLUMB. On that Library building. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] seeks to identify it by saying that it is where the hole is. The hole is there, and before it ever assumes the pretense of a construction it will be big enough to carry into it more than the sum of money we intended to appropriate for a building. I will commence on page 14, at the bottom of the page, and read from the report of the commission for the construction of the Congressional Library building:

Office expenses:
Stationery, draughtsmen's tools, materials, and instruments, and printing and binding, etc.		$1,821.15
Office furniture, drawing boards, cases, awnings, etc.		2,612.16
Fitting up offices, 145 East Capitol street		1,954.17
Blue-print room		919.66

It will be noticed that all these sums have accommodating fractions as an affix, which of course are supposed in some way to verify them.

Fuel and gas		$261.51
Laborer as janitor		573.00

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is now seeking to introduce some irrelevant matter here by inquiring what that man is janitor of. He is janitor, I suppose, of what the man out in Wichita is watchman of.

Mr. KENNA. Of the hole in the ground?

Mr. PLUMB. Of the hole in the ground. The report continues:

Coupé, two horses (one to replace horse sold, and proceeds covered into Treasury), harness, robe, and blankets	$868.00
Livery bills for carriage and horse, driver, and repairs	540.49
Washing towels		35.11

It is something to be clean at Government expense.

Notary's fees	.75
Cleaning windows, putting away fuel	25.30
Lanterns and oil for watchmen	11.25
Making models for architect, labor	216.00
Express and freight	1.08
Miscellaneous supplies	54.07

These items foot up $9,893.80.

Those are all, as will be seen, items with some particularity and some detail. Now we come to some other expenses, in which the clerk-hire apparently gave out, and consequently there are no items at all; they are continued in a lump. This is in the commissioners' office:

Salaries and pay of office employés:
In commissioners' office—
Secretary, accountant, disbursing agent, and messenger	$5,639.08
In architect's office—
Architect, assistant architect, computer, civil engineer, experts, draughtsmen, clerk, messengers, and sculptor	23,200.80

I suppose they are set down in the order of their relative importance and rank. I can readily see how a sculptor would not be necessary for the purpose of executing a hole in the ground, at least not a sculptor of very high degree. These items sum up $23,200.80, making a total for salaries and pay of office employés of all kinds that are mentioned of $28,839.88. In other words, the personal staff, not of a Library building, not of a piece of public work in process of execution, but the personal staff of something that is not being done at all, cost last year $28,839.88. And they had besides, in the way of contingencies, frills, and furbelows, coupés, and things of that sort for their convenience and comfort, $9,893.80, making, as I said, a total of over $38,000, which has been spent without yielding to the Government one single return, except the happy satisfaction we all of us have of seeing a man walking around, well dressed, at the public expense, and knowing that we have contributed to his comfort and convenience and to the general air of well-fedness with which he exhibits himself.

A Senator has handed to me an itemized statement which appears in the Blue Book. Here is the Blue Book itself, which sets forth the names of the different employés under the commission which has been created by law for the purpose of spending the money which we have appropriated to construct a Library building. Subtitles are put in to indicate the particular employment of the different persons engaged, and under the title of "In charge of horses and carts" I find the following names:

Samuel Brown, District of Columbia—

He was appointed from the District of Columbia; they were all appointed from the District of Columbia, however—

Mrs. Amelia Johnson.
Mrs. Almyra Burgess.
Mrs. Mary Liberty.
Patrick Powers.
Bartley Thornton.
Daniel Toumey.
Mary E. Shearer.
Maurice Talty.

There is nothing recorded there that is very remarkable, but still it is worth pausing to consider that four women are put down as in charge of horses and carts. Of course it may well be that as these women did not have any voting to do, being withdrawn from the discharge of the very onerous public duty of casting a ballot, they have more time to give to the discharge of the very useful duty of taking care of the horses and carts which the commission employ, although just what the horses and carts are for of course I do not know. The man who said in a public meeting that he vouched for a certain man was a little disconcerted when somebody stepped up and asked, "Who vouches for you?" I am not vouching for the horses, nor for the carts, nor for the women in charge of them, and I do not care to suggest that some sort of subterfuge has been employed whereby persons are put on the rolls to do one thing, perhaps of a somewhat personal character, while at the same time they are exhibited as performing a public duty.

But it is plain to be seen that we are not going to get anything out of the appropriation of money for a Library except a large bill of expense, and I do not speak of this particularly for the purpose of characterizing it alone, but of saying that in the Architect's Office of the Treasury Department will be found the data to show that in substantially all the public buildings already erected by the United States and being erected now a similar condition of things exists, and it is one reason why the Government pays from 25 to 50 per cent. more for a given result than private parties pay. The moment a public building is provided for it becomes a sort of hospital for persons who want employment, and long before any contract is made or the Government has got any property to watch or look after, somebody is appointed as a superintendent. It does not make any difference how long the construction may take, the superintendent is like the brook, he goes on forever and forever.

I have been asked who constitute the Library building commission. I know that the Secretary of the Interior is ex officio president of the board; that it consists of an architect, who drew the plans, and of the Architect of the Capitol, certainly. I do not know who else.

Mr. BUTLER. And the Librarian of Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, the Librarian of Congress. There being two architects on the board, of course they do not agree, except presumably in regard to the expenditure of the money, and of course, therefore, there has grown up all sorts of trouble, one pulling one way and one the other, and nobody at hand to put the casting ballot on one side or the other, and the result is, probably what was designed, a simple wasting of the public money, a nursing of that building in order to give employment to the end of time. Certainly there is in that commission, so far as the majority of it is concerned, no honest purpose to complete the building within the contemplation of the act of Congress.

I do not say where the responsibility should rest for that condition of things, because I do not know, but the majority, which has the power to resolve all these things in favor of prompt, active work of construction, has not chosen to do so; but, on the other hand, there is a great expenditure for employés entirely unnecessary, for contingent expenses which are extravagant when no work of construction is going on, and that is a sample of the way the public business of the country is transacted to a very large extent in regard to public buildings. The money which has been wasted in this way would have supplied to every town of 25,000 people in the United States a building large enough for the transaction of the public business; it would have enabled the Government to have in all these cities and towns an abiding place, some place where its jurisdiction was supreme, some place where its public business could be transacted to-day and to-morrow and for all time, and a guaranty that the Government itself would not be, either actively or negatively, willfully or ignorantly a party to real-estate speculations.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I am glad there has been a statement of the transactions to which allusion has been made, and I think from conversation with the Architect there is certainly reform needed. In my town an appropriation was made some years ago of $100,000 for a public building. They hardly got started when $20,000 had been spent with only a fence around the lot and the expense going on. This occurred under a former administration of the bureau, and I am very much in hopes and I believe that the present incumbent will try to make a thorough reform and go on with the business properly and erect the buildings with the money, which, as I understand, was not done in the case to which I refer until one-fifth of the appropriation was spent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. When was the appropriation made?

Mr. STEWART. I do not remember the exact date, but three or four years ago. They had a great deal of trouble in getting a location, but finally they got one that was satisfactory to the Department, but it cost ten or twelve thousand dollars, and eight or ten thousand dollars more had been spent in preliminaries, such as a high fence, a superintendent, and so on.

I am quite confident that the present Supervising Architect is going on with the work, and that he will have reform generally in this business. If he does not, we shall all have reason to complain. I would not like to have reflections cast upon a man just coming in with good intentions and making effort to do what is right. Give him a chance. A distinction ought to be drawn between the man who has failed and the man who has come in with the intention of doing right, as I think the present Supervising Architect intends to do.

Mr. VEST. I have no disposition to retard the passage of the bill of the Senator from Florida, because, as I said before, it is a deserving measure and ought to be passed; but I noticed in this debate the Senators who have engaged in it have undertaken to state the difficulties under which we have suffered, but none seem to have pointed out the radical defect in the system under which we have constructed public buildings.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator will excuse me. I meant to remark before I sat down that I believe the appropriation in this bill is a necessary appropriation under the circumstances, and I shall vote for it cheerfully.

Mr. VEST. In the first place the same trouble exists in regard to the construction of public buildings that we encounter in the Indian service. We have heard for years the question asked, why is it that the Indian service of this country is in its present condition? Why is it that thousands and thousands of dollars are expended by Congress and the Indians are no better off, and the country is no better off? And the same evils exist and will exist as long as this system continues. The truth is, we expect too much first-class service for the lowest possible amount of money. We send a man out to take charge of a tribe of Indians, and pay him $1,000, $1,200, or $1,500 a year. He is expected to control human beings; he is expected to perform the most delicate and responsible functions that can be given to any human being—the control of others as to their life and habits—and yet we pay $1,000 or $1,200 a year; and a man is expected to leave civilization and endure the hardships of the frontier and association with savages, to give up all that makes life worth anything, for a miserable pittance that we would not ask any clerk to give his services to the Government for here or anywhere else.

We expect to get a first-class architect for $3,500 a year. Why, sir, there is not an architect in the city where I live, who is worthy the name, who is not making from ten to fifteen or twenty thousand dollars a year. I undertake to say in the city of Washington to-day there are half a dozen architects making over $10,000 a year. I asked a gentleman the other day, one of my colleagues in the Senate, who recently constructed a large building, an eleemosynary institution, what amount he had paid the architect. He said $15,000—nearly five times the salary in one year that we give to our public architect for a year's services. However worthy the present incumbent may be, it is perfectly absurd to suppose we can secure the services of a man competent to take charge of the public buildings of the United States for any such salary.

Then, again, that is not all the trouble. We have this miserable system of day's work. We give a premium to every man, contractor, architect, workman, down to the laborers on the public buildings, to continue the work just as long as possible. The first step when we pass a bill appropriating money for a public building is to send an architect there, and he employs two watchmen and a clerk, and has a model-room, and all the paraphernalia of a large business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And a local superintendent.

Mr. VEST. And a local superintendent. The salaries go on, and when the building is finished those fellows are out of work. We put a premium upon delay; we have done it for years.

The Senator from Massachusetts spoke of the public building at Chicago. There is a building that went on for years and cost four times what Congress originally intended, and now it is ready to fall down, condemned by the grand jury as a public nuisance, and the evidence in regard to the construction of that building is, I will not say horrible, it is the most disgusting that ever was printed on any public subject in the United States. I have not read it for some time—I have it somewhere among my papers—but it showed that they absolutely organized laborers upon the public buildings so as to cheat the superintendent. They had a society organized, and when the men would be down playing cards, gambling, there were watchmen out to give notice of the approach of the superintendent and the game was broken up, and when he arrived there every man was at work, and the minute his back was turned every man was gambling again.

Mr. President, as long as this system continues we may expect exactly what is the condition of the country to-day. Two years ago the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reported a bill to do away with this system and to put it under contract and let the public buildings of the country be constructed as any private gentleman would construct his residence. There is not a Senator on this floor to-day if he was about to construct a residence in the city of Washington, who would not call upon architects for their plans and specifications, and then take bonds of a contractor for the erection of the building according to those plans and specifications in a given time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And within a given price.

Mr. VEST. And a given price. And if it were not completed the forfeiture would be exacted on the bond. And yet what do we do in regard to the money of the people of the United States put in these public buildings? We take no bond. There is a little paper here in the city of Washington, as big as my two hands, or was here—I have not seen it lately—which lives upon the advertisements from the Treasury Department for public buildings.

When a bill was passed in Congress for the construction of a building in Missouri the bids were put out for the different sorts of work in this little paper. A ring was here in the capital and this work was confined to that ring, and no man received one dollar who was not in it. It was upon the face of the statute-book the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to supervise these contracts, but as a matter of course they went to the Supervising Architect's Office, as a matter of routine, and the Secretary of the Treasury knew no more about them than any Senator in this body.

Does any one wonder that public architects went out of this city almost millionaires who came here paupers? Is it any wonder that a few years ago the newspapers of the country were filled with the scandal in regard to the public architect's office that threw one man out of office and implicated several others? All these things have taken place, and they will take place until we reorganize the whole system under which the public buildings are constructed. The bill to which I referred was reported two years ago and received no more attention from Congress than a piece of blank paper. Nobody cared anything about it, but on the other hand—and I do not put myself on a pedestal to lecture my brother Senators—in the rush to have public buildings constructed in different localities, the general law was permitted to die and it amounted to nothing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What did that general law provide in substance?

Mr. VEST. It provided that when a public building was to be constructed bids for the work should be advertised in the newspapers having the largest circulation in the city and vicinity where the building was to be constructed; that those bids made by responsible persons should be submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior; that they should meet and pass upon the bids, and when they awarded them to the lowest responsible bidder he should then give bond with approved security for the construction of the work within a certain time at a certain price. In my opinion we shall never be able to do away with the abuses that exist until that bill or some similar measure is enacted. As we are now proceeding there can be no reform.

I make these remarks with no political significance at all. I say that the business of the people of the United States should be conducted upon business principles; and there is not one Senator here to-day who would for a single moment think of applying the system that now prevails in this country to his own private business.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it strikes me that there is a good deal of force in what the Senator from Missouri has observed in reference to the inadequate compensation the Government pays to the officers who have this great business of the public buildings in charge. The pay is not commensurate with the importance of the place; of that there can be no doubt. And yet bright and competent architects are always very well pleased to be connected with this work, and especially to hold the position of Supervising Architect of the Treasury, under which most of this work is done. The enlarged experience, the broad acquaintance that is made, and the reputation that may naturally follow a man's successful course in this office, give him a great advantage when he leaves the office and returns to the field of private competition; and the history of this office has been for years that the men who have left it have gone into their old vocation in private life benefited undoubtedly by this experience. So that is to a degree an offset against the poor pay that we give them.

What I wish especially to call attention to—because, as I said before, the Senate has got to meet it—is the call that is made upon us now from the Supervising Architect's Office and from the Treasury Department for money appropriations in excess of the limit heretofore fixed by Congress. For this I do not blame the present Architect. I have had but little business to do with him since he came in, and that business has impressed me favorably with him personally. But for the first time Congress is confronted with this condition in regard to the public buildings throughout the country. Everybody knows that for years past as a building in a particular place neared its completion its friends and the representatives of the community where it is being built appear in Congress, either in the other branch or here, and seek to remove the limit and to get an increased appropriation; but it is only of late that the Department itself having charge of this work, limited by the decree of Congress in fixing the limitation on the several buildings, has adopted as an estimate of an actual deficiency for the current year the claims that are set up for increased expenditure.

The advocates of the buildings, the Representatives of the districts or the Senators from the States, are not left as heretofore to fight it out on the floor of either the one House or the other in Congress and get their increase if they can, but the Department, disregarding the limitation fixed by law, has adopted these estimates for deficiencies.

I hold here now a document which is headed, not "ordinary deficiencies," but "urgent deficiencies," deficiencies that press, deficiencies that must needs be inevitable, upon which speedy attention is demanded, and the heading, further, of the estimates is in this language:

Estimates of deficiencies in appropriations required to meet urgent demands of the Government for the fiscal year 1888, and for prior years—

Not to be embraced in the general deficiency appropriation bill, where we have formerly put such items, if put at all, but in the urgent deficiency bill that hangs as a menace over Congress, that if it does not promptly treat the subjects that are called for in this document great harm will result to the public service; and here are the items on the subject about which we are talking; I will read them in alphabetical order:

Auburn, N. Y.: Post-office, court-house, etc.—
For completion, in excess of the limit..... $30,000

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where do those estimates come from?

Mr. HALE. From the Treasury Department, and sent down with this heading, indicating that they are urgent, not ordinary deficiencies.

Augusta, Me.—

The building to which I before referred—

Augusta, Me.: Post-office, court-house, etc.—
For completion, in excess of the limit..... $35,000

Whenever that is reached upon any appropriation bill, I shall have something to say as to the reasons that have caused this deficit in that appropriation, this request for $35,000 more money than was originally appropriated, when all that was asked for was given.

Buffalo, N. Y.: Custom-house and post-office—
For completion, in excess of the limit..... $500
Carson City, Nev.: Court-house, post-office, etc.—
For completion, in excess of the limit..... 86,000
Charleston, S. C.: Custom-house wharf—
For extension and completion, in excess of the limit..... 138,000
Concord, N. H.: Post-office, court-house, etc.—
For completion, in excess of the limit..... 11,000
Dallas, Tex.: Court-house, post-office, etc.—
For completion, in excess of the limit..... 11,000
Denver, Colo.: Court-house, post-office, etc.—
For extension and completion, in excess of the limit..... 60,000
Fort Wayne, Ind.: Court-house, post-office, etc.—
For completion, in excess of the limit..... 16,000
Hannibal, Mo.: Post-office, etc.—
For completion, in excess of the limit..... 2,000

Mr. BECK. While the Senator is going on with that, as I am not well enough advised about it, I ask him whether many of those things do not arise from the fact that under previous contracts, until a new ruling by Secretary Fairchild, the house was considered completed when the building was roofed, or regardless of the approaches. Those old contracts were made on that basis, and the building was called complete when the work on it was done. A late ruling requires that the approaches shall all be embraced and made part of the contract, and therefore, under the late ruling, whenever a building was finished and the heating apparatus and the approaches are not completed, there would be a deficiency. Is not that the case?

Mr. HALE. I happen to know about that. In small sums that is true, and the decision undoubtedly in such cases has helped to swell this estimate, but it only applies in a limited amount. For instance——

Mr. BECK. One more suggestion and I am done. Perhaps we shall get some good out of this talk when we come to regulating the matter hereafter. Is it not the fact when a force is employed of watchmen, clerks, messengers, and I do not know what they call them, that they are always paid and kept under pay until the last brick in the pavement is laid all around, and all the approaches are finished?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BECK. That has been stopped, has it not?

Mr. HALE. All of this is an old practice, but never so great, I think, as at present in its abuse; but still it is an old practice, coming down somewhat from the past, and in estimating what the limit shall be originally in the Architect's office, which limitation Congress accepts, all of these things are included.

Now, the consideration about heating apparatus, approaches, etc., which are held under the decision of the Treasury to swell the cost, only applies in a small degree, and it can not apply excepting in the case of a building nearly completed. In the case of the building at Augusta, Me., where it is only just begun, it has already been found that under the management, or mismanagement, there, there are $35,000 short, and in addition to that they have another estimate in for fire-proofing the building.

In addition to that, which I did not read, take the work at Charleston, $138,000. That is not in any way increased, or to any material extent, by the consideration suggested by the Senator from Kentucky. No, it is the deliberate adoption on the part of the Department of this cry for more money over and above the limit fixed for the building, when I think it would have been better administration if the Department had said, "Congress has given us a rule in these buildings; Congress has fixed a limit; if Congress removes the limit, then we will estimate as to what more is needed to complete the buildings;" but I do complain that Congress is called upon now by the Department as an urgent deficiency to increase these items. Let me continue reading:

Jackson, Tenn.: Court-house, post-office, etc.—
For completion, in excess of the limit..... $1,000
Keokuk, Iowa: Court-house, post-office, etc.—
For completion, in excess of the limit..... 15,000
Leavenworth, Kans.: Court-house, post-office, etc.—
For completion, in excess of the limit..... 3,000
Lynchburgh, Va.: Court-house, post-office, etc.—
For the completion, in excess of the limit..... 2,000
Manchester, N. H.: Post-office, court-house, etc.—
For fire-proofing and completion, in excess of the limit..... 46,000
Montpelier, Vt.: Post-office, court-house, etc.—
For completion, in excess of the limit..... 20,000

I am informed that in the latter case, where it is already settled by the Department that the limit is to be exceeded, hardly a stone or brick has been laid.

Pensacola, Fla.: Court-house, post-office, etc.—
For completion, in excess of the limit..... $2,600
Port Townsend, Wash.: Custom-house, post-office, etc.—
For completion, in excess of the limit..... 38,000

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.: Post-office, etc.—
For completion, in excess of the limit $500
Richmond, Va.: Custom-house, etc.—
For completion, in excess of the limit 33,000
Rochester, N. Y.; Court-house, post-office, etc.—
For fire-proofing and completion, in excess of the limit 50,000
Shreveport, La.: Post-office, court-house, etc.—
For plumbing and completion, in excess of the limit 2,000
Springfield, Ohio: Post-office, etc.—
For completion, in excess of the limit 15,000
Syracuse, N. Y.: Post-office, court-house, etc.—
For extension, granite work for approaches, and completion, in excess of the limit 65,000
Terre Haute, Ind.: Post-office, etc.—
For completion, in excess of the limit 32,000
Toledo, Ohio: Custom-house, court-house, etc.—
For completion, in excess of the limit 17,000

And the aggregate is $796,500 in an urgent deficiency estimate. What the conditions are that have changed from the conditions of the past that should justify this urgent demand upon Congress to change what is substantially the law in twenty or thirty different cases, enacted by Congress, I fail to see. That there has been solicitation most abundant and overpowering before the Department I can well conceive; but, as I have said before, it occurs to me that it would have been better administration if the Treasury Department had said, "There is the written law; there is the statute enacted by Congress that authorizes the building of this structure, and until Congress declares that the limit fixed therein shall be exceeded or changed the Department administering the law passed by Congress will not step one foot beyond the boundary of that law. Get your limitation increased by Congress, gentlemen, and then the Department will estimate the cost upon plans that it will submit."

I hope, Mr. President, that this is not an adoption of a new rule of action in the Department under which, at the beginning of every session of Congress, we shall have claims put in here, or estimates made here for what are called urgent deficiencies of this kind; and the subject to me is so important that I have been glad that the Senator from Vermont has raised the question upon this bill which, as I have said, I know but little, or nothing, in fact, about, in order that these facts might be presented.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator from Colorado, before he proceeds, allow me to read the phraseology which has been inflexibly adopted by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in relation to all of these buildings which have been authorized. I read from a bill that was passed last session for Springfield, Mass.:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States post-office, internal-revenue office, and other Government offices, at the city of Springfield, Mass. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $150,000.

That is the precise formula that has been adopted for years, and so far as the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds are concerned they have made the law as stringent as possible.

Mr. HALE. And was it not the expectation in this case as in every other that the building when completed should be confined to the limit fixed by the committee and then by Congress?

Mr. MORRILL. Of course it was.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And put in working operation.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to say, by way of supplementing what has been said by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], that in the bills which have been reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds at this session we have incorporated a provision that the erection of the building shall not be commenced until the plans have been completed and approved according to law, and the estimates fully made and submitted and approved upon the basis fixed in the law.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, several years ago, I should say at least six years ago, perhaps seven, Congress appropriated $300,000 for a public building at Denver. That was a very small sum for a place that promises as much as Denver. From the time the appropriation was made to the time that the building had got up to the level of the street, which was somewhere in the neighborhood of two or three years—I do not remember just exactly what—the population of the city had doubled, and before they ever get the roof on, if they should ever succeed in doing so—and that is let by contract and not being done by days' work—or even before they get the joists in the first story, there will be three times as many people in Denver as when Congress passed the law.

After the bill had been passed and the plans had been prepared and the building had been laid out on the ground and the cellar dug, or the basement, or whatever it is, and the United States officials began to look at the size of the rooms, they discovered that they were ridiculously small and entirely inadequate to the business. Thereupon at the last session of Congress the limit was raised from $300,000 to $575,000, and preparation was made for the enlargement of the building correspondingly. This could be done at that time without any waste of money, except the waste that might be incurred in having the watchmen, etc., who are spoken of. The basement walls were so thick that they could be increased without adding materially to the expense, without taking them up, and they were left there; so that there was practically no expense. After all this it was discovered that the building was still not large enough. It is a notorious fact that Denver is full of people, and the post-office establishment is in a very small room, crowded with people, who stand around waiting for their turn to get into line, and the post-office officials declare that the building will be entirely inadequate for the increased amount of business. I will not undertake to state here now what the business of the Denver post-office is, but it is at least three times that of any city of equal size in any of the New England States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the population now?

Mr. TELLER. Seventy-five thousand, probably; and you can readily see how that is. In the first place you have a system that enables our wives and daughters in Colorado to send to New York and New England to buy their dry goods and have them sent by mail. They do that. Then the city is always full of strangers, who go to the office for their mail. As I say, men stand for hours now sometimes to get to the window that they may get their mail. So of course there is necessity for more room, as the officials say.

It is the suggestion of the Department that in the rear of the building now being constructed on the main traveled street of the city we can extend it for $60,000, so as to add to the area of the building on the first floor 28 feet by 110. That will cost $60,000, and that will make an efficient and valuable post-office; and without it they will have a post-office that never will be large enough for the town.

But is there not some fault here when we commence so inadequate a structure for a town like Denver that everybody knows, who has given the least attention to settlements in that country, must be a great town some day—600 miles from any public building, 600 miles from where the Government had ever put a dollar for the benefit of the people of that western country, and the only building you put in Colorado except the penitentiary that you erected for the Territory some years ago for the moderate sum of $28,000, which ultimately, of course, fell to the State.

I say that the appropriation of $575,000, with $60,000 added, is not an improper appropriation for the city of Denver. It is not now what it ought to be by three or four hundred thousand dollars, and no money will be wasted by this appropriation, and none has been wasted there. It is standing there without anything having been done with it, because last year the enormous appropriation was made for that building of $25,000, and it was so small that the contractors declined to go on, as they ought to have declined.

Mr. HALE. Why did you not get more?

Mr. TELLER. I had more appropriated in the bill, but when it got into one of the conference committees, that no man living outside the committees ever understood the intricacies of, it was juggled out in some way [laughter], and instead of coming out $115,000, it came out $25,000. I was not astute enough to discover it until several months after the bill had become a law, neither was my colleague, nor was the gentleman who represented the State at the other end of the Capitol. We did not discover it until it was too late. So there it stood, and it will not be any special credit to the Government when it is built. There will be plenty of private buildings in the city of Denver that cost more money, that are of more value, and are more imposing in structure and better adapted to the purposes for which they were built than this, and the Government of the United States will, undoubtedly, when it has got this building, be the most poorly furnished of all those doing business in that great city.

Mr. HALE. Now, will the Senator allow me?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. He is furnishing a complete illustration of the evils that I have been complaining of. Granted that Denver is entitled to and should have for a public building a structure that costs not only five, or six, or eight hundred thousand dollars, the Senator has named so good a case showing that the limit should be increased that had it been presented to Congress which fixed the limit, and not to the Department, he would have had no trouble in securing an extension of the limit.

What I complain of is, that after Congress has once increased the limit of a building like this, or in this case, then the Secretary goes on and, as an urgent deficiency, calls upon Congress to appropriate $60,000 additional. That the money may be needed there on that work after Congress shall have passed upon it, I do not question; but it is beginning at the wrong end; it is putting the cart before the horse. Congress should pass upon these questions. If it pretends to fix limits it ought to unfix limits, and nobody else ought to do it. I do not make any question about the situation in Denver.

Mr. TELLER. I am inclined to agree with the suggestion of the Senator, which implies at least that when my bill gets here he is going to vote for it; but I have had some experience in this body, and have had some experience with raising the limit of this building, and I know how difficult it was to get it from $300,000 to $575,000. I knew I could not get the limit raised any higher unless I got the approval of the Department, and I went to the Department for the purpose, and I suppose this perhaps arises out of the complaints made by our people and my representations to the Department. If they say now that in their judgment, the judgment of men charged with the erection of this building, $60,000 more ought to be appropriated—the building is in an unfinished state, the building is now in a proper state to be enlarged without any waste of money to the Government—I do not see why it can not just as well come in that way as to come in the shape of a special bill, which must run the gauntlet of the committees and then of the other House. Besides, we have a bill before that committee now for a town of twenty-odd thousand people, where there is a United States court, where there is a United States revenue collector, and all the officers of the Government, and we have not yet got any response from the committee, and I am fearful we shall not get any. I would rather see this appropriation go through on the urgent deficiency bill than to take the risk of any separate bill, although, of course, if I can not get it through there I shall be in favor of the bill.

I only wanted to say that there has been no misappropriation so far as this building is concerned, there has been no extravagance, there has been no demand for a building beyond the wants of the community and the Government; and when the building is completed with the $60,000 added, it will not be big enough for the business of the United States Government in the city of Denver.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, without any prejudice to the bill of the Senator from Florida—there must be further discussion—but without any particular reference to that bill, it is extremely desirable that there should be an executive session, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VOORHEES. There are some things which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] and I desire to say in response to what I am told the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] has said in regard to the Congressional Library, but an opportunity will present itself again, I suppose, if it is desirable to have an executive session now; but I wish to say—the Senator from Vermont will bear with me a moment——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. VOORHEES. I wish to say that on the question of the construction of the Congressional Library every just criticism can be easily answered, and I am prepared to make answer now, as is the Senator from South Carolina, and we had hoped we should have the opportunity to do so this afternoon.

As chairman of the Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library, the Senator from South Carolina being on the committee with me, I have desired a meeting of the committee, but there was some irregularity in the construction of the committee which has caused some delay; otherwise the intimations which have been put forth would have been more promptly answered than they have been. Feeling perfectly secure in the integrity with which this work has been carried forward, I have felt no panic and no haste in regard to the charges which have been made.

The law by which this work is going forward places it in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, the Librarian of Congress, and the Architect of the Capitol. Those are the men charged by the law—I have the law here—with the execution of this work. The bill authorizing the work was passed in April, 1886. The first six months were taken up in the condemnation and purchase of the property necessary. Winter came on and then the work was suspended. During the last summer a vast amount of work has been done. The excavation and the grading has been accomplished, and more would have been done but for the fact that a controversy arose with a contractor by the name of Barnes, who contracted to put in cement for the foundation, and when it was brought forward it failed to respond to the necessary requirements of the contract.

I do not know how long I may be permitted to occupy the floor, but I say here that Mr. Smithmeyer, the architect of the Library, applied not only every test that he had at his command, but that he then placed the cement that has caused all the trouble—the petition of the contractor being here before me—I say Mr. Smithmeyer submitted it to the office of the Washington Aqueduct in charge of Colonel Lydecker, a United States engineer and ex-commissioner of the District of Columbia. He submitted it to the chemical laboratory of the District in charge of Professor Richardson, under the direction of Capt. T. W. Symons, United States Engineer Corps, and Colonel Hains of the United States Engineer Corps, and also to the United States navy-yard, in charge of Mr. Menocal, civil engineer, and to others.

Numerous other authorities and experts were called in. They all condemned this cement as unsafe to be put in. The only man that pretended that it could be used was General Meigs, and he himself said it did not respond to the scientific tests, but gave as an outside opinion that he thought it would be safe in the long run.

This controversy arose when there were perhaps sixty working days yet before winter set in, and there was that much lost time, and that was all. The winter is on now and no work can be done.

I am speaking now by the courtesy of the Senator from Vermont, but I wanted to say this much because on repeated occasions there have been allusions to delay, as if somebody was at fault. I stand here to refer any Senator to Mr. Spofford, of the Library. He is known. I refer to him as the best informed man on this whole subject, not excepting the Senator from Kansas or anybody else, and it is too much for the Senator from Kansas to say that there is no honest purpose to execute this work, when it is in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, of the Librarian of Congress, and the Architect of the Capitol. The Architect of the Capitol and the architect of the Library may differ on some questions. So be it. Honest men often differ; but the commission composed of Secretary Lamar, Mr. Spofford, and Mr. Clark has sustained Mr. Smithmeyer in all his objections to this rotten cement. I have the tests here. I speak with knowledge. I have the reports here, and I ask Senators to get the report of the commission for the construction of the Congressional Library in response to the resolution of the Senate of January 4, 1888, and go over it; see what the requirements of the contract are; see what the controversy is about; see who made this delay, and it will be found that the delay has been made by a contractor in fault in his material, according to every test that has been applied to it.

I ask that the floor be occupied for a moment by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. I did intend to make some observations in reply to what I think was not exactly the fair criticism of the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Missouri on this work and those who have charge of it, but as the Senate is getting tired I will reserve that for another occasion.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to say simply that all that the Senator from Indiana has said is entirely apart from the observations which I made.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will say to the Senator that I did not hear his observations. I came in after they were made, but was informed of them.

Mr. PLUMB. I should be glad to have the Senator examine and elucidate that bill of expenses which I presented.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will do so. I do not claim to be a great financier; I have not been successful on that subject; but a plain sum in arithmetic, addition, subtraction, or division, I can master.

Mr. PLUMB. I did not question that the money had been spent, but I did question the propriety of spending it, and I should be very glad indeed to have the Senator from Indiana or anybody else take up that list of employés, women employed to take care of horses and carts, and things of that kind, and including all this staff doing nothing, and tell the Senate or somebody just where the money has gone.

Mr. BUTLER. I think there will not be the slightest difficulty in doing that.

Mr. PLUMB. I shall be glad to have it done.

Mr. VOORHEES. Besides, one-half what the Senator said has no foundation in fact.

Mr. PLUMB. It was the report of the commission which I read from.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator from Vermont will allow us to dispose of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In order to have this whole subject disposed of, I was about to suggest a unanimous understanding that we take this bill up in the morning hour on Monday, as I wish to say something more myself on the general subject; but as the Senator from Florida is anxious about it, and this is only one little bill, if we can get a vote without further debate, I will withdraw the motion for an executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 6947) was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Tuesday, the 14th, and Wednesday, the 15th days of February, 1888, immediately after the hour for the consideration of bills by committees, be set apart for the consideration of bills and measures reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in such order as may be designated by said committee, this order not to conflict with prior orders or with revenue or general appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that Tuesday of next week has been assigned for the consideration of the banking bill, of which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS] has charge, and Wednesday, the 15th, for the consideration of the bill which was before the House yesterday. I shall have to object to either of those days, but I have no objection to any other day.

Mr. BELMONT. Let it be Thursday and Friday.

The SPEAKER. Friday is private-bill day.

Mr. BELMONT. Then make it Thursday and Saturday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the resolution leave out the consideration hour?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Thursday, the 16th, and Saturday, the 18th days of February, immediately after the hour for the consideration of bills by committees, be set apart for the consideration of bills and measures reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs in such order as may be designated by said committee, this order not to conflict with prior orders or with revenue or general appropriation bills.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BELMONT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CERTAIN UNITED STATES LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration a Senate bill which has been reported unanimously from the House Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. Is it a private bill?

Mr. RYAN. It is a private bill. I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I want to state generally now that I shall object to the consideration of private bills by unanimous consent except on Fridays. I am willing to give up all of that day to such bills, but I do not think we ought to occupy any other days in that way.

Mr. RYAN. I hope the gentleman will not object to this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not know that this is a private bill.

Mr. RYAN. Well, you may call it a private or not a private bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the bill name the beneficiaries, or does it apply to a class?

Mr. RYAN. It does not name the beneficiaries.

The SPEAKER. Then it is not a private bill. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill (S. 1022) was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the interest of the United States in and to the southwest fractional quarter of section 31, township 16, range 16 east of the sixth principal meridian, Osage County, Kansas, is hereby relinquished to those persons, their grantees, and their successors in interest, who purchased from Samuel C. Gilliland, who entered the same on the 7th day of June, 1870, and which entry was thereafter canceled.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN]?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. TURNER) was read, as follows:

I am directed by the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1022) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands in Kansas, to report the same without amendment.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I wish the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] would state the nature of the bill.

Mr. RYAN. It is a Senate bill. It came to the House, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and has been reported unanimously by that committee. The facts are these: In 1870 a fractional quarter of a section of land was entered by a man named Gilliland. Subsequently he proved up and paid up, and then transferred the land to another party. Later the land became a part of the city of Lyndon. It was cut up into town lots, and is now occupied by perhaps a thousand people. Subsequently it was ascertained by the Department that Gilliland was not eligible to enter the land, and his entry was canceled. This bill simply perfects the title of those who now occupy the land, having bought it and paid for it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The land was regularly disposed of and the Government got the price of it?

Mr. RYAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. And this bill is needed to protect those people against any one who may want to take it up with scrip?

Mr. RYAN. Yes.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RYAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLAIM OF J. D. & C. T. HEWLET.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 8, 1888.

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be requested to transmit to the Senate, for the use of the Committee on Indian Affairs, all papers in relation to the claim of J. D. & C. T. Hewlet, sent to that body on the 5th of January last, in compliance with the act of May 15, 1886.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, this request of the Senate will be granted, and the Clerk of the House will be directed to transmit the papers mentioned.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

OVERLOADING OF VESSELS ON GREAT LAKES, ETC.

Mr. NUTTING, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Shipping:

Whereas at a convention of seamen held at Toledo, Ohio, January, 1888, delegations were present from Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit, Toledo, Cleveland, Buffalo, and Oswego, and said delegations represented more than 5,000 seamen of the great chain of lakes; that said convention passed the following preamble:

"Whereas seventy-three vessels, aggregating a tonnage of 20,678 tons and valued with cargoes at $2,500,000, together with two hundred and four lives, were lost on the Great Lakes during the season of 1887; and

"Whereas the two hundred and four lives lost, with the vessels mentioned, caused such an intense feeling of indignation throughout the country that the press was loud in its denunciation of underwriters and the incompetency of Government inspectors; and

"Whereas, as is well known, a majority of vessels lost on the Great Lakes during the season of 1887 were rendered unseaworthy by being loaded beyond their carrying capacity, thereby causing them to founder and carry to the bottom with them, in most cases, the entire crew, and as a consequence, leaving widows and orphans destitute of their natural protectors:" Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested, if consistent with the public good, to transmit to this House all information in custody of said Department in regard to the matters and things set forth in said preamble; and said Secretary is requested to state whether there is any rule, order, or regulation of the Treasury Department the enforcement of which would prevent the overloading of vessels with freight, and as to whether there is any law or laws in force regulating the quantity of freight vessels on the Great Lakes shall carry.

Mr. NUTTING also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 6948) to prevent the overloading of vessels and boats on the Great Lakes, etc.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Shipping, and ordered to be printed.

HARBOR OF OSWEGO.

Mr. NUTTING also submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors:

Whereas it appears by the report of Chief of Engineers, in regard to river and harbor improvements for 1887, that about 150 linear feet of the west breakwater or pier in the harbor of Oswego, N. Y., has been swept away; and

Whereas it also appears that between two and three hundred linear feet of the east breakwater or pier in said harbor has been built; and

Whereas it is alleged that the above-described breach in the said pier or breakwater in time of storm allows the sea to come into the inner harbor to the extent that commerce (and vessels with property connected therewith) is endangered. It is also alleged, by sailors and masters of vessels frequenting said harbor, that the said portion of the east pier or breakwater already built is too near the west breakwater, thereby making the channel necessarily passed by vessels so narrow that in heavy weather, with west-northwest winds, all vessels are in danger in passing through, and that in fact since the building of said part of said east breakwater vessels have been wrecked because of the position of the said east pier or breakwater: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of War, by the Chief of Engineers aforesaid, be, and he is hereby, requested, if consistent with the public welfare, to report to this House:

First. Whether the said breached part of said west breakwater or pier ought at once to be repaired; and if so, what the cost of such repair will be.

Second. Whether, in the opinion of the engineers, the said east breakwater, so called, now erected in the mouth of the river does endanger vessels entering said harbor, and whether vessels have been injured and wrecked on said east pier, and whether said pier ought or ought not to be removed; and if it ought to be removed, what the cost of such removal will be.

Third. Whether the $80,000 recommended in the engineer's report for 1887 to be appropriated to Oswego Harbor by Congress at this session includes the expenditures necessary to repair said west breakwater and remove said east breakwater if the said breakwater should be repaired and removed.

Fourth. What the Chief of Engineers recommends the Congress to appropriate for the benefit of Oswego Harbor, and the amounts and particular purposes for which said money should be expended, including the repair of said west pier or breakwater and the removal of the said east pier, if such piers ought to be repaired and removed.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BURNES. I desire to make a privileged report. Since the urgent deficiency bill (H. R. 6437) was reported to the House by the Committee on Appropriations so many other items of urgent deficiency have been brought to the attention of the committee that it has been deemed necessary to make a supplemental report, which I now ask to present, that it may be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve all points of order upon this report.

The supplemental report (embracing proposed amendments to House bill No. 6437) was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

TRUST FUND FOR BANK-NOTE REDEMPTION.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills reported by committees begins at seven minutes before 1 o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on Banking and Currency. The Clerk will report the title of the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2012) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to invest the lawful money deposited in the Treasury, in trust, by national banking associations for the retirement of their circulating notes.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, in the sixth line of the printed bill is a verbal error which I ask unanimous consent may be corrected by substituting the word "June" for "July."

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that verbal correction will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGLEY. I now ask unanimous consent that the bill may be printed in the RECORD, with the understanding that it shall go over, as the gentlemen of the House desire to examine it in detail.

Mr. WEAVER. Go over until what time?

Mr. DINGLEY. I will make the motion as agreed upon. I first ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that order will be made. The Chair hears no objection; and it is so ordered.

The bill, with the proviso reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency as an amendment, is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2012) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to invest the lawful money deposited in the Treasury, in trust, by national banking associations for the retirement of their circulating notes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized, out of any lawful money deposited by national banks for the purpose of retiring their circulation, under the provisions of section 4 of the act of June 20, 1874, and of sections 5222 and 5230 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and of section 6 of the act of July 12, 1882, to purchase, at current market rates, under such regulations as he may prescribe, such bonds of the United States as in his judgment it will be for the interest of the Government to purchase, the bonds so purchased, together with the interest that may accrue on the same, to be held in trust and used for the payment of the circulating notes of the banks which have deposited lawful money for such payment: Provided, That not exceeding 80 per cent. of the lawful money so deposited shall at any time be invested as provided by this section: And provided further, That whenever, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, such circulating notes can not be redeemed from the uninvested lawful money so deposited and the interest on bonds so purchased, he may order the sale of so many of the bonds purchased and held, as provided in this act, as may be necessary to redeem the circulating notes for which lawful money was deposited.

Mr. DINGLEY. I now renew my motion that the further consideration of this bill be postponed——

The SPEAKER. That motion is pending.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move the previous question upon the motion.

Mr. PAYSON. What is the motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state it. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] moves that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until Wednesday next.

Mr. PAYSON. To come up during the second hour?

Mr. DINGLEY. After the hour for consideration of bills reported by committees.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the bill can not be fixed for any particular hour except by consent; but when a bill is postponed until a particular day, it may be called up any time during that day when the consideration of bills of that character is in order, and would come up after the hour for consideration.

Mr. PAYSON. Under the general rules of the House?

The SPEAKER. Under the general rules.

Mr. WEAVER. And with the understanding that the previous question is not to be moved until after ample time has been given for debate.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. We would like to have that understood. I inquire of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] whether he proposes to allow debate and amendment upon the bill or to call the previous question so soon as he may have made his own statement?

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman from Kansas misunderstood me. I merely demanded the previous question on the postponement of the bill. When the bill comes up for consideration I propose to give reasonable and adequate time for discussion.

Mr. WEAVER. That is right.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Time will be afforded to offer amendments?

Mr. DINGLEY. Of course.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion to postpone was agreed to.

DISCONTINUANCE OF COINAGE OF THREE-CENT PIECE.

Mr. BLAND. I call up for consideration a bill (H. R. 4342) to discontinue the coinage of the three-cent piece.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of section 3515 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as authorizes the coinage of the three-cent piece be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That as the said coin shall be paid to the United States the same shall be withdrawn from circulation and the metal thereof coined into five-cent pieces, in accordance with section 3515 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. All laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. BLAND. This is a unanimous report of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and has the approval of the Director of the Mint. I presume there will be no objection to it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROMOTION OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. HATCH. I will take the floor and yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GLASS].

Mr. GLASS. I move to take up for present consideration a bill (H. R. 1844) to promote agriculture and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The bill is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GLASS. I move, then, that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be considered in the House.

Mr. HATCH. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that I think the bill is improperly on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. At the last session the Speaker placed it on the House Calendar. It makes no appropriation. This is the same bill exactly.

The SPEAKER. This bill belongs to the House Calendar. It imposes certain duties on consuls without increasing the appropriation.

Mr. HATCH. It was placed on the House Calendar at the last session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to discharging the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from its further consideration?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 1712 and 1713, in chapter 2, under Title XVIII of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to consuls and commercial agents, be, and they are hereby, so amended that they shall read as follows:

"SEC. 1712. Consuls and commercial agents of the United States in foreign countries shall procure and transmit to the Department of State authentic commercial information respecting such countries, of such character and in such manner and form and at such times as the Department may from time to time prescribe. And they shall also procure and transmit to the Department of State, for the use of the Agricultural Department, monthly reports relative to the character, condition, and prospective yields of the agricultural and horticultural industries and other fruiteries of the country in which they are respectively stationed; and the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby required and directed to embody the information thus obtained in his monthly bulletin of crop reports.

"SEC. 1713. Every consular officer shall furnish to the Secretary of the Treasury, as often as shall be required, the prices current of all articles of merchandise usually exported to the United States from the port or place in which he is situated; and he shall also furnish to the Secretary of the Treasury, at least once in twelve months, the prices current of all articles of merchandise, including those of the farm, the garden, and the orchard, that are imported through the port or place in which he is stationed. And he shall also report as to the character of agricultural implements in use, and whether they are imported to or manufactured in that country; as to the character and extent of agricultural and horticultural pursuits there. That part of the information thus obtained which pertains to agriculture shall be transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, as soon as the same shall have been received by him, to the Commissioner of Agriculture, who shall include the same in his annual reports, stating the said prices in dollars and cents, and rendering tables of foreign weights and measures into their American equivalents."

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to amend the Revised Statutes so as to place agriculture on the same level with commerce and manufactures. A part of the consular reports is required to be made to the Secretary of State and a part to the Secretary of the Treasury. This proposed amendment does not design to divert those reports from the State or Treasury Department, but merely, when made to the State or Treasury Department, that that portion which relates to agriculture shall be transmitted to the Commissioner of Agriculture, to be embraced in his monthly and annual reports.

I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. GLASS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Agriculture, to whom was referred House bill No. 1844, have had the same under consideration, and have agreed upon an amendment thereto, herewith submitted, and thereupon beg leave to make the following report:

Under existing laws, as set forth in sections 1712 and 1713, consuls and commercial agents are not specifically required to embrace in their reports agricultural and horticultural industries. It is but simple justice to persons engaged in the latter industries that they should have given to them and the country, in such reports, as full and as complete an account of the condition, character, extent, and modes of culture of the various products of the soil within the boundaries of each consular district as may be practicable, in order that those who till the soil of this country may be at all times informed as to the products of the soil of foreign countries with which this country has or may have commercial relations, as to what articles, the product of the soil, are imported into or exported from the consular districts to which they may have been accredited.

This information is necessary to enable the farmer to know where there will be a demand for his surplus products, and the probable price he will be able to realize. The markets of the farmers must be enlarged in view of the increasing products of the farm, the garden, and the orchard of this country, and these reports will greatly aid in bringing about such a result. Existing law appears to contemplate the collection of information specially as to the exports to this country, and not imports into the consulates of the consuls of this Government. The farmer who may have a surplus desires to know the best market to which it may be sent, and it is the duty of his Government to keep him advised of such facts.

Your committee recommend that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. GLASS. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendments of the Committee on Agriculture were read, as follows:

After the word "obtained" and after the word "same" insert the words "or so much thereof as he may deem material and important."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GLASS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE COMMITTEE.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, has been called home by the sudden death of a relative, and I ask, by unanimous consent, that that committee be allowed its hour when he returns.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads be passed over, to be called at some time after the chairman returns.

Mr. HOLMAN. I also suggest that the same privilege be accorded to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. HATCH. The chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands is present.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not press the request.

Mr. DOCKERY'S request was agreed to.

PUBLIC LANDS COMMITTEE.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be no objection to the Committee on the Public Lands being passed over for the present. The Committee on the Public Lands has a bill of some importance it desires to bring before the House, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON] on that committee, who has made the minority report, is not in his seat. I ask that the committee be passed over for the present.

Mr. WILKINS. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman objects we will have to lose the hour, and I withdraw the request, as I do not propose, in the absence of the minority, to insist upon the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. MCKENNA. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will not object. The bill to be brought up is important to my State, but out of deference and consideration to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACK-

SON], who made the minority report, we have no desire to bring it up in his absence. I do not want to lose the hour by having the Committee on the Public Lands called now, and I hope there will be no objection to its being passed over, with the understanding it shall have an hour when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON] returns.

Mr. WILKINS. Why, Mr. Speaker, the committee will be called again within a week.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is very true; but I think the gentleman can not discriminate between the committees. I was gratified indeed to find that he did not interpose an objection to the request made on behalf of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads a few moments since. I thought that a very proper request, in view of the absence of the chairman of the committee. But in this case the member of the Committee on the Public Lands having charge of the minority report is necessarily absent from the House; and I trust the gentleman will not interpose an objection, or press the committee unreasonably in his absence.

It is possible that we may not desire to be heard again until the committee is called in its regular order.

Mr. WILKINS. With the understanding that this is not to be taken as a precedent, for I shall object hereafter, I will withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection to the request? The Chair hears none; and the Committee on the Public Lands will be called hereafter when other business is not before the House in the morning hour.

BLACK BOB BAND OF SHAWNEE INDIANS.

The Committee on Indian Affairs was called.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not see the chairman of the committee in his seat, but wish to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 6364) to provide for the sale of the lands located and patented to certain members of the Black Bob band of Shawnee Indians, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the House Calendar. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, with the consent of the Indians, severally, to whom patents have been issued for lands assigned to them in what is designated as "Black Bob's settlement," under the provision of the second article of the treaty with the Shawnee Indians, bearing date May 10, 1854, or the heirs-at-law of such, expressed in such manner as he may prescribe, be, and he hereby is, authorized to cause to be appraised by three disinterested appraisers, one of whom, at least, shall be a freeholder and resident of the State of Kansas, and sold in tracts not exceeding 200 acres, all the land allotted and patented to said Indians the title to which has not passed out of the patentee, or his heirs, by deeds of conveyance approved by the Secretary of the Interior, as required by the conditions contained in the patents issued under the provisions of the eleventh section of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1859, or the title to which has not passed by virtue of any decree heretofore rendered by the United States circuit court for the district of Kansas, under the provisions of the joint resolution approved March 3, 1879. Said lands shall be appraised as if in a state of nature, but the enhanced value thereof by virtue of the settlement and improvement of the surrounding country shall be considered in ascertaining their value, and the facts and circumstances under which said improvements were made shall be taken into consideration: Provided, That the improvements thereon shall be appraised separate and distinct from the land.

SEC. 2. That after the appraisement herein authorized shall have been completed, and after due notice, the Secretary of the Interior shall offer said lands for sale through the proper land office in tracts not exceeding 200 acres, which shall be the limit of the amount any one person shall be allowed to purchase, to the highest bidder for cash: Provided, That the said Secretary may dispose of the same upon the following terms as to payment, that is to say, one-third of the price of any tract of land sold under the provisions of this act to be paid by the purchaser on the day of sale, one-third in one year, and one-third in two years from said date, with interest on the deferred payments at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum; but in case of default in either of said payments, or the interest thereon, the person so defaulting for a period of six months shall forfeit absolutely the right to the tract which he has purchased, with any payment or payments he may have made, and the land thus forfeited shall again be sold as in the first instance: Provided further, That any settler who has in good faith been residing upon any of said land, or has made valuable improvements thereon, shall, upon proof to that effect to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, be permitted to purchase at the appraised value thereof the tract so resided upon or improved by him, not exceeding 200 acres, and if any such settler shall fail to purchase the tract of land occupied or improved by him within a limited time, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, which shall not be less than six months after the appraisement thereof, the same shall be sold without regard to the preference right to purchase conferred upon the settler by the provisions of this act: And provided further, That in event of the sale of any tract herein authorized to any person other than the settler thereon, the purchaser thereof shall pay to such settler the appraised value of his improvements, as determined and fixed under the provisions of this act, and who shall not be let into the possession of the land purchased by him until he has made or tendered to the settler the full payment of the appraised value of his improvements.

SEC. 3. That the net proceeds derived from the sale of the land herein authorized shall be placed in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians severally entitled thereto, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay the same in cash to the original allottee and patentee, or the heirs-at-law or legal representatives of such: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall pay to Thomas Carney, out of the proceeds of the sale of land described and set out therein, such sum or sums as he shall show to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior he actually paid severally to the Indians, from whom he obtained twenty-five several deeds of conveyance, which deeds have not been passed upon by the United States circuit court for the district of Kansas nor received the approval of the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That the consideration named in the deeds shall not be taken as prima facie evidence of the sum so paid, but the grantee shall show by competent evidence the actual consideration paid.

SEC. 4. That when a purchaser shall have made full payment for a tract of land as herein provided, and for the improvements thereon, in case any tract shall be sold to any person other than a bona fide settler thereon, patent shall be issued as in the case of public lands under the homestead and pre-emption laws.

SEC. 5. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, which sum shall be reimbursed pro rata out of the proceeds of the sale of the lands herein authorized: Provided, That the joint resolution of March 3, 1879, hereinbefore referred to, be, and the same is hereby, repealed: And provided further, That this act shall not be so construed as to affect the validity of any decree heretofore rendered by the United States circuit court for the district of Kansas, under the provisions of said joint resolution, or to impair the power of said court to set aside, amend, or correct any such decree, or to divest any party in interest of his right of appeal to the United States Supreme Court within the time limited by law: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall affect any action pending on the 1st day of January, 1888, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction of the subject-matter to determine the right of any grantee under an alleged legal and valid deed from an Indian allottee: And provided, That none of the lands spoken of herein shall be sold at less than their appraised value.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, the report in this case is quite a lengthy one, and I think a brief statement of the provisions of the bill and the object it is intended to accomplish will be satisfactory to the members of the House.

I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD, as I am advised the supply is exhausted.

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. PERKINS) is as follows:

This proposed legislation pertains to what are popularly called the Black Bob lands in Johnson County, Kansas.

By the amended second article of the treaty with the Shawnee Indians concluded May 10, 1854 (10 Stats., 1054), the United States ceded to that tribe "200,000 acres of land to be selected between the Missouri State line and a line parallel thereto and west of the same, 30 miles distant." The same article further provides that—

"All Shawnees residing east of said parallel line shall be entitled to, out of the residue of said 200,000 acres, if a single person, 200 acres, and if the head of a family, a quantity equal to 200 acres for each member of his or her family."

It also contains the following clause:

"In the settlement known as Black Bob's settlement, in which he has an improvement whereon he resides, and in that known as Long Tail's settlement, in which he has an improvement whereon he resides, there are a number of Shawnees who desire to hold their lands in common; it is therefore agreed that all Shawnees * * * who reside in said settlements respectively, and all who shall, within sixty days after the approval of the surveys hereinafter provided for, signify to the United States agent their election to join either of said communities and reside with them, shall have a quantity of land assigned and set off to them in a compact body at each of the settlements aforesaid, equal to 200 acres to every individual in each of said communities."

On the 1st day of February, 1856, instructions were issued by the Indian Office directing the United States Indian agent for the Shawnees to take a census of all members of the tribe and to call a council of the Shawnees with a view to the selection and assignment of lands as provided in the treaty.

From such census it appears there were one hundred and sixty-seven Indians located at Black Bob's settlement who held their lands in common, and for them there were selected 33,392 acres and a fraction of land, and which selection was approved by the Interior Department November 2, 1857.

Article 4 of the treaty provides that—

"Those of the Shawnees who may elect to live in common shall hereafter be permitted, if they so desire, to make separate selections within the bounds of the tract which may have been assigned to them in common, and such selections shall be made in all respects in conformity with the rules herein provided to govern those who shall in the first instance make separate selections."

Article 9 declares that Congress "may hereafter provide for the issuing to such of the Shawnees as may make separate selections, patents for the same, with such guards and restrictions as may seem advisable for their protection therein."

Afterwards Congress, by an act approved March 3, 1859 (11 Stats., 430), made provision for the issue of patents to certain Indians residing within the Territory of Kansas, as follows:

"That in all cases where, by the terms of any Indian treaty in Kansas Territory, said Indians are entitled to separate selections of land and to a patent therefor, under guards, restrictions, or conditions for their benefit, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to cause patents therefor to issue to such Indian or Indians and their heirs, upon such conditions and limitations, and under such guards or restrictions as may be prescribed by said Secretary."

In the course of time sixty-nine members of Black Bob's band made, under the direction of the United States agent for the tribe, separate selections of land, a list of which was reported by said agent, and upon the recommendation of the Indian Office, dated May 14, 1867, the Department directed the issue of patents to the individuals named therein, which was done June 10, 1867.

Afterwards sixty-five additional selections of land were made by members of Black Bob's band, a list of which was forwarded by the Indian agent for the tribe, in December, 1868, to the Indian Office, and on the 16th of March, 1869, the list was submitted to the Department, with the recommendation that individual patents issue therefor. On October 6, 1869, the Department directed the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cause patents to be issued, which was done on January 10, 1870. All patents issued to members of said Black Bob band were with the condition that the lands embraced therein were not to be sold or in any manner alienated without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior.

The United States Senate, by a resolution passed December 13, 1869, directed the Department to report for the information of that body copies of all papers on file relating to the disposal of the Black Bob lands, and requested a suspension of proceedings in the premises until Congressional action could be had in relation thereto. In compliance with said resolution, the Department, on January 15, 1870, transmitted to the Senate copies of the records and correspondence of the Indian Office pertinent to the history and status of the Black Bob Shawnee lands, and relative to sales of the same. (See Senate Executive Document No. 40, Forty-first Congress, first session.)

The sixty-five patents were therefore not delivered, and subsequently, by the provisions of section 14 of the act of Congress approved July 15, 1870 (16 Stats., 310), the Department was "directed to withhold patents for any portion of the lands known as the Black Bob Indian lands in Kansas," and also to withhold approval "of all transfers of said lands, and to permit peaceful occupancy by all settlers or Indians now residing thereon, until further action of Congress in relation thereto, without prejudice to existing rights."

This legislation was caused by the fact that all the lands of the Black Bob band were occupied by white settlers, a large number of whom it is claimed had been led to locate thereon by a letter from D. N. Cooley, then Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated January 20, 1866, addressed to Hon. Sidney Clarke, House of Representatives, in which Mr. Cooley stated that—

"By a treaty recently negotiated with the Black Bob band of the Shawnee tribe of Indians, what is deemed a just provision, has been made for the protection of the rights of settlers, upon payment of a fair price for the land they respectively occupy, and a similar provision will be made in any negotiations which may hereafter be made."

It does not seem that any treaty of the character referred to by Mr. Cooley was ever ratified, and the statement was doubtless an unintentional mistake, caused by the fact that the subject of providing by treaty for the settlers upon the Black Bob's tract had been freely discussed.

Under the legislation above referred to the undelivered patents remained in the Indian Office, together with numerous deeds of conveyance by the Indians, unapproved, until Congress again took action in the matter by a joint resolution approved March 3, 1879 (20 Stats., 488), by which the Attorney-General of the United States was instructed to cause a suit in equity to be brought in the name of the United States in the circuit court for the district of Kansas, to quiet and finally settle the title to the lands claimed by or under said Black Bob band in Kansas or adversely to said titles.

On June 11, 1879, Hon. Charles Devens, as Attorney-General of the United States, appointed John Hutchings, esq., of Lawrence, Kans., to appear for, present, and protect the rights of said band of Indians in said suit, and on the 8th of August, 1882, a former special assistant United States attorney, appointed for that purpose, having resigned, W. J. Bushan, esq., of Wyandotte, Kans., was appointed by Mr. Brewster, then Attorney-General, special United States attorney to conduct said suit on behalf of the United States.

Suit was brought in accordance with the resolution of Congress, and on March 29, 1884, a decree was rendered by said circuit court, affirming the validity of the one hundred and thirty-four patents issued as hereinbefore stated.

Many conveyances had been made by the Indians of the lands patented to them, and these conveyances were confirmed by the court and subsequently approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Thirteen additional selections of lands by members of the band that had not been approved by the Department were held valid by the court, and accordingly, except in one case, patents were issued, making one hundred and forty-six patents in all, covering 29,043 acres.

The court on November 22, 1886, rendered a supplemental decree covering a few additional cases. On the 27th October, 1884, Mr. Hutchings, special counsel for the Black Bob Indians in the suit referred to, transmitted an additional list of seven selections made by members of the band, and on the 4th of December, 1884, the Department held the allotments were authorized. In December of that year W. H. Robb, esq., then a United States special Indian agent, was instructed to ascertain whether said seven selections and sixteen others of the band were properly made, and, if so, to submit a schedule thereof for the action of the Department.

Mr. Robb was also instructed to make a valuation of the lands so allotted and of the improvements thereon for the information and future guidance of the Department.

Mr. Robb submitted his report, placing the land at from $2 to $15 per acre; and finding the improvements, which had been put there by the settlers who were in occupation of the land, to range in value from $25 to $2,000, he suggested that some arrangement be made whereby the settlers could obtain title from the Indians at the average value of $5 per acre. The Indian Office approved the schedule of allotments, and patents subsequently issued to twenty-one of the allottees. Since that time deeds have been filed in the Indian Office from many of these Indians, or their descendants, for approval, conveying the lands thus allotted to them to purchasers, and, with others, Thomas Carney, of Kansas, presented twenty-five deeds for approval. Representations were made to the Indian Office that the price paid by Mr. Carney was greatly inadequate, and for such reason Special Indian Agent Eugene E. White was sent to Kansas to investigate the merits of the several conveyances as to the sufficiency of the consideration named in each case and the circumstances attending the transaction, that the Indian Office might act understandingly. In April, 1886, Agent White submitted his report, in which he finds the consideration paid for the land by Carney wholly inadequate and unfair, and he reports much evidence to sustain him in his findings, and he also reports that deception and fraud were practiced to secure the deeds.

Upon the strength of this report the Interior Department has refused to approve the deeds to Carney, but has approved all the deeds presented the validity of which was established by the decree of the court of March 29, 1884.

All the lands that were patented to the said Black Bob band of Indians have been occupied by settlers for many years, some for more than thirty years, and they have built dwellings, erected school-houses and churches, and made valuable improvements on the land; and while it may be claimed that these settlers entered upon the lands as intruders and without legal right, yet in consequence of their improvements and continued occupancy, and the circumstances attending their settlement thereon, they have equities and claims which should not be overlooked by the Department, or by Congress, and as there has been contention for years between these hardy pioneers and the Indians, and as the lands are now valuable and are sought by speculators, it seems to your committee that there should be some legislation fair and satisfactory to the Indians, and yet such as will enable the Department to protect the settlers in their homes and in the labor that for years they have been expending upon these lands. Hence, as to the lands covered by the deeds to Thomas Carney, and all other lands patented to the members of the said band, conveyances of which by the Indians have not been declared valid by decree of the said circuit court, or the title to which has not passed by approval of the Secretary of the Interior, it is proposed, in justice to all, that they be sold under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in the manner provided in the bill reported by your committee herewith. This proposed legislation is simple in its provisions, and has the sanction of the Indian Office and the Interior Department, and in fact was recommended to Congress in Senate Executive Document No. 111, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, and many of the data given herein are taken from the letter of the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs contained in such executive document.

As will be seen from the provisions of the bill, the land is to be appraised by disinterested parties before it is sold, and no action can be taken except where the consent of the individual Indian is obtained to the sale of the piece allotted or owned by him, and the committee is of the opinion that the bill is carefully guarded in its provisions, so that full and exact justice may be done to all.

The honorable United States district attorney for the district of Kansas, to whom was referred the question as to whether fraud and deception were practiced by Thomas Carney when securing the deeds from the Indians, as found by Agent White, entirely relieves and exonerates him from such imputations and accusations, and for such reason your committee is of the opinion that the money actually paid by him for such lands should be returned by the Secretary of the Interior from the proceeds arising from the sales provided for by the bill reported herewith.

The lands are near to Kansas City, and during the last few years have increased rapidly in value; and your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. This bill has been recommended by the Indian Office as well as by the Interior Department, and in fact the bill reported to the House by the committee is almost exactly the bill draughted by the Indian Office and sent to Congress.

There are, in the aggregate, some six or eight thousand acres of land affected by the bill which are owned by these Indians and for which they hold patents. These lands, while belonging to the Indians, are occupied by settlers. Although the bill provides for the sale of the lands, it does not provide for their sale except by the consent of the Indians holding the patents. As I have said, these lands are occupied by settlers and have been for years. They have made their homes upon them and have been cultivating and living upon the lands all this time.

The bill provides for an appraisement of the lands by three disinterested appraisers, one of whom must be a resident and freeholder of the State of Kansas, acting under instructions and direction of the Interior Department. When the lands are appraised by this commission, the bill provides that the improvements made upon them by these settlers shall be also separately appraised and then that the settlers now living upon or cultivating the lands shall have an opportunity of taking the land at the appraised value, provided the Indians are satisfied with the value so fixed and are willing to sell the lands at the prices specified.

If the settlers do not consent to purchase them at that price, the lands are to be sold at auction, and the bidders who offer the most for them are to become the purchasers. But they are not to be allowed to take possession of the lands until they shall have paid the settlers the value of the improvements ascertained and determined by the commission appointed by the Interior Department.

The bill also gives the settlers an opportunity of making their payments in three annual installments, one-third in cash at the date of the purchase from the Secretary of the Interior, one-third in one year from that date, and one-third in two years from that time, with 5 per cent. interest per annum. They are to establish the facts to the satisfaction of the Interior Department that they are living there, or are cultivating the lands, or have improvements thereon, before the privilege is extended to the settlers of becoming the purchasers. Except where these conditions exist, the lands are to be sold to the highest bidder, but in no event for less than the appraised value.

If any gentleman desires any further information, I will be glad to give him all of the facts in connection with this bill and the reasons for its passage.

Mr. LONG. Let me ask the gentleman one question. Do I understand that the consent of the Indians is not required to this sale?

Mr. PERKINS. By no means. On the contrary the bill provides that in no event can there be a sale except by the consent of the Indians.

Mr. LONG. I understood you to say that in case they did not consent, the lands were to be sold to the highest bidder.

Mr. PERKINS. No, that is a mistake. There is no authority for the sale except by the consent of the Indians, for there is no question that they own these lands in severalty.

Mr. HOOKER. Let me ask the gentleman from Kansas a question.

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. HOOKER. In what way is the consent of the Indians to be obtained?

Mr. PERKINS. Under the direction and supervision of the Interior Department; under such directions as the Secretary of the Interior, acting I suppose through the Indian Office, may give for the purpose of securing the consent of the Indians.

Mr. HOOKER. A further question. As I understand the gentleman's statement, there can be no sale except by the consent of the Indians?

Mr. PERKINS. No, sir; there can be none.

Mr. HOOKER. And that consent to be ascertained by the Interior Department. If that consent is not obtained, does the bill provide that there shall be a public sale to other persons?

Mr. PERKINS. Not at all. There can be no sale except by consent of the Indians, for the reason that there is no question concerning the fact that the Indians own the lands. They have patents for them. The object of the bill is to do justice to the Indians under the supervision and protection of the Interior Department, and yet permit the settlers occupying the lands to protect themselves against the greed of speculators, and to provide at the same time that the improvements put upon the lands by the settlers shall be appraised and paid for in the event speculators obtain them.

Mr. HOOKER. One further question. The bill makes provision for the value of the improvements upon the lands, as well as for the lands. What is the object of that provision?

Mr. PERKINS. The object is to provide that if the settlers now upon the lands do not avail themselves of the privileges of the act, and purchase the lands which are then sold to outside parties, that the men purchasing shall not take possession until the value of these improvements shall be paid for.

Mr. HOOKER. Suppose the value of the improvements is greater than the value of the lands, do you propose to legislate the Indians out of them?

Mr. PERKINS. Not at all. The bill does not do that.

Mr. HOOKER. I think the report had better be read.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman from Kansas allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. WEAVER. Does this bill allot the lands in severalty?

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no; the lands have already been allotted and patented.

Mr. WEAVER. Have the Indians the fee?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; they have the fee under the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. WEAVER. How do these lands come to be occupied by the settlers?

Mr. PERKINS. Because there was a question some years ago whether they were properly claimed by the Indians or not; but the Supreme Court has upheld the title of the Indians, and the object of this bill is to give the settlers the opportunity of taking these lands at their appraised value; but the bill provides a sale can not be made without the consent of the Indians. The Indians have sold almost all of these lands to private parties, and these sales were submitted to the Interior Department for the approval of that Department, but the Department found the prices inadequate and refused to approve the deeds. They were not purchased by the occupants, but by parties who may have supposed there might be an opportunity of making something from the investment. For the purpose of settling the whole matter the Indian Office and the Interior Department prepared this bill, and ask its passage.

Mr. WEAVER. My former question was preliminary to another which I desire to ask as to the provision on the third page of the bill which provides the following terms as to payment:

One-third in one year, and one-third in two years from said date, with interest on the deferred payments at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum; but in case of default in either of said payments, or the interest thereon, the person so defaulting for a period of six months shall forfeit absolutely the right to the tract which he has purchased, with any payment or payments he may have made, and the land thus forfeited shall again be sold as in the first instance.

Does the gentleman not think that that is a pretty hard provision?

Mr. PERKINS. I think it is a very rigorous provision; but I will say the bill as draughted by the Interior Department did not even give them six months, but provided if default was made in the payments of principal or interest when they became due there should be an absolute forfeiture. The committee thought it too hard, and gave to the settlers, under the provisions of the bill, a period of six months.

Mr. WEAVER. The Indian Department may have been more rigorous than the committee, but I think the committee also is rigorous.

Mr. PERKINS. I agree with the gentleman from Iowa. I think they should have a period of twelve months at least——

Mr. CUTCHEON. May I ask the gentleman from Kansas a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Are these Indian proprietors known and identified?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUTCHEON. How long have the settlers been upon the land?

Mr. PERKINS. For twenty or twenty-five years.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope the report will be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Mississippi, or any other gentleman, can not call for the reading of the report in the time occupied by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOOKER. I understood the gentleman from Kansas to make his statement in order to avoid the reading of the report; but I think his statement indicated the matter to be of so important a character that the report should be read.

Mr. PERKINS. After I have answered the questions that are being put to me I will agree to the report being read.

Mr. CUTCHEON. In what respect, other than what has already been stated by the gentleman from Kansas, does the bill differ from the Department bill?

Mr. PERKINS. As draughted by the Department the bill did not designate where the appraisers should live. It gave to the Interior Department the right to send three disinterested appraisers from any section to appraise these lands. This bill provides that one of them shall live in the State of Kansas.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Does it leave them to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. PERKINS. Entirely so.

Then as the bill was originally draughted by the Interior Department it provided that money which had been advanced for these lands by one Thomas Carney in consideration of deeds given to him by the Indians should be returned to him out of the proceeds of sale, provided he satisfied the Department of Justice that his transactions with the Indians were bona fide.

Since that time, upon the request or recommendation of the Interior Department, the Attorney-General of the United States instructed the United States district attorney for the district of Kansas to investigate the matter, and he has reported to the Department of Justice that he finds the transactions between Mr. Carney and the Indians were in good faith. For that reason we provide by the bill that the money shall be refunded or returned to the man who made the purchase, by the Secretary of the Interior, when he has satisfied the Secretary of the Interior as to the amount he paid. And to protect the Interior Department against imposition the bill provides that the consideration mentioned in the deeds shall not be accepted as evidence at all of the amount that was paid, but imposes upon him the necessity of proving the consideration actually paid.

Mr. CUTCHEON. What was the amount paid by Carney?

Mr. PERKINS. It was from $3 to $5 an acre; but the lands would average an appraisement of more than that. They are near Kansas City, in Johnson County, in my State, and have been greatly increased in value by the growth of Kansas City.

Mr. BUCHANAN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If these individual proprietors are known, if the Indians have got patents for their lands, and if these settlers are on their lands, why can not these settlers, without any legislation on our part, buy up Indian rights and obtain a good title? I ask for information.

Mr. PERKINS. That is what I am going to give the gentleman. It is to protect the settlers from competition with speculators.

Mr. BUCHANAN. In other words, to get the lands at a lower price than the Indians would be willing to accept.

Mr. PERKINS. Not at all; because, under the provisions of the bill, there can not be an acre of these lands sold without the consent of the Indians. They have sold them, though, to other parties at very much less than will be realized for them under this bill.

Mr. BURNES. I wish to make a suggestion or a statement to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS], with the view of eliciting his opinion thereon. I confess that I speak only from general information, and therefore I may be in error. If I understand the matter, there has been no question as to the right and title of the Indians to these lands for twenty-five or thirty years past.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, there was a question at that time and was for a good many years; but for the last few years the Supreme Court of the United States has upheld the title of the Indians, so that the legal title is no longer a matter of dispute.

Mr. BURNES. My general information is that there was no reasonable question as to the title of the Indians to these lands, and there is certainly no question now.

Mr. PERKINS. No, no question now.

Mr. BURNES. As I understand it, certain gentlemen, twenty-five, twenty, or fifteen years ago, more or less, went upon these lands knowing that they were Indian lands and belonged to this tribe of Indians, and, having gone upon the lands, they made certain improvements and have used and occupied the lands all these years. Now, then, if you take the lands which are the fee-simple property of these people and dispose of them and allow the settlers compensation for the value of the improvements they have made, ought you not, in meting out equal justice, to require the settlers to allow the Indians something for the use of the lands all these years?

While upon this point, I will state that I have personal knowledge of the fact that it is not infrequently the case, in Kansas and elsewhere, that a man will take a quarter-section or a half-section or a section of land and agree to improve it, to build upon it, to put up certain fences and to plant certain trees upon it, for the use of the land for five years, leaving the improvements at the end of that time as the property of the owner of the land. I have made such leases myself. While we take care here of the parties who made these improvements, do we provide that the owners of the land shall be compensated for the use of it for the past twenty-five years?

Mr. ADAMS. Right in connection with that subject, I will ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] a question. In case the Indians decline, and choose to have the lands themselves, what judicial proceeding is there that they can avail themselves of?

Mr. PERKINS. I do not know of any. That is left just as it is now. There is no legislation upon that subject in the bill; it leaves the facts and the law as they stand to-day. Whatever remedy they have now they would have then.

Mr. ADAMS. In the State courts?

Mr. PERKINS. In the State court or in the Federal court.

Mr. BUCHANAN. They might there bring a suit in ejectment.

Mr. PERKINS. Those of them that are citizens might, and some of them I believe are citizens. But let me reply to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES]. I call the gentleman's attention to this provision of the bill:

Said lands shall be appraised as if in a state of nature, but the enhanced value thereof by virtue of the settlement and improvement of the surrounding country shall be considered in ascertaining their value.

The bill makes that provision, and gives the Indians this compensation for the occupation which the settlers have enjoyed during these years. In other words, the bill directs that the appraisers shall appraise the lands in view of existing conditions and existing circumstances; they are to ascertain the actual value to-day, and the Indians are to get the benefit of that. In this way, it seems to me, they get full compensation for the use and occupation of these lands.

Mr. BURNES. My suggestion to my friend from Kansas was not as to the value that has been added to these lands by the settlement and the civilization surrounding them. My inquiry was as to what is proposed, in addition to that, to be done to compensate the Indians for the use and occupation of their lands for so many years.

Mr. PERKINS. That is the compensation, and the only compensation provided for in the bill. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] that justice should be done, and it was the judgment of the committee and of the Interior Department that that provision would do full justice to the Indians, because it gives them the benefit of the enhanced value.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. If those who have held the title to these lands for so many years were white persons, the question would be left entirely to the courts, would it not?

Mr. PERKINS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. ADAMS. In the courts they could take the improvements.

Mr. PERKINS. No. We have an occupying-claimants act that would protect the settlers in their improvements, substantially as they are protected by the provisions of this bill.

Mr. ADAMS. I am very glad to hear that statement. If the persons holding the title to these lands were white men, the whole subject could be equitably settled in the State courts without the intervention of Congress.

Mr. PERKINS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. ADAMS. Then I will ask the gentleman what reason exists for the intervention of Congress merely on the ground that the owners of the lands happen to be Indians. If they had been white persons, although the settlers would have got an equitable allowance for their improvements, yet, in most of the States of the Union, the owners of the fee could not only get the lands, but could also maintain an action for the use and occupation of the lands, because use and occupation is something quite different from the enhancement of value which takes place from surrounding improvements. It occurs to me that there is no reason for the intervention of Congress.

Mr. PERKINS. The difficulty is the one I suggested a moment ago. There is no authority for the Indians to go into court and institute actions in their individual right for the purpose of evicting these settlers.

Mr. ADAMS. Why not give them that right?

Mr. PERKINS. Because, in the judgment of the Interior Department, the Indian Office, and the Committee on Indian Affairs, this bill is a more equitable measure than that would be. This bill does give to the Indians the protection I have suggested. It does not propose to allow the sale of an acre of this land, except with their consent. It proposes that the land be appraised at its full value by three disinterested persons to be designated by the Interior Department, and that the value of improvements and everything of that kind shall be taken into consideration in determining the present value of the property.

Mr. ADAMS. Yet, as suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], the bill does not give these Indians what they would receive if they were white persons having an interest in these lands.

Mr. BLAND. I would like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] to answer me this question: Whether he has ever had any practical experience in going into our Western country and opening up new lands, and whether the use and occupation of the land are usually sufficient to pay the settler for the amount he expends in the way of cultivation, improvements, etc.?

Mr. ADAMS. That does not answer my suggestion that if a white person happened to have had the fee of land for twenty-five years, he could go into a State court and get certain relief. I simply asked for information why these persons, who are Indians, are not entitled to substantially the same relief?

Mr. BLAND. What relief would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. ADAMS. Use and occupation.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Are we to understand that these Indians may go into the State courts for relief?

Mr. PERKINS. Not at all; there is the difficulty. Under existing law they can not go into court and institute actions of ejectment; and they can not sell the lands except with the approval of the Interior Department. They have undertaken to sell these lands, and according to the finding of the Interior Department have sold them upon such grossly inadequate consideration that the Department would not approve the deeds. But in the interest of justice and right, in order that these settlers may be given opportunity to protect themselves and secure their homes, while the Indians shall receive the full value of their lands, the Department has recommended to Congress this bill.

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman from Kansas permit a question?

Mr. PERKINS. With pleasure.

Mr. LIND. Have these Indians who own the fee of these lands ever paid a cent of taxes?

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no; Indian lands are not taxable.

Mr. LIND. Have the settlers paid taxes on their improvements, and thus assisted in building school-houses, roads, bridges, etc.?

Mr. PERKINS. They have paid taxes on all their personal property, notwithstanding they have resided on Indian lands.

Mr. LIND. But have they paid taxes on the improvements?

Mr. PERKINS. Under our law the improvements are taxed under these circumstances as personal property. But they have not paid any taxes, of course, upon the land; nor have the Indians.

Mr. BLANCHARD. As I understand, these lands are to be appraised by a board to be appointed by the Interior Department?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And the settler is to take the land at its appraised value. Now, suppose a speculator should come forward and be willing to give more than the appraised value for a certain tract?

Mr. RYAN. In that case it is not likely the Indian would consent to sell except at the higher price.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Would this bill require the Indian to sell to the settler, or could the Indian accept a larger price from a speculator?

Mr. PERKINS. The bill provides that not a foot of the land shall be sold without the consent of the Indian. It does propose that the settler shall have the lands at their appraised value, provided the Indians are satisfied.

Mr. BLANCHARD. It gives the settler preference.

Mr. PERKINS. It does. The object of the bill is to protect these men, or rather to give them an opportunity to protect themselves, in their homes and firesides, and in their accumulations during all these years. It proposes to do full and exact justice to all these Indians. Under the provisions of this bill they get more than twice as much as they otherwise would.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me inquire of the gentleman from Kansas where these Indians are.

Mr. PERKINS. A few are in Johnson County, where these lands are situated; some in Kansas City, some elsewhere.

Mr. HOLMAN. Are any of these Indians on these lands?

Mr. PERKINS. No; they are not living on any of these lands. The lands are occupied by these settlers.

Mr. HOLMAN. Do any of these Indians live upon lands of their own?

Mr. PERKINS. They are not farmers, and none of them occupy these lands, or are engaged in farming them.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to ask the gentleman further one or two questions. I notice this bill authorizes these lands to be sold in lots of 200 acres.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. In reference to lands taken under the homestead feature, that is of actual settlement, it may be so, but where lands like these are sold to the highest bidder it is the custom in reference to these Indian lands to confine the sale to 40 acres. Why is it provided these lands should be sold in lots of 200 acres?

Mr. PERKINS. The reason is the lands were so allotted to these Indians—200 acres to each Indian.

Mr. HOLMAN. The third section of the bill has a reference to the purchase made by Thomas Carney to the extent of some twenty-five conveyances. Will the gentleman explain that?

Mr. PERKINS. I did explain that. That is, the gentleman bought these lands and received twenty-five deeds from these Indians, covering the most of these lands, and he presented them to the Indian Office for approval.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. PERKINS. Just a word more.

(Here the Speaker took the chair.)

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

SPANISH AND MEXICAN LAND GRANTS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is no unfinished business, and if no motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is made, the next business will be the call of the bills on the House Calendar, which the Clerk will report in their order.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1968) to provide for the judicial investigation and determination of the validity of Spanish and Mexican land grants in New Mexico, Arizona, and the territory acquired of Mexico, and for other purposes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask by unanimous consent to pass that bill over without its losing its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT LEXINGTON.

The next business on the House Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2578) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near the city of Lexington, Mo.

Mr. BLAND. I think that bill has already been passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. DUNHAM. Yes, it was passed on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER].

The SPEAKER. It was passed by the House, and it is reported this morning as having passed the Senate. The Clerk will read the next bill.

PROTECTION TO GIRLS IN THE DISTRICT.

The next business on the House Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5870) to amend the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia for the protection of girls and for the punishment of the crime of rape.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1152 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1152. Every person convicted of rape, or as being accessory thereto before the fact, by carnally and unlawfully knowing any female under the age of fourteen years, shall suffer imprisonment and labor, for the first offense, not more than five years, and for the second or other offense, for not more than ten years; and when so convicted by forcibly ravishing any female, or of being accessory thereto before the fact, shall suffer imprisonment and labor, for the first offense not less than ten nor more than thirty years, and for the second offense for and during his natural life."

The report (by Mr. HEMPHILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1496) to amend the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia for the protection of girls and for the punishment of the crime of rape, respectfully report that they have had the same under consideration.

They find that the law as it now is in the District of Columbia is in a very unsettled state. The only two statutes that touch this subject are, first, 18 Eliz., c. 7, sec. 4, by which in England carnal knowledge of a girl under ten years is made a felony, and the English statute 3 Edward I, c. 13, whereby carnal knowledge of a girl under twelve years old is made a misdemeanor. It is a matter of doubt as to whether these statutes were ever made of force in the District, and the committee can learn of no case in which it has been decided that these statutes are in force here.

The committee report the bill back to the House with a substitute, which has been carefully considered, and recommend that the substitute do pass.

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is no law on this subject in this District, and this legislation is rendered necessary, and I hope there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RECORD OF WILLS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the House Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1514) relating to the record of wills in the District of Columbia.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the record of any will or codicil heretofore or hereafter recorded in the office of the register of wills of the District of Columbia, which shall have been admitted to probate by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, or the record of the transcript of the record and probate of any will or codicil elsewhere, or of any certified copy thereof, heretofore or hereafter filed in the office of said register of wills shall be prima facie evidence of the contents and due execution of such wills and codicils.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Let me ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia what is the necessity and what the purpose of this bill?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, as the law now stands in the District of Columbia, when a will is probated in the office of the register of wills it does not give the paper any sanction whatever in any other court in the District, and hence every time a question comes up involving collaterally anything connected with the will it is necessary, in order to prove it, to call all the witnesses to the will and establish it again.

The object of this bill is to make the certified copy of a will filed with the register of wills prima facie evidence of the contents and due execution of the will or codicils thereto in any court in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that there are certain suits now pending in the District of Columbia, attacking the possession and seeking to settle the title of certain real estate, in which it is regarded as important to at least one of the parties to the controversy that this Congress shall establish a new rule of evidence.

Ex post facto law in criminal cases is certainly under the ban of the enlightened intelligence of the century; so that it seems, both in constitutions and statutes, we have seen proper to make sacred the contract. One that exists may not be impaired by subsequent legislation.

True, the proposition now pending does not go to the contract, but it goes to the remedy and establishes a new rule of evidence, and just as effectually defeats controversies now pending as if it were an attack directly upon the rights of the parties to the contract.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow a question?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Do you refer to what is known as the "Blodgett claim" in the District of Columbia?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I do not refer to any particular claim. I never heard the names of any of the parties to the controversy mentioned.

I happened to learn that there were suits, not one but quite a number of suits, pending here, and that this bill was intended, or at least that it would have the effect of taking one of the parties to the controversy out of court by making that evidence which is not evidence today.

The real principle established by the bill is altogether correct, if it is to be made operative at the time or after its passage. But it strikes me that it goes a good ways when it seeks to make operative that which is not now so, either by statute or by the common law, and it seems to me, further, that this Congress ought not now to intervene for the purpose of creating what is practically a new remedy for parties that are already seeking to assert their rights in a court of justice.

I do not know, I repeat, any of the parties to this controversy—none of them. If I ever saw or spoke to one of them I am ignorant of the fact. I should seriously object, as every citizen, I think, has the right to object, after he has sought relief in the forum having jurisdiction over the subject-matter, to have any legislative body come in and establish a new provision of law which would practically debar him from asserting the rights he would have under his contract or under the rules of law by which the contract is to be interpreted by the court.

Mr. ROWELL. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him for a question? Would you stop making reforms, either in the law of evidence or anything else, because some lawsuit might be affected by the reform?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I would stop making the reforms simply for the purpose of reforming a particular litigant out of court.

Mr. BLAND. Still, if that would be the effect of the bill, might it not be remedied by an amendment so that it shall not be made applicable to any suits now pending?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Why certainly. If it is to be made operative on controversies in the future I have no possible objection to it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Let me state, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on the District of Columbia heard the gentleman who thought this bill affected his rights. After looking at it again, however, and hearing the views of the committee, he came to the conclusion that it did not.

However, I do not think it is proper to pass a bill which might affect any suits now pending; and I will therefore offer an amendment which will correct and remedy the difficulties suggested by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I am not appearing at the suggestion of any gentleman connected with any of these suits.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Certainly, I understand. I supposed, of course, the gentleman was simply looking to the enactment of a proper law.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. For I only happened to hear of the bill and of the pending controversies, and it struck me that if it affected controversies now pending, it was not a proper bill to pass in that form.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The main object of the bill meets the approval of everybody in the District, so far as I know; and the Bar Association gives it its indorsement.

Mr. COBB. Let me ask a question. Do I understand the gentleman from Indiana to say that this new rule of evidence is a good one?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I have not so stated.

Mr. COBB. I understood you to say that it was.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I have stated that I have no objection to making this rule of evidence apply to suits which are to be instituted in the future. It is not so important that we discuss the merits of a rule of evidence as that we shall know certainly what the rule is.

Mr. COBB. It seems to me a very important matter, when we propose to change a rule of evidence, to know whether or not it is a good rule that we propose to establish. If it is a good rule, should we stop in making the change to consider the effect on existing suits?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Rules of evidence sometimes affect controversies. One may in good faith invest his means in a subject-matter which at the time might be a lawful, proper, and safe investment, and you might destroy it, utterly destroy it, by creating a new rule of evidence.

Mr. COBB. But I do not understand that that is the proposition of this law. The proposition is not to affect any existing right at all, nor can it affect any existing right. The only proposition here is to make certain instruments prima facie evidence which otherwise they would not be. It can not affect the rights of any party, because those rights would still exist. The only question would be on whom would rest the burden of proof in certain instances.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. It is proposed in this bill to make certain instruments prima facie evidence which could not be so in any other way. They are not evidence at all. They extend as far back as sixty, seventy, and ninety-five years; and if you make this prima facie evidence, it is probable that prima facie evidence could not be overcome; and as the controversy has been thus long it is unfair to create this as a rule even of prima facie evidence.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call for the reading of the amendment which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That this act shall not apply in any cause now pending in the courts of the District of Columbia.

Mr. COBB. I would like to be heard on that amendment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COBB. I have not examined very carefully the legislation here proposed, but from what gentlemen say on this floor I understand it to be a change of existing law in mode of procedure with reference to the enforcement of certain rights in courts of justice in the District of Columbia. It is proposed to make changes which will conform the law as it exists here in the District of Columbia to the law which prevails in most if not all the States of the American Union. Am I right?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. COBB. Now, if it is our business here to frame laws governing the procedure in courts of justice in the District of Columbia, why should we hesitate to make this necessary change simply because some existing suits may be affected by it?

Why, sir, it is certainly recognized as the law that this mere change of procedure—this mere change of rules of evidence—does not affect existing rights.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. COBB. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. A statute of limitations is a statute simply affecting a remedy. Now, would it be fair if you had a contract running for six years, for this Congress, after it had run four, to declare the statute should bar that in three years?

Mr. COBB. No, sir; and the courts have decided that you can pass no such statute; that the passage of such statute is prevented by the constitutional provision against impairing the obligation of existing contracts. The legislative department of Government may not, under guise of changing remedies, destroy rights of action. Hence, while the statute of limitations may be changed, care must be had, in making the change, not to destroy the remedy for the enforcement of existing rights.

Mr. PETERS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. COBB. Yes, sir.

Mr. PETERS. The rule in the District of Columbia is that when a will has been probated the fact of that probate will not be evidence in any court, but the witnesses present when the will was probated must be present again. If this law passes, that rule of evidence is done away with, and in any suit heretofore instituted the probate of the will or the record of it would be prima facie evidence of its having been probated. Now, suppose a case in which the witnesses have died. The party may know that fact and may have purchased property with knowledge that the witnesses are dead and that there is no proof in existence. Now, by the passage of this act, unlimited by the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina, a party purchasing those rights might be deprived of them entirely, and yet he might have done it all in good faith.

Mr. COBB. I can see no difference between the case of a pending suit and one that might be commenced to-morrow. Suppose I wanted to commence a suit in the District of Columbia to-morrow or next week upon some old will that had been probated years ago, is it proper that I should have advantages by virtue of this bill not enjoyed by the party whose suit is pending now? The gentlemen confess that it is all right and proper to make this change in the rule of evidence and have it to affect suits to be commenced, and yet they say it is very wrong to allow the proposed new rule to affect suits already on the docket. I can see no distinction.

Mr. PETERS. For the reason that in one case rights have been acquired under the law as it is, while in any suit that may be brought after the passage of this act no such rights will have been acquired.

Mr. COBB. But the rights that are acquired are not under the rules of evidence at all. The rights which may have been acquired in a suit that is already pending, and the rights which may be acquired in a suit to be commenced to-morrow, all rest upon the contract, not upon the rules of evidence.

Mr. PETERS. But the rights have been acquired with reference to the existing rules of evidence.

Mr. COBB. No man ever acquires a right to the continued existence of a rule of evidence. Never. That has been decided over and over again. There is no such thing as a vested right applying to a rule of evidence, which may be changed from time to time by the legislative department of the Government. Hence when a man commences his suit he commences it with full knowledge of the fact that before that suit is terminated the rules of evidence which apply in the litigation may be changed by competent authority. I repeat, there is no such thing as a vested right in a rule of evidence. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is admitted on this floor that the rule that is proposed to be established by this bill is in conformity with the rule that prevails in perhaps every State in the American Union. We are all familiar with the rule making wills, when probated, and certain records when made, prima facie evidence in the courts. That rule has prevailed everywhere all over this land.

Mr. BLAND. If I understand this amendment, it would go only to this extent, that suits already commenced would not be affected by the bill.

Mr. COBB. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAND. But suppose the suit was dismissed and another suit commenced, my point is this——

Mr. COBB. I see the gentleman's point, and it is a very apt one.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman supposes that a party might want to bring a suit next week. If you pass this amendment he might not want to bring that suit; but, being already in court, and having incurred costs, there might be a question whether he should take a nonsuit and commence his suit anew. I do not see how the amendment can have very much effect one way or the other.

Mr. COBB. My point is that it is unwise in matters of this sort, relating simply to a rule of procedure, to make an exception of existing suits. There is no just foundation for it. A man can not begin a suit in the courts and say, "Now, having commenced this suit, I have a vested right in the course of proceeding prescribed by the existing law." No such right as that exists, as the courts have repeatedly decided. There is probably not a State supreme court in the Union that has not dealt with this question, and the courts have always said, with emphasis, that a party litigant has no vested interest in any rule of proceeding. The analogy which has been suggested as to the statute of limitation does not apply at all.

The law will not permit the legislature to absolutely bar a man of his rights by saying to him, "From this time on you shall not sue in the courts, on account of this statute of limitations. But you may change the remedy, provided you leave parties reasonable time in which to commence suit upon existing claims." The cases are not analogous. Here is a mere question as to where the burden of proof shall lie. The proposed rule is the correct one, as evidenced by the fact that it is the one prevailing in every State in the Union.

You go into court to-day in this District and probate a will; means are afforded by which parties can contest the right to probate the will; issue is joined, evidence is introduced, the will is probated and the record made. To-morrow a suit is brought upon the will, and, instead of taking the record already made, before a competent jurisdiction, you have to go through all that preliminary work again, and you must re-summon the witnesses and re-probate the will in the court where the suit upon it is pending.

The change proposed in this bill is evidently a proper change to make, and it does not become us to stop to consider what effect it will have upon existing suits, it being admitted on all hands that a party has no vested right in the continued existence of a rule of proceeding.

Mr. HEMPHILL. This bill simply proposes that where a will has been probated in the supreme court of the District of Columbia that fact shall be prima facie evidence in other cases in which it may be necessary to prove the will. The bill has been pending since January 4. It has been published in the papers, and there has been only a single objection made to it. The gentleman who made that objection came to the chairman of the committee, and, after discussing the matter, I understood he was satisfied that it did not affect the case in which he was interested. It does not affect such cases as those known in this District as "the Blodgett cases," because the will involved in those cases was not probated in the supreme court of the District. The amendment which I offered was offered out of deference to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE], and with the hope of stopping discussion, but it looks now as though that amendment was arousing some gentlemen on this side of the Chamber and giving rise to more discussion than the original bill. It is but fair to the committee and to myself to state that I suggested that amendment merely as a matter of precaution. It has not been reported from the committee, and it is really quite immaterial whether the House votes for it or against it. I ask for a vote on the amendment and then upon the bill.

Mr. LANE. I fully concur with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE], but the amendment does not meet his objection. It should apply to wills hereafter probated, instead of to suits now pending.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] knows what he means.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. So far as I am personally concerned, I am willing that the rule be made to apply to all suits that may be instituted hereafter. I see the force of the suggestion which has been made. But I did not wish to continue this discussion after the gentleman proposed his amendment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to, there being—ayes 37, noes 32.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL COMMITTEE-ROOMS.

Mr. SOWDEN. I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts. I ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the accompanying letter of the Clerk of the House, in reference to renting certain rooms for the use of the Committees on Indian Depredation Claims and the Eleventh Census, have considered the same, and report that suitable and satisfactory rooms can be secured for the said committees in the Butler building, south of the Capitol. General B. F. Butler, the owner of the said building, appeared before the Committee on Accounts and offered to rent two rooms, unfurnished, at $50 per month each. Your committee would recommend that his offer be accepted; and to carry into effect this recommendation would ask the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to rent during the remainder of this session of Congress, from Hon. B. F. Butler, two rooms in the building south of the Capitol—one for the use of the Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, and one for the use of the Committee on the Eleventh Census—at a rental not to exceed $50 per month each; and further, that the Clerk of the House be directed to suitably furnish the said two rooms, at a cost not to exceed $100 for each, for the use of the said committees, the rental and cost of furnishing to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. SOWDEN. If no gentleman desires to make any inquiry in reference to this subject, I ask the previous question.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I move to amend the resolution by inserting "the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings." I have been requested by the chairman of the committee, who is now absent, to make this motion.

Mr. SOWDEN. I hope the motion will be voted down.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. It is certainly proper that this committee should be provided with a room.

The SPEAKER. If this amendment be agreed to, the resolution will have to be further amended so as to provide for three rooms; it now provides for only two.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] had demanded the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution, and no amendment is now in order.

Mr. SOWDEN. I stated that if no gentleman wished to make any inquiry in reference to the subject of the report, I demanded the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania states that he demanded the previous question (which the Chair did not hear) before the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY] was recognized.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Well, it seems to me it would make no difference if he had demanded the previous question. The demand had not been sustained.

The SPEAKER. Still, an amendment can not be entertained pending the demand for the previous question. The House must first dispose of that proposition before another can be presented.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I had the floor.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania states—and of course the Chair always accepts such a statement—that he had demanded the previous question.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I would not question any statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania; yet I understand he does not antagonize the proposition to provide this committee with a room. They now have no room in which to hold their meetings. It seems to me they should be provided for in this respect.

Mr. SOWDEN. If the gentleman will offer his proposition separately and refer it to our committee, it will be fairly considered.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The question is on ordering the previous question. If the House desires to amend the resolution, the demand for the previous question can be voted down.

The previous question was ordered, there being—ayes 63, noes 18.

The resolution was then adopted.

Mr. SOWDEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARBITRATION.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask, by unanimous consent, to report back from the Committee on Foreign Affairs a bill, simply for reference.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCREARY, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 1473) authorizing the President of the United States to arrange a conference for the purpose of promoting arbitration and encouraging reciprocal commercial relations between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and the Empire of Brazil; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PUNISHING OF LOTTERY ADVERTISING.

The next business on the House Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5933) to punish the advertising of lottery tickets in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia by Mr. HEMPHILL.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Since that bill has been reported to the House there has been a supplemental hearing on the part of the subcommittee, and there is now pending a request on the part of one of the newspapers of the District; and in order that there may be a full hearing I ask the House to pass the bill over for the present.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I have had some experience in reference to these matters, and I understand the trick of delaying bills from committees to a day too late for final action.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that individually I have seen nothing to change my views on this subject. The committee has heard one lawyer representing the newspapers, and has also heard a lawyer representing the lottery company. An application came to me asking to be heard by one of the proprietors of one of the newspapers of this city. Next Monday will be District day, and if the gentleman who has made application to be heard can be heard by the subcommittee before that time, we will be ready to go on with the bill. So far as I know there is no disposition to postpone it unduly, and so far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing the House should have an opportunity to vote on it. I am satisfied that is the desire of the committee.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I had no idea it was the purpose of the committee unduly to delay action. I do not desire to cast any reflection upon the committee, nor do I wish to take the control out of the hands of the gentleman from South Carolina. This law is similar to that prevailing in thirty-five States of the Union, and I do not think this District, in reference to this matter, should remain any longer in the rear of the advancing legislation of the age.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will yield for a few minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GLASS].

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I insist that this bill shall be put on its passage at this time. Its provisions are not unknown either to the members of the House or to the country. They have been discussed by the public press for many years, and a similar bill was passed by a large majority during the Forty-ninth Congress. The good people of the country demand such legislation at the hands of Congress in the interest of good government, good society, and good order. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. COMPTON. I move that the bill be postponed until Monday next.

Mr. COX. I hope that bill will go over until Monday next. It is an important bill connected with human society. It is a larger bill than members are aware of. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I will not object, so far as I am concerned, if we have assurance from the committee and the House it shall then be taken up. All we want to know is that the bill is to be finally acted upon.

Mr. COX. The Committee on the District of Columbia is entitled to the floor on Monday next.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I can only say, so far as the committee is concerned, that its action has been settled by the report already made to this House. I am not authorized to make any change in it; but since the report was made the subcommittee has heard argument, and there is a request pending, made this morning by the proprietors of one of the newspapers here, to be heard by the committee. The only object of moving the postponement was to let everybody have a fair chance. So far as I am concerned, we shall be ready to hear that gentleman before Monday, and to take the bill up, if possible, on Monday next.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The House might as well determine now whether this legislation shall be acted on now or postponed to some future time. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to delay the consideration of the bill. I did not make the motion for that purpose; but this is a bill involving serious considerations. Matters of grave importance are involved, matters of justice and right, and it should be discussed fully and fairly before the House determines to enact it into law.

The Committee on the District of Columbia made this report after arguments had been submitted to it, and the proposition now is to hear other arguments. The committee, through its chairman, has assented to that, and I think it due to the committee to be put in possession of all the light attainable before being required to come before the House and, either as a committee or as individual members, give their sanction to the bill or stand in opposition to it.

As a member of that committee I wish to say to gentlemen upon the floor in favor of the passage of this bill, that for one I will throw no obstacle in the way of its fullest and speediest consideration. So far as I am concerned, we only ask gentlemen to discuss the bill fairly and fully in the House at a reasonable time to be fixed for its consideration.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman indulge me in an inquiry?

Mr. COMPTON. Certainly.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Is there any constitutional question involved?

Mr. COMPTON. I think there is, sir; a very serious and a very grave one.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I would be very glad to be advised as to its character.

Mr. COMPTON. I do not care, Mr. Speaker, to discuss the bill now. If the House sustains my motion and suspends the consideration of this bill until Monday next, when I hope the committee will be ready to take it up, I will be ready to discuss the general questions involved. If, on the other hand, the House proposes to enter upon the consideration of the bill now, I am ready to proceed with the discussion of it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. My reason for making the inquiry is this: If the question is simply as to the propriety of the legislation, I was going to suggest that the House was perhaps already fully advised as to that point. If there was any individual constitutional question involved, that of course would be a reason for its postponement.

But, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this whole question of lotteries and lottery advertisements has been in the forum for discussion a great many years; and doubtless all gentlemen are informed in regard to it. In that view of the case it looks as if there was no occasion for its postponement to give a third opportunity to the same side to present the same arguments against any restrictive legislation.

Mr. GROUT. I was a member of the subcommittee that examined and reported this bill to the full committee some little time since, and the committee agreed to report it favorably to the House.

Pending the consideration of the bill the subcommittee heard arguments in opposition to its passage, which were not sufficient to change the views of that committee, and their report was made, as I have stated. Since then the chairman of the committee, who was also chairman of the subcommittee, has been importuned, I learn, to hear other arguments, and, with another member of the subcommittee, the assurance has been given that they will be heard. I think now that this bill can be safely trusted with the committee. Nobody need be afraid that the bill will not be considered and pressed, and the House will have a chance to act upon it.

I make the request, therefore, for postponement because of the peculiar condition in which the members of the subcommittee are placed, because of this quasi assurance that they would hear further argument in reference to it.

I hope the matter will be allowed to go over without losing its place upon the Calendar. I repeat, you can trust this committee with the bill, and not have any fear concerning it, in my opinion. But the committee want to hear all that can be said against it. That is the situation; and out of deference to the committee, although I was opposed to postponement a short time ago, and out of deference to the chairman of the committee, in view of the promise given, and of which I have just been informed, I hope the House will consent to its postponement.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] put an inquiry looking to the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of a measure of this character. I have not read this bill and do not know anything of it, except from its title and the short discussion that has taken place. But I have knowledge of the fact that a gentleman on this side of the Chamber has made a careful study of it, is opposed to it, and desires to discuss it. He is now absent, and out of deference to him I hope the postponement will prevail.

I can well imagine, sir, how a very interesting discussion might be had in reference to this bill. There are both sides and many questions connected with the printing of matter in a newspaper—even a lottery advertisement. What may be contra bonos mores——

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman be kind enough to repeat that? [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. That is Turkish. You would not understand it. [Renewed laughter.] As to what is opposed to public morality, as to matters connected with morals, which my friend from Indiana understands, or matters connected with immorality, which he does not understand, there are grave questions to be considered, namely, the right of the press in this country. I would not go to work to cut down the privileges of the press in any respect, even in the printing of lottery advertisements or otherwise, without careful consideration and a full knowledge of all the facts.

I would tolerate a great many spots on the sun rather than deprive the gentleman from Indiana of light. Let us be a little wary of how we begin on this matter of infringing on the liberty of our journals, or the "liberty of unlicensed printing," as John Milton calls it. I do not know but I may vote for this bill when it comes up on Monday, and after there has been a fair discussion on both sides. I hope the motion of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON] will prevail.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I concur to some extent with the gentleman from New York when he says this is in some measure infringing on the liberty of the press; and therefore the committee have thought it proper that they should have the matter fully discussed. It was only this morning that I had an application to hear additional arguments, and I said that I had no doubt the committee would be willing to hear additional arguments on the subject, and that the measure would not be called up until it comes up on Monday. I think it would be fairer to the people interested all around that the measure should stand over till Monday, when, if nothing intervenes, we will have a vote on it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I do not object to that proposition. Since I have learned from the gentleman from New York that there is a serious question as to whether or not we may by law prohibit the advertising of immorality in the newspapers, and as he is one of the guardians of the Constitution, rather than see it impinged upon or vitally hurt in any part, I will consent to the bill going over till Monday.

Mr. COX. Much obliged.

The question being taken on Mr. COMPTON'S motion to postpone until Monday the further consideration of the bill, there were—ayes 92, noes 15.

So (further count not being called for) the motion was agreed to.

FEES FOR EXEMPLIFICATION OF LAND PATENTS.

The next business on the House Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend section 461 of the Revised Statutes, regulating fees for exemplification of land patents, and for other purposes, reported by Mr. MCRAE from the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 461 of the Revised Statutes be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 461. All exemplifications of patents or papers on file or of record in the General Land Office which may be required by parties interested shall be furnished by the Commissioner upon the payment by such parties at the rate of 15 cents per hundred words, and 30 cents each for photolithographed copies of township plats or diagrams, unverified, not to exceed ten copies to any one person, and 25 cents each for all copies in excess of ten, with an additional sum of $1 for the Commissioner's certificate of verification, with the General Land Office seal; and one of the employés of the office shall be designated by the Commissioner as the receiving clerk, and the amount so received shall, under the direction of the Commissioner, be paid into the Treasury; but fees shall not be demanded for such authenticated copies as may be required by the officers of any branch of the Government, nor for such unverified copies as the Commissioner, in his discretion, may deem proper to furnish."

Mr. MCRAE. The purpose of this bill is to reduce the cost of plats or diagrams furnished by the office of the General Land Commissioner from $3, the present cost for each plat or diagram, to the rates prescribed in the bill. It is favored and desired by the Department. If there be no objection to it, I will move the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I ask that the title of the bill be again read.

The title of the bill was again read.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCRAE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

The next bill on the House Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4336) regulating the rates of postage on second-class mail matter at letter-carrier offices, reported with an adverse recommendation by Mr. BLOUNT from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The bill was read.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask that, in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, this bill be passed over informally.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is there a minority report?

Mr. BINGHAM. There will be to-day.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to know whether there is any assurance that the bill will be reached again for consideration.

Mr. DOCKERY. My request was that it be passed over informally, not to lose its place on the Calendar. I assure the gentleman from Maine that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads will make every effort to reach it.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does the committee propose to bring the matter before this House for consideration?

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is satisfactory.

MILITARY AND POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

The next business on the House Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1426) supplementary to the act of July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," and also of the act of July 2, 1864, and other acts amendatory of said first-named act, reported by Mr. DOCKERY from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads with amendments.

The bill as proposed to be amended was read, as follows:

[The amendments of the committee are to omit the parts printed within brackets and insert the parts printed in italics.]

Be it enacted, etc., That all railroad and telegraph companies to which the United States has granted any subsidy in lands or bonds or loan of credit for the construction of either railroad or telegraph lines, which, by the acts incorporating them, or by any act amendatory or supplementary thereto, are required to construct, maintain, or operate telegraph lines, and all companies engaged in operating said railroads or telegraph lines shall forthwith and henceforward, by and through their own respective corporate officers and employés, construct, maintain, and operate, for railroad, governmental, commercial, and all other purposes, telegraph lines, and exercise by themselves alone all the telegraph franchises conferred upon them and obligations assumed by them under the acts making the grants as aforesaid.

SEC. 2. That whenever any telegraph company which shall have accepted the provisions of Title LXV of the Revised Statutes shall extend its line [to the eastern terminus or] to any station or office of a telegraph line belonging to any one of said railroad or telegraph companies, referred to in the first section of this act, said telegraph company so extending its line shall have the right and said railroad or telegraph company shall allow the line of said telegraph company so extending its line to connect with the telegraph line of said railroad or telegraph company to which it is extended at the place where their lines may meet, for the prompt and convenient interchange of telegraph business between said companies; and such railroad and telegraph companies, referred to in the first section of this act, shall so operate their respective telegraph lines as to afford equal facilities to all, without discrimination in favor of or against any person, company, or corporation whatever, and shall receive, deliver, and exchange business with connecting telegraph lines on equal terms, and affording equal facilities, and without discrimination for or against any one of such connecting lines; and such exchange of business shall be on terms just and equitable.

SEC. 3. That if any such railroad or telegraph company referred to in the first section of this act, or company operating such railroad or telegraph line shall refuse or fail, in whole or in part, to construct, maintain, and operate a telegraph line as provided in this act and acts to which this is supplementary, for the use of the Government or the public, for commercial and other purposes, without discrimination, or shall refuse or fail to make or continue such arrangements for the interchange of business with any connecting telegraph company, then any person, company, corporation, or connecting telegraph company may apply for relief to the Interstate Commerce Commission [Commissioner of Railroads], whose duty it shall thereupon be, under such rules and regulations as said Commission may prescribe, to ascertain [and report] the facts, [in the case to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall] and determine and order what arrangement is proper to be made in the particular case, and the railroad or telegraph company concerned shall abide by and perform such order; and it shall be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission, [Railroad Commissioner], when such determination and order are made, [certified to him], to [see that the same is notified to] notify the parties concerned [and is properly and efficiently carried into effect], and, if necessary, [enforced by] enforce the same by writ of mandamus [or other proper legal proceedings] in the courts of the United States, in the name of the United States, at the relation of either of said Interstate Commerce Commissioners: Provided, That the said Commissioners may institute any inquiry, upon their own motion, and in the same manner and to the same effect as though complaint had been made.

SEC. 4. That in order to secure and preserve to the United States the full value and benefit of its liens upon all the telegraph lines required to be constructed by and lawfully belonging to said railroad and telegraph companies referred to in the first section of this act, and to have the same possessed, used, and operated in conformity with the provisions of this act and of the several acts to which this act is supplementary, it is hereby made the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States, by proper proceedings, to enforce and prevent any unlawful interference with the rights and equities of the United States under this act, and under the acts hereinbefore mentioned, and under all acts of Congress relating to such railroads and telegraph lines, and to have legally ascertained and finally adjudicated all alleged rights of all persons and corporations whatever claiming in any manner any control or interest of any kind in any telegraph lines or property, or exclusive rights of way upon the lands of said railroad companies, or any of them, and to have all contracts and provisions of contracts set aside and annulled which have been unlawfully and beyond their powers entered into by said railroad or telegraph companies, or any of them, with any other person, company, or corporation.

SEC. 5. That any officer or agent of said railroad or telegraph companies, or of any company operating the railroads and telegraph lines of said companies, who shall refuse or fail to operate the telegraph lines [on] of said railroads or telegraph companies under his control, or which he is engaged in operating, in the manner directed in this act and by the acts to which it is supplementary, or who shall refuse or fail, in such operation and use, to afford and secure to the Government and the public equal facilities, or to secure to each of said connecting telegraph lines equal advantages and facilities in the interchange of business, as herein provided for, without any discrimination whatever for or adverse to the telegraph line of any or either of said connecting companies, or shall refuse to abide by, or perform and carry out within a reasonable time the order or orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, shall in every such case of refusal or failure be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall in every such case be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000, and may be imprisoned not less than six months; and in every such case of refusal or failure the party aggrieved may not only cause the officer or agent guilty thereof to be prosecuted under the provisions of this section, but may also bring an action for the damages sustained thereby against the company whose officer or agent may be guilty thereof, in the circuit or district court of the United States in any State or Territory in which any portion of the road or telegraph line of said company may be situated; and in case of suit process may be served upon any agent of the company found in such State or Territory, and such service shall be held by the court good and sufficient.

SEC. 6. That it shall be the duty of each and every one of the aforesaid railroad and telegraph companies within sixty days from and after the passage of this act, to file with the [Commissioner of Railroads] Interstate Commerce Commission copies of all contracts and agreements of every description existing between it and every other person or corporation whatsoever in reference to the ownership, possession, maintenance, control, use, or operation of any telegraph lines, or property over or upon its [or] rights of way [upon its railroads], and also a report describing with sufficient certainty the telegraph lines and property belonging to it, and the manner in which the same are being then used and operated by it, and the telegraph lines and property upon its right of way in which any other person or corporation claims to have a title or interest, and setting forth the grounds of such claim, and the manner in which the same are being then used and operated; and it shall be the duty of each and every one of said railroad and telegraph companies annually hereafter to report to the [Commissioner of Railroads] Interstate Commerce Commission, with reasonable fullness and certainty, the nature, extent, value, and condition of the telegraph lines and property then belonging to it, the gross earnings, and all expenses of maintenance, use, and operation thereof, and its relation and business with all connecting telegraph companies during the preceding year, at such time and in such manner as may be required by a system of reports which the Commissioner of Railroads shall prescribe; and if any of said railroad or telegraph companies shall refuse or fail to make such reports or any report as may be called for by [the Commissioner of Railroads] said Commission, or refuse to submit its books and records [to his] for inspection, [it shall be subject to all the forfeitures and penalties provided by the fifth section of the act of June 19, 1878, entitled "An act to create an Auditor of Railroad Accounts, and for other purposes."] such neglect or refusal shall operate as a forfeiture, in each case of such neglect or refusal, of a sum not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, to be recovered by the Attorney-General of the United States, in the name and for the use and benefit of the United States; and it shall be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to inform the Attorney-General of all such cases of neglect or refusal, whose duty it shall be to proceed at once to judicially enforce the forfeitures hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 7. That nothing in this act shall be construed to affect or impair the right of Congress, at any time hereafter, to alter, amend, or repeal the said acts hereinbefore mentioned; and this act shall be subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal as, in the opinion of Congress, justice or the public welfare may require; and nothing herein contained shall be held to deny, exclude, or impair any right or remedy in the premises now existing in the United States.

[SEC. 8. That every telegraph company which shall have accepted the provisions of Title LXV of the Revised Statutes shall be, and is hereby, prohibited from engaging in the collection or selling of election news, or other news reports of the current events of the day, except quotations of stocks and commercial markets.]

Mr. DOCKERY. There will probably be no vote on this measure to-night; and I ask that the report of the committee, with the exception of the testimony taken at the last session of Congress, be printed in the RECORD. I also desire in this connection to have printed in the RECORD the contracts between the Western Union Telegraph Company and the Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railroad Companies.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman's request of course includes the minority report?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. PAYSON. Before that arrangement is made I wish to ask where is the necessity of burdening the RECORD with what has already appeared in print and is in possession of every member of the House?

Mr. DOCKERY. I have no objection myself to withdrawing the request.

Mr. PAYSON. It is a bulky document.

Mr. DOCKERY. But I omit the bulk and simply ask for printing the report proper.

Mr. PAYSON. How long is it?

Mr. DOCKERY. Not to exceed three pages.

Mr. PAYSON. Then I do not object.

There being no objection, the majority and minority reports were ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The majority report (by Mr. DOCKERY) is as follows:

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads submit the following report:

Amend section 4, in nineteenth line, after the word "railroad," add the words "or telegraph."

Amend section 5, first line, by adding after the word "railroad" the words "or telegraph," and add in second line, after the word "railroad," the words "and telegraph lines;" also in fourth line strike out the word "on" and insert the word "of," and add, after the word "railroads," in fourth line, "or telegraph companies."

Amend section 5 by adding at the end of the twelfth line the following: "or shall refuse to abide by or perform and carry out within a reasonable time the order or orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission," and in twenty-third line of same section, after the word "road," add the words "or telegraph lines."

Amend section 6 by striking out, wherever they occur in said section, the words "Commissioner of Railroads" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Interstate Commerce Commission," except in the twenty-seventh line insert only the words "said Commission," and in second line add, after the word "railroad," the words "and telegraph," and in eighth line of said section strike out the word "or" after the word "property," and add the words "over or upon its," and strike out in same line the words "upon its railroads," and adding in seventeenth line, after the word "railroad," the words "and telegraph."

Amend section 6 by adding, at the end of the twenty-sixth line, the words "or any report;" also by striking out, in twenty-seventh line same section, the word "the," and, in twenty-eighth line, striking out the words "to his" and inserting the word "for;" also in twenty-sixth line add, after the word "railroad," the words "or telegraph."

Amend section 6 further by striking out, after the word "inspection," in the twenty-eighth line, the remainder of the section and adding the following: "such neglect or refusal shall operate as a forfeiture in each case of such neglect or refusal of a sum not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, to be recovered by the Attorney-General of the United States in the name and for the use and benefit of the United States; and it shall be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to inform the Attorney-General of all such cases of neglect or refusal, whose duty it shall be to proceed at once to judicially enforce the forfeitures hereinbefore provided."

Amend by striking out the eighth section entire.

The House of Representatives, by resolution adopted February 26, 1886, empowered the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to ascertain and report whether "additional legislation is needed to prevent a monopoly of telegraphic facilities; to secure to the Southern, Western, and Pacific States the benefits of competition between the telegraph companies; and to protect the people of the United States against unreasonable charges for telegraphic services;" and to carry out the purposes of the inquiry authorized the committee to send for and examine persons, books, and papers, administer oaths to witnesses, and employ a stenographer. Pursuant to the terms of the resolution the committee heard statements and examined witnesses with a view of ascertaining especially the relations of the land-grant railroads and telegraphic lines to the lines of other telegraph companies, to the public, and to the Government. As a result of their investigations the conclusion was reached that the Pacific railroads had not complied with the requirements of the acts under which they were incorporated, for the reason that, instead of constructing, maintaining, and operating a telegraph line, they had divested themselves of this obligation by contracting with the Western Union Telegraph Company to perform the service. For the purpose of compelling the land-grant roads to comply with the plain requirements of their incorporating acts, the Post-Office Committee reported House bill 10398; but inasmuch as the bill, with the accompanying report, was submitted at a late hour of the session (December 22, 1886), no action thereon was taken by the House.

The bill under consideration (H. R. 1426), with the exception of section 8, is in terms identical with the bill reported by the Post-Office Committee at the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress. The effects of the amendments proposed by your committee are (1) to include telegraph companies within the scope of the provisions of the bill, and require them, as well as railroad companies, to construct, maintain, and operate telegraph lines where, by the original acts of incorporation or supplementary acts, they were required to so construct, maintain, and operate such lines; (2) the Interstate Commerce Commission is charged with the duty of enforcing the requirements of this measure instead of the Commissioner of Railroads and Secretary of the Interior, as originally proposed in House bill 10398; (3) the bill is further amended by striking out section 8, because it is not germane to the other provisions, and the committee did not desire to enlarge its scope beyond the purpose of the original inquiry.

Inasmuch as the report of the Post-Office Committee, submitted at the last session, reflects the views of your committee upon the question at issue, we beg to adopt it as our own, and offer House bill 1426, as amended, in lieu of the bill then reported. We also present the statements and evidence taken under the authority of the resolution of February 26, 1886, as a part of this report.

[Report submitted December 22, 1886.]

ACTS RELATING TO LAND-GRANT TELEGRAPH LINES.

The act of June 16, 1860, authorizing the construction of a telegraph line "between the Atlantic and Pacific States," provided (section 1)—

"That said line or lines * * * shall be open to the use of all citizens of the United States during the term of the said contract, on the payment of the regular charges for transmission of dispatches."

Section 3 provided—

"That messages received from any individual, company, or corporation, or from any telegraph lines connecting with this line at either of its termini, shall be impartially transmitted in the order of their reception, excepting that the dispatches of the Government shall have priority."

The first Pacific railroad act, passed July 1, 1862, granting lands and bonds in aid of "a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean," authorized and empowered the Union Pacific Railway Company "to lay out, locate, construct, furnish, maintain, and enjoy a continuous railroad and telegraph, with the appurtenances," etc. Section 2 of said act granted the right of way to said company "for the construction of said railroad and telegraph line," and authorized the use of stone, timber, and other materials for the construction thereof. Section 3 granted to said company, "for the purpose of aiding in the construction of said railroad and telegraph line, * * * every alternate section of public land * * * to the amount of five alternate sections per mile on each side of said railroad."

Section 4 provided—

"That whenever said company shall have completed 40 consecutive miles of any portion of said railroad and telegraph line ready for service * * * the President of the United States shall appoint three commissioners to examine the same and report to him in relation thereto."

Section 5 provided for the issue of bonds of the United States to the amount of $16,000 per mile upon "the completion and equipment of 40 consecutive miles of said railroad and telegraph."

Section 6 made the grants referred to conditional upon the company's keeping "said railroad and telegraph line in repair and use," and provides that they "shall at all times transmit dispatches over said telegraph line, and transport mails," etc., for the Government whenever required to do so by any Department thereof, and gave the Government the preference in the use of the railroad and telegraph.

The same provisions are made to apply to the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, and all other lines of railroad and telegraph authorized by the said act of July 1, 1862.

Section 12 of the act provides that—

"The whole line of said railroad and branches and telegraph shall be operated and used for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and Government are concerned, as one connected, continuous line."

Section 15 provides—

"That any other railroad company now incorporated, or hereafter to be incorporated, shall have the right to connect their road with the road and branches provided for by this act, at such places and upon such just and equitable terms as the President of the United States may prescribe."

And section 19 provides—

"That the several railroad companies herein named are authorized to enter into an arrangement with the Pacific Telegraph Company, the Overland Telegraph Company, and the California State Telegraph Company, so that the present line of telegraph between the Missouri River and San Francisco may be moved upon or along the line of said railroad and branches as fast as said roads and branches are built; and if said arrangement be entered into, and the transfer of said telegraph line be made in accordance therewith to the line of said railroad and branches, such transfer shall, for all purposes of this act, be held and considered a fulfillment on the part of said railroad companies of the provisions of this act in regard to the construction of said line of telegraph. And, in case of disagreement, said telegraph companies are authorized to remove their line of telegraph along and upon the line of railroad herein contemplated without prejudice to the rights of said railroad companies named herein."

The act of July 2, 1864, amendatory of the act of July 1, 1862, provides (section 6) for the inspection and reception by the Government of the railroad and telegraph line together.

Section 15 of this act provides—

"That the several railroad companies authorized to construct the aforesaid roads are hereby required to operate and use said roads and telegraph for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and the Government are concerned, as one continuous line; and in such operation and use to afford and secure to each equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of the road or business of any or either of said companies, or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others, and it shall not be lawful for the proprietors of any line of telegraph authorized by this act, or the act amended by this act, to refuse or fail to convey for all persons requiring the transmission of news and messages of like character, on pain of forfeiting to the person injured for each offense the sum of $100 and such other damage as he may have suffered on account of said refusal or failure, to be sued for and recovered in any court of the United States, or of any State or Territory of competent jurisdiction."

This act of July 2, 1864, also authorizes the issue of a first mortgage by the railroad companies, and increases the grants of land in certain cases.

The last section of this act (section 22) provides "that Congress may, at any time, alter, amend, or repeal this act."

It is important to note in this connection that this amendatory act of July 2, 1864, including section 22, here quoted, was passed before anything had been done or any rights had accrued under the act of July 1, 1862.

The Northern Pacific Railroad act, also passed July 2, 1864, provides for the construction of a continuous railroad and telegraph line.

So that everywhere in the land-grant acts railroads and telegraphs are united, and the obligations that attach to one attach to the other.

The act of July 24, 1866, authorizes any telegraph company now organized, or which may hereafter be organized, under the laws to construct telegraph lines over any portion of the public domain along military or post roads of the United States, to cross navigable streams, etc.

Section 2 of this act gives the Government priority of use and allows the Postmaster-General to fix rates.

Section 4 provides that before any telegraph company shall exercise any of the powers or privileges offered by this act, such company shall file its written acceptance with the Postmaster-General of the restrictions and obligations required by the act.

The act of June 23, 1879, authorizes all railroad companies to engage in telegraph business.

Section 4 of the Idaho telegraph act (July 2, 1864) contains substantially the same provisions as section 19 of the act of July 1, 1862, and includes the United States Telegraph Company, not embraced in the section referred to.

By reference, at this point, to the first act of June 16, 1860, authorizing the construction of a telegraph line between the Atlantic and Pacific States, the removal of which line to the line of the railroads is provided for in section 19 of the act of July 1, 1862, quoted above, it will be seen that the conditions of the grant in the act of 1860 were that "messages received from any telegraph lines connecting with this line at either of its termini shall be impartially transmitted in the order of their reception," but reserving to the Government priority of use.

Nothing in the act authorizing the removal of the telegraph line as originally constructed to the line of the railroad changes in this respect the terms of the original grant, although by said section 19, in case of such an arrangement being entered into for the transfer of the telegraph line to the railroad, that should be deemed a fulfillment on the part of said railroad companies of the provisions of the act in regard to the construction of a line of telegraph.

So that when the Overland Telegraph line had been removed to the line of the railroad as it was built, it was there in place of a telegraph the railroad company otherwise would have been obliged to construct; it was there in place of such a line, and to do the work of such a line, and to do it in all respects the same as it would have to be done by a line built by the railroad company. Hence the obligation of the railroad company, in the opinion of your committee, to keep in operation a telegraph line that shall fulfill the requirements of the provisions of the law in relation to telegraphs, is in no wise lessened by any arrangement that may have been entered into for the transfer of the wires previously constructed on the overland route.

OBLIGATIONS OF THE RAILROAD COMPANIES UNDER THE ACTS ABOVE CITED.

The several acts hereinbefore cited embrace all the provisions of law which enter into and constitute the contracts between the United States and the railroad companies, and these provisions are binding both upon the Government and the railroad companies. (See United States vs. Union Pacific Railroad Company, 91 U. S., 72; Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S., 700, 718; Union Pacific Railroad Company vs. United States, 104 U. S., 662; United States vs. The Central Pacific Railroad Company, U. S. Supreme Ct., decided May 10, 1886.)

Nor is it necessary to raise the question of the right of Congress to alter any of these provisions, or to "alter, amend, or repeal," as provided in the act of July 2, 1864. For it is believed by your committee that it is not a change in the provisions of the law under which the Pacific roads were constructed that is now called for, but an enforcement of the obligations assumed by said railway companies under the terms of the acts accepted and acted upon by them.

It will not, however, be deemed out of place to refer here to the decisions of the Supreme Court touching the right to alter or amend charters.

In the Sinking Fund cases it is held that while the power to alter, amend, or repeal a charter "can not be used to take away property already acquired under the operation of the charter, or to deprive the corporation of the fruits actually reduced to possession of contracts lawfully made" (Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S., 720), still, as was said by Mr. Justice Clifford in Miller vs. The State, 15 Wall., 498, "it may safely be affirmed that the reserved power may be exercised, and to almost any extent, to carry into effect the original purposes of the grant, or to secure the due administration of its affairs, so as to protect the rights of stockholders and of creditors, and for the proper distribution of its assets;" and again, in Holyoke Company vs. Lyman, 15 Wall., 519, "to protect the rights of the public and of the corporators, or to promote the due administration of the affairs of the company."

Mr. Justice Field, in Tomlinson vs. Jessup, 15 Wall., 459, says: "The reservation affects the entire relation between the State and the corporation, and places under legislative control all rights, privileges, and immunities derived by its charter directly from the State."

But as is said in Shields vs. Ohio, 95 U. S., 324: "The alterations must be reasonable; they must be made in good faith, and be consistent with the object and scope of the act of incorporation. Sheer oppression and wrong can not be inflicted under the guise of amendment or alteration."

SUMMARY.

From an inspection of the several acts relating to the construction of the several railroads and telegraphs, it will be seen—

First. That in all cases the grants of land and of bonds, where bonds were granted, were to aid in the constuction of a railroad and telegraph line, the two being inseparably connected in all the grants. The grant was for a telegraph line as well as for a railroad, and the obligation to construct, maintain, and operate a telegraph line rests upon precisely the same foundations and subject to the same conditions, and is as binding as the obligation to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad.

Second. The railroads were required to be operated as continuous lines for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation as far as the Government and the public are concerned, and in such operation and use to afford and secure to each equal advantages and facilities and without discrimination. These provisions apply as explicitly to the construction, maintenance, and operation of a telegraph line as to the railroads. Nor can a railroad company divest itself of this obligation by contract with another company. It is an obligation the railroad company can not abandon.

PUBLIC AID CAN BE GRANTED ONLY FOR PUBLIC USE.

The grant of public lands and of the public credit in aid of the construction of the railroads and telegraph lines in question, even without express provisions, implies a public use of them. Public aid can not be legitimately extended to purely private enterprises. (See Loan Associations vs. Topeka, 22 Wall., 655; Lake Superior and Mississippi Railroad Company vs. United States, 93 U. S., 442-457; 1 Rorer on Railroads, 64.)

Public aid not only implies public use, but imposes duties and responsibilities in the nature of trusts. Nor is this responsibility or obligation altered because public interests and private rights become united. Public use and private gain in such cases are held to be not inconsistent. (See Sinking Fund cases, 99 U. S., 700, 719; Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company vs. Iowa, 94 U. S., 155.)

The principle that governs the public use of any right or privilege is that it shall be equal for all and without discrimination. Equal privileges and equal facilities are fundamental conditions in the public use of anything.

VESTED RIGHTS.

The question of the disturbance of vested rights does not, therefore, in the opinion of your committee, arise here. It is not proposed to disturb vested rights. Surely no one would claim that in order to preserve vested rights discrimination in the use of these railroads and telegraph lines became necessary.

PUBLIC USE WITHOUT DISCRIMINATION.

The public uses of the land-grant railroads and telegraph lines are, (1) Government service on the terms and conditions provided in the grants; (2) use by all the people equally and without discrimination, upon the payment of reasonable compensation, under the circumstances existing, for the service performed. In order that equal facilities may be afforded to all and discrimination prevented, it becomes necessary not only that individuals should be granted equal facilities, but that equal rights and facilities should be extended to connecting railways and connecting telegraph lines. If one of the Pacific lines of railroad should enter into a contract with some single line of road from the terminus of the Pacific road to the Atlantic seaboard, and give special and exclusive rates to points on the line of such connecting road, or to the seaboard by such road, then only those living on or doing business along the line of such connecting road would have the benefit of equal rates across the continent.

People living on other lines of road, over which alone they could reach the Pacific roads, would not have, under such circumstances, equal facilities, equal privileges, and equal rates with those living upon the more favored line of road. Precisely the same condition exists when only those in reach of a favored telegraph line, or system, can enjoy the privilege of given rates to the Pacific coast. If, for instance, those living or doing business within reach of the Western Union telegraph lines can have given rates extended to them to points on the Pacific roads, or on the Pacific coast, while those in reach only of another line of telegraph must pay the same rate from Omaha, or any other terminus of a land-grant telegraph line that another pays from New York or some interior point, and must pay for the message to Omaha in addition, then he does not enjoy the same rights and privileges that are extended to those using the Western Union telegraph lines to reach the lines over the Pacific roads. Therefore, in order that equal facilities and equal terms over the land-grant wires may be extended to all, it is necessary that equal rights, facilities, and terms shall be granted to all connecting telegraph lines. Certainly it would not be permitted to one of the land-grant roads to make a special contract with some single connecting railroad, and to points on that road or beyond make one rate and to other roads make different rates. Nor would a land-grant company be permitted to receive business at the eastern terminus of its road from one connecting road to be carried thence to points on such land-grant road, or to the Pacific coast, at one rate, and exact other conditions and higher rates for freight received from other connecting lines of road.

Conceding that a subsidized road is as much under obligation to maintain and operate a telegraph line for the equal benefit of all as a railroad line, then it follows that it is bound to receive telegraphic business offered to it at its terminus by one telegraph company on precisely the same terms and conditions as its receives business offered to it by any other telegraph company.

From what has gone before, and the several acts referred to, and the evidence presented to your committee, it seems clear that the obligation to maintain and operate telegraph lines under the grants accepted by such railroad companies can no more be questioned than the obligation to maintain and operate railroads. This obligation can not be better stated than in the language of Messrs. Sidney Bartlett and John F. Dillon, then counsel for the Union Pacific Railway Company. They say, in the opinion given by them:

"The foregoing and numerous other provisions (referring to the statutes) show that Congress placed the telegraph line in respect to its construction, maintenance, and use by the Pacific companies upon precisely the same footing as the line of railroads. Both were integral parts of the great end in view. In respect of both, the duties of the companies are, so to phrase it, personal; and no authority is given to devolve them on others.

"On well-known principles of law, such franchises are inalienable without express legislative authority. Not only is there an absence of such authority, but its existence is plainly negatived by the nature of the rights reserved to the Government, and the special duties toward the Government and the public enjoined on the companies which they alone can perform. Thus the companies are required to transmit messages for the Government, and the earnings of the telegraph line from this source are to be applied in payment of the Government bonds.

"So the several Pacific companies are required to operate and use their respective roads and telegraph as one continuous line, without discrimination in favor of or against any of the companies, and it is made unlawful for them, if they are the proprietors of a telegraph line, to refuse or fail to transmit news or messages for all persons.

"It results, therefore, that no valid lease or other contract can be made by the companies to surrender or to devolve on others their duty to maintain, control, and manage their respective lines of telegraph. They can no more do this in respect of their lines of telegraph than they can in respect of their lines of railway. Any lease or contract to that effect is, in the language of the law, ultra vires.

"In view of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question presented on behalf of the American Union Telegraph Company is obvious.

"Assuming that under their charter the Kansas Pacific and Union Pacific Railroad Companies originally constructed and thereby became proprietors of lines of telegraph, it is the duty of their successors, the present Union Pacific Railway Company, to maintain and use them. It can not refuse to receive and transmit messages from and to the American Union Telegraph Company, or any other company or persons, without violating its duty and incurring civil and criminal penalties.

"Any proprietor of a line of telegraph under the authority of the Pacific acts (if there be any such besides the railway companies) is likewise bound to receive and transmit messages for the public or for any other company under the penalties prescribed by Congress."

This view is sustained by the opinion of Mr. Justice Miller, confirming the opinion of Judge McCrary, in the case of The Western Union Telegraph Company vs. The Union Pacific Railway Company et al., in which this language is used:

"That on the face of the acts of Congress of 1862 and 1864, called 'the Pacific railroad acts,' the obligation of building a telegraph line along its right of way, and of operating that line or having it operated under the control of the railroad company, was an obligation which the railroad company could not abandon."

WHAT IS THE PRESENT CONDITION OF TELEGRAPH LINES ALONG LAND-GRANT ROADS?

Do the land-grant roads now maintain and operate telegraph lines as they operate their roads, affording equal facilities to the public in general, or do they not? The evidence presented to the committee seems conclusive that they do not; but, on the other hand, that they have entered into contracts with the Western Union Telegraph Company by which said company does most of the business for the roads themselves, and practically the entire commercial business done over the wires stretched along the land-grant roads. Copies of these contracts will be found in the appendix to this report. These contracts are exclusive in their nature, and practically place the entire control of the business between the Atlantic and Pacific States in the hands of one telegraph company.

In the agreement between the Union Pacific Railway Company and the Western Union Telegraph Company are the following provisions:

"It is mutually understood and agreed that all of the telegraph lines and wires covered by this contract, whether belonging to or used by the telegraph company or the railway company, for the purposes of this contract, as herein provided, shall form part of the general system of the telegraph company."

Again:

"The railway company further agrees that its employés shall transmit over the lines owned, controlled, or operated by the parties hereto, all commercial telegraph business offered at the railway company's offices, and shall account to the telegraph company exclusively for all of such business, and the receipts thereon, as provided herein.

"No employé of the railway company shall, while in its service, be employed by or have any connection with any other telegraph company than the telegraph company party hereto, and the telegraph company shall have the exclusive right to the occupancy of and connection with the railway company's depots or station-houses for commercial or public telegraph purposes as against any other telegraph company."

The right of the Western Union Telegraph Company, or any other telegraph company, to construct and operate telegraph lines from the Missouri River to the Pacific, and to erect poles on the right of way of the railroad companies, upon terms to be agreed upon between the parties, does not arise in the case under consideration, which is simply and solely whether or not the land-grant railroads do maintain and operate for the use of the Government and the public, with equal facilities and rights to all, telegraph lines as required in the several charters and grants constituting contracts between said companies and the United States. Your committee finds that telegraph lines are not maintained and operated as the railroads are, nor, in the opinion of your committee, as was contemplated in the acts making the grants; but, on the other hand, that some or all of said companies or their successors have, in violation of the true intent and meaning of said acts, transferred to the Western Union Telegraph Company the use and operation, in whole or in part, of the telegraph lines properly belonging to them, and the exercise of their telegraph franchises, thereby impairing the lien of the United States on the property of said companies, as well as preventing the public use of such telegraph lines.

CONCLUSION.

Undoubtedly citizens or companies or corporations have a right to seek a remedy in the courts; but the question arises whether it is not the duty of the Government to see that the terms and conditions upon which the grants of public aid were made are fulfilled. These railroad corporations owe their existence and all their rights to these statutes and these grants of public aid, and shall the citizen be left with no other remedy than at his own expense to enforce his rights through the Federal courts? Or shall the Government, which has created the corporations, granted the public aid, and imposed upon them obligations, take it upon itself to see that the conditions of the grants are complied with and the obligations imposed by the several acts fulfilled? In the opinion of your committee, this is a duty which rests with the Government.

The minority report is as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The undersigned, a minority of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, dissent from the recommendations of the majority of said committee on House bill No. 1426 and amendments thereto.

They are thoroughly in sympathy with the avowed purpose of the majority of the committee, to wit, the prevention of any unjust discrimination by any of the subsidized land-grant railroads, incorporated under act of July 1, 1862, and acts amendatory thereof, against any person or corporations desiring to use the telegraph facilities of said railroad companies, but they differ from the majority of said committee in that they believe that the legislation proposed would not be wise, if it were competent, and that the bill, with its amendments, is unconstitutional, as seeking to interfere with vested rights.

The first section provides that the subsidized railroad companies shall "forthwith and henceforward" operate through their "own officers and employés" their telegraph lines, and "exercise by themselves alone" all telegraph franchises of which they are seized.

The undersigned submit that the attempt by the United States, the largest creditor of each of said subsidized roads, to impose conditions upon the debtor railroads which must necessarily increase the expenditures and lessen the profits of said roads is unwise treatment of those debtor companies, if it is conceded that under the existing facts the power exists to make and enforce such a law.

It must be borne in mind that the telegraph lines of said railroads are not the exclusive lines along the said roads, but that the Western Union Telegraph Company owns and operates a line parallel with and on the right of way of the railroad companies, under an arrangement whereby the expenses are borne jointly by the railroad companies and the Western Union Company. This arrangement has been very beneficial at least in a financial point of view, bringing the net receipts of the Union Pacific from $38,000 to $110,000 yearly, while the charges for telegraphic service to the public have been materially reduced in the time.

The Western Union Company has a network of feeders extending over the entire country, now bringing business and revenue to the lines of the subsidized railroads, in the profits of which they mutually share.

If Congress compels this arrangement to be broken, the subsidized roads will be forced to hire and maintain, at a greatly increased expense, a full retinue of operators and agents, without the possibility of sharing in any business originating off their own lines, while subjected to active competition for the pittance of business which is done at way points along the line. Thus, upon probably less than 10 per cent. of the business in which they now share, their expenses would probably be quadrupled, and the present profit of $110,000 per annum might readily become a loss of a still larger amount.

In the view of the minority, therefore, the legislation under consideration, if competent, is unwise.

Upon the question of the competency of this legislation, the minority will content themselves with the brief and terse statement of the propositions on which is predicated their opinion that Congress can not make and enforce a law embracing the provisions of this bill, because the same are not constitutional.

Prior to the act of July 1, 1862, there was a line of overland telegraph, built and operated under the provisions of the act of June 16, 1860, which was for ten years a subsidized line. Section 19 of act of July 1, 1862, expressly gave the railroad companies the right to enter into an arrangement with the overland telegraph companies, so that the overland line might be moved upon the right of way of the railroad companies, and such removal, if made, should "be held and considered a fulfillment on the part of said railroad companies of the provisions of this act in regard to the construction of said line of telegraph."

Here, then, was express authority at law for the removal and consolidation, even, of these lines of telegraph. The lines of the overland telegraph were in point of fact removed, and the Western Union Company became the de facto successor of the old overland company. The question of whether the Western Union was such successor de jure may probably not be held as res adjudicata, yet the opinion of Mr. Justice Miller in Western Union vs. Union Pacific (circuit court of United States, district of Kansas, October, 1880) holds that prima facie it is such successor; that section 19, act of July 1, 1862, was in full force in 1881, and is in full force and unrepealed to-day.

On July 1, 1881, there being at that time full express authority to act, the subsidized roads and the Western Union made an arrangement for a joint operation of all the wires and lines of both of them over their common right of way. The arrangement was and is beneficial to each. It was a contract proper and lawful to be made at common law unaided by statute. It had statutory authority in addition. Under that contract, lawfully made, reciprocal vested rights inured. The Western Union built, at its own expense, additional lines for the railroad. It gave, and gives, the use of its lines and employés for railroad business, and in the opinion of this minority there is no more right or power in the United States Government to annul such contracts by legislation than there is to legislate the title of a granger's farm into a base-ball ground without the farmer's consent.

This principle has been constantly announced by the United States Supreme Court from the time of the famous Dartmouth College case (Woodward vs. Dartmouth College, 4 Wheaton) till now. (See in support of these views, 8 Wheaton, 17; 1 Howard, 311; 6 Howard, 318; 15 Howard, 305; 4 Wall., 550; 96 U. S., 604; 105 U. S., 603; 108 U. S., 64; 95 U. S., 824; 106 U. S., 219; 99 U. S., 700; 110 U. S., 668.)

And it is no answer that there is reserved the right to alter, amend, or repeal the law of 1863.

These rights do not give a right to destroy or annul contracts lawfully made, nor to confiscate or make worthless property acquired or money invested while the law remained in its full force.

The following are copies of the agreements between the Western Union Telegraph Company and the Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railroad Companies:

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY AND THE WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

This agreement, made and entered into on this the 14th day of December, 1877, between the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, the Sacramento and Placerville Railroad Company, the Northern Railway Company, the San Pablo and Tulare Railroad Company, the Los Angeles and San Diego Railroad Company, the Amador Branch Railroad Company, the Berkeley Branch Railroad Company, and the Los Angeles and Independence Railroad Company, parties of the first part, and the Western Union Telegraph Company, party of the second part, witnesseth:

That whereas said parties of the first part are severally railroad corporations organized under the laws of the State of California, and do severally own or hold under lease and operate certain several railroads, to each of which is attached a telegraph line, which is by them severally operated and used for the purpose of transmitting dispatches in relation to railroad and commercial business and to domestic and social matters; and

Whereas said party of the second part is a telegraph corporation, organized under the laws of the State of New York, and owns and operates certain telegraph lines along the several railroad lines of said parties of the first part, and is also engaged in operating other telegraph lines throughout the United States for the purpose of transmitting dispatches in relation to commercial business and to domestic and social matters; and

Whereas it is believed by the several parties hereto that it will be to their mutual benefit and advantage to unite their several telegraph lines and operate the same under one management and as one system:

Now, therefore, to that end, said parties of the first and second part do promise, covenant, and agree each to and with the other as follows:

I.

Said parties of the first part, and each thereof, agree to transmit all the telegraph business of said party of the second part, at each and every of their several respective railroad stations where one operator shall be competent and able to perform all the duties of railroad agent and telegraph operator, but if at any time it shall be or come to pass that at any of said railroad stations the telegraph business of said party of the second part shall be so great as to require an assistant operator in order that the same may be promptly transacted, such assistant operator shall be furnished by said party of the second part at its own proper cost and charges; and if it shall be or come to pass at any time that the railroad business at any such railroad station shall be so great as to require an assistant in order that the same may be promptly transacted, such assistant shall be furnished by the party of the first part to which such railroad station shall belong, at its own proper cost and charges: Provided, and it is expressly agreed and understood, that neither of said parties of the first part shall be required to furnish a telegraph operator at any of its stations where it does not require, for its own business, telegraph connection.

II.

Said party of the second part agrees to furnish, at its own proper cost and charges, to each of said parties of the first part, such telegraph wires for its exclusive use as it may require for the prompt transaction of its railroad telegraph business: Provided, That in all cases where one wire shall be sufficient for the uses of both parties, such wire shall be for the joint use of both parties: And provided further, That in all cases where only one wire is used, the railroad telegraph business shall have preference over the business of said party of the second part: Provided further, and it is expressly agreed and understood, that all wires used exclusively for railroad business, as aforesaid, shall be worked in such circuits as the railroad company concerned therein and using the same shall require.

III.

It is mutually agreed and understood that if at any time it shall be or come to pass that, from any cause, communication over any wire or wires, in the exclusive use, as aforesaid, of either of the parties of said first part shall be interrupted, such party of the first part shall have the use of any other wire or wires on the same route for the transaction of its business, until such interruption shall cease, or the cause thereof be removed; and in case any interruption in communication shall occur on any wire or wires in use by said party of the second part for the transaction of its business, then said party of the second part shall have the right to use, in the transaction of its business, any wire or wires, on the same route, set apart as aforesaid for the exclusive use of the party of the first part concerned in such route, until such interruption shall cease, or the cause thereof be removed: Provided, and it is expressly agreed and understood, that in all cases, in this subdivision provided for, the business of the party of the first part concerned in any such interruption or interruptions shall have preference over the business of the party of the second part during the continuance of such interruption or interruptions.

IV.

Each of the parties of the first part agrees that in case it shall extend its line of railroad or railroads, or branches, beyond their present termini, or shall construct additional lines or branches during the time this contract shall remain in force, it will also construct a line of telegraph along such extensions, or additional lines or branches, at its own proper cost and charges, and such new telegraph lines shall be deemed to be included in this agreement, and shall be held, used, and operated under and pursuant to the terms and conditions thereof.

V.

It is also mutually agreed and understood that in case the said party of the second part, at any time, shall require for the transaction of its business an additional wire or wires upon any route upon which any or either of the parties of the first part now own or control, or, as provided in the last preceding subdivision of this agreement, shall hereafter erect a line of telegraph poles, such additional wire or wires may be strung upon or attached to such poles: Provided, Such poles shall be of sufficient strength to bear the additional weight or strain of such wire or wires, and not otherwise. And in case such poles are not of sufficient strength as aforesaid, said party of the second part shall have the right to erect additional poles, but all such additional poles shall be erected at the sole and separate cost and charge of said party of the second part.

VI.

It is also mutually agreed and understood that the telegraph lines of each and every of the parties of the first part now in existence, and such as may hereafter be erected, as provided in the fourth subdivision of this agreement, shall be kept and maintained in good order and repair by said party of the second part during the continuance of this agreement: Provided, That if it shall appear upon inspection that any of said lines, now in existence, shall require new poles at the time this agreement is to take effect, as provided in the seventeenth subdivision thereof, such new poles shall be furnished and erected by the party of the first part, owning such line, at its own proper cost and charges.

VII.

Said parties of the first part agree to jointly appoint and employ, at their separate cost and charge, some suitable and competent person, to be approved by said party of the second part, whose duty it shall be to supervise all telegraph operators employed by said parties of the first part, or either thereof, and, generally, to supervise and manage the telegraph business of the said parties of the first part, and each and every thereof.

VIII.

It is also mutually agreed and understood that the superintendent provided for in the last preceding subdivision of this agreement, and also all telegraphic operators in the employ of said parties of the first part, or either thereof, during the continuance of this agreement, shall be subject to and governed by all the rules and regulations of said party of the second part which are now in force, or may hereafter be adopted and promulgated, while engaged in the transaction of the business of said party of the second part.

IX.

Said party of the second part agrees to furnish all books, blanks, batteries, instruments, adjuncts, and supplies which shall be necessary or convenient for the transaction of the business of all parties to this agreement, as therein provided, at its own proper cost and charges. It also agrees to employ and furnish a messenger for the delivery of messages at all railroad stations belonging to either or any of said parties of the first part where there shall be, on an average, a daily delivery of ten paid messages. It also agrees to transmit on all lines operated by it west of Omaha, Nebr., free of charge, all messages offered by or addressed to either of said parties of the first part, or the officers or counsel of either of said parties of the first part, in relation to the railroad or other business of either of said parties of the first part, and also all messages offered by or addressed to said officers and counsel, and members of their families, which shall relate to their personal affairs. It also agrees to transmit, free of charge, over all telegraph lines owned, controlled, or operated by it, east of said Omaha, all messages on the business of either of said parties of the first part, offered by or addressed to them or either of them, to and from any and all points on said lines at which said party of the second part does now or shall hereafter maintain telegraphic stations: Provided, Said last-named messages shall be transmitted under franks or passes, which said party of the second part agrees to issue and deliver to the officers, agents, and employés of the several parties of the first part, upon application therefor by their general superintendents or directors.

X.

Said party of the second part also agrees to transmit, free of charge, over all telegraph lines operated by it west of Ogden, Utah, from and to all points on said lines at which it shall maintain telegraphic stations, all messages offered by or addressed to Wells, Fargo & Co., or its officers and agents, during the continuance of this agreement, which relate to the business of any kind of said Wells, Fargo & Co.: Provided, and the foregoing promise is made upon the express condition that said Wells, Fargo & Co., at all times during the continuance of this agreement, shall transport, free of charge, over all its express routes west of Ogden, Utah, all small packages and money parcels offered by or addressed to said party of the second part, or its officers and agents, in the course of its business.

Said party of the second part also agrees to transmit, free of charge, over all telegraph lines operated west of Ogden, Utah, from and to all points on said lines at which it shall maintain telegraphic stations, all messages offered by or addressed to a certain corporation known as the Western Development Company, or its officers and agents, during the continuance of this agreement, which relate in any way to the business of said corporation.

XI.

Said parties of the first part, and each thereof, agree to cause their section men, so far as may be compatible with a faithful discharge of their duties as section men, to examine, look after, note, and report to the party of the second part, its officers and agents, the condition of all of said telegraph lines within their respective districts, and in case of any break, difficulty, or interruption, to repair temporarily or remove the same whenever the same can be done by them without neglecting their duties as such section men.

XII.

Said parties of the first part, and each thereof, also agree to transport, free of charge, over their respective railroads, all telegraphic supplies offered by said party of the second part or its officers and agents, and all materials required during the continuance of this agreement for the purpose of repairing and maintaining the telegraph lines of all parties hereto in as good order and condition as the same may be when this agreement takes effect: Provided, That neither of said parties shall be required to transport, free of charge, any materials intended to be used in the construction of new telegraph lines or in the reconstruction of old lines. They and each of them also agree to furnish, on their respective roads, all needful facilities for the transportation of men and materials that may be required for the repair of any of the telegraph lines of any of the parties hereto; and in case said party of the second part shall require an additional wire or wires to be strung upon the poles of any of said parties of the first part, as provided in the fifth subdivision of this agreement, then the parties of the first part shall transport, free of charge, over their respective roads, all men and material required for that purpose.

Said parties of the first part, and each thereof, also agree to furnish free transportation over their roads for all servants and employés of said party of the second part while traveling on the business of said party of the second part; also to furnish free transportation at all times to the officers of said party of the second part.

XIII.

It is also mutually agreed and understood that neither of said parties of the first part shall be liable to any of the officers, employés, or agents of said party of the second part in damages for any injuries which they may sustain while traveling free as provided in the last preceding subdivision of this agreement, whether such injuries be sustained or not through the negligence of said parties of the first part, or either thereof, or of their or either of their servants or agents; and to that end the said parties of the first part, and each thereof, may require said party of the second part to procure from the proper officers of said parties of the first part passes for its officers and servants, with the conditions aforesaid printed thereon, before they shall be allowed to enjoy the benefits stipulated in this subdivision.

XIV.

It is also mutually agreed and understood that the contracts heretofore made and now existing between said party of the second part and the Stockton and Copperopolis Railroad Company, and between said party of the second part and the California Pacific Railroad Company, in relation to telegraphic matters (of both of which roads said Central Pacific Railroad Company has become the lessee), shall be and remain suspended during the continuance of this agreement, so far as their provisions in any manner conflict with the provisions of this agreement, and this agreement shall take their places.

XV.

Said party of the second part agrees to pay to said parties of the first part, at the office of said Central Pacific Railroad Company, in the city and county of San Francisco, or at its office in the city of New York, as said parties of the first part may elect, in quarterly installments, on the first days of April, July, October, and January of each year during the continuance of this agreement, the following sums of money in United States gold coin, to wit: $80,000 for the first year, $85,000 for the second year, $90,000 for the third year, $95,000 for the fourth year, and $100,000 for each year thereafter during the continuance of this agreement, said sums to be divided between said parties of the first part upon such fair and equitable basis as they may hereafter agree upon.

XVI.

This agreement shall be obligatory and binding upon the successors and assigns of all the parties hereto.

XVII.

This agreement shall take effect on the 1st day of January, 1878, and shall continue in force until the 1st day of January, 1883, and thereafter until terminated by either party by giving the other twelve months' previous notice in writing.

XVIII.

Said party of the second part also agrees to indemnify and save harmless the said parties of the first part, and each thereof, against all actions, claims, and demands that may be brought or made against them, or either of them, by the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company, for or on account of certain contracts in relation to telegraphic matters heretofore made and still existing between said telegraph company and said Central Pacific Railroad Company, bearing date April 22, 1870.

In testimony whereof said parties have severally, pursuant to orders of their respective boards of directors, caused these presents to be signed and countersigned by their respective presidents and secretaries, and their respective corporate seals to be hereunto affixed, on the day and year first above written.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNION PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY AND THE WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

This agreement, made and entered into this 1st day of July, 1881, by and between the Western Union Telegraph Company and the Union Pacific Railway Company, hereinafter respectively designated, for convenience, as "the telegraph company" and "the railway company," witnesseth:

That whereas the Western Union Telegraph Company has acquired all of the property, rights, and franchises of the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company, and is also in possession of and operates a separate line of poles and wires along said main line of road of the railway company between Omaha and Ogden; and

Whereas the parties hereto are now and for some time past have been operating lines of telegraph along the various railroads of the railway company, under sundry contracts referred to in Exhibit A, hereto attached, made between the said railway company or companies formerly in possession of lines of railroad now controlled by or forming part of the lines of railroad of said railway company, and the Western Union Telegraph Company, or other telegraph companies which have since, by purchase or consolidation, become merged into the said Western Union Telegraph Company, a schedule of said contracts being hereunto annexed and marked Exhibit A; and

Whereas disputes have arisen and exist between the parties hereto, and various suits are pending between them; and

Whereas it is desirable to terminate, as far as practicable, existing disputes and litigations, and to embody in one new contract the agreement of the parties, which new contract is in lieu of said existing contracts referred to in Exhibit A, to the extent and for the purposes hereinafter defined:

Now, therefore, for the purpose of providing telegraphic facilities for the parties hereto, and of maintaining and operating the lines of telegraph along the railway company's railroads in the most economical manner in the interest of both parties and for the purpose of fulfilling the obligations of the railway company to the Government of the United States and the public in respect to the telegraphic service required by the act of Congress July 1, 1862, and the amendments thereto, and in consideration of the covenants and agreements herein contained, the parties hereto have mutually agreed as follows:

First. Each party hereto hereby releases and discharges the other from all claims, debts, liabilities, and demands of whatever nature, arising and accruing under any and all said contracts and agreements up to this date or otherwise, between the parties hereto or their respective predecessors, and all pending suits are to be dismissed without prejudice, and each party to pay its own costs.

Second. In order to define as nearly as practicable the exact ownership of the telegraph property as it now exists on and along the various railroads and in the various offices of the railway company, a full and complete inventory shall, immediately upon the execution of this agreement, be made out by two appraisers, one to be appointed by each party hereto; and said inventory shall show in detail all of the telegraph property belonging to each party hereto, separately; and also all of the telegraph property owned jointly by the parties hereto, and all of the telegraph property the ownership of which is now disputed; and after said inventory shall have been agreed upon between and signed by the parties hereto, a copy of said inventory, duly certified by said appraisers, shall be filed with each party's copy of this agreement.

Upon the termination of this agreement as hereinafter provided, in case the parties hereto shall not be able to agree upon a division of or other settlement for the property, the ownership of which is in dispute, then the final disposition of such property shall be referred to and decided by arbitrators chosen in the manner hereinafter provided.

Third. The railway company, so far as it legally may, hereby grants and agrees to assure to the telegraph company the exclusive right of way on, along, upon, and under the line, lands, and bridges of the railway company and any extensions and branches thereof, for the construction, maintenance, operation, and use of lines of poles and wires, or either of them, or underground, or other system of communication for commercial or public uses or business, with the right to put up from time to time or cause to be put up or constructed, under the provisions of this agreement, such additional wires on its own or the railway company's poles or such additional lines of poles and wires or either, as well on its bridges as on its right of way, or to construct such underground lines as the telegraph company may deem expedient, doing as little damage and causing as little inconvenience to the railway company as is practicable; and the railway company will not transport men or material for the construction or operation of a line of poles and wire or wires or underground or other system of communication in competition with the lines of the telegraph company party hereto, except at and for the railway company's regular local rates, nor will it furnish for any competing line any facilities or assistance that it may lawfully withhold, nor stop its trains, nor distribute material therefor at other than regular stations.

Provided always, that in protecting and defending the exclusive rights given by this contract, the telegraph company may use and proceed in the name of the railway company, but shall indemnify and save harmless the railway company from any and all damages, costs, charges, and legal expenses incurred therein or thereby.

Fourth. It is mutually understood and agreed that all of the telegraph lines and wires covered by this contract, whether belonging to or used by the telegraph company or the railway company, for the purposes of this contract as herein provided, shall form part of the general system of the telegraph company.

The railway company further agrees that its employés shall transmit over the lines owned, controlled, or operated by the parties hereto, all commercial telegraph business offered at the railway company's offices, and shall account to the telegraph company exclusively for all of such business and the receipts thereon, as provided herein.

No employé of the railway company shall, while in its service, be employed by or have any connection with any other telegraph company than the telegraph company party hereto, and the telegraph company shall have the exclusive right to the occupancy of and connection with the railway company's depots or station-houses for commercial or public telegraph purposes as against any other telegraph company.

Provided, that if any person or party, or any officer of the Government, tender a message for transmission over the railway telegraph lines between Council Bluffs and Ogden at any railway telegraph station between those points and require that the service be rendered by the railway company, the operator to whom the same is tendered shall receive and forward the same accordingly at rates to be fixed by the railway company to the point of destination if not beyond its own lines.

If the destination of said message be beyond said railway company's lines, the telegraph company when receiving the same at the point at which it leaves the said railway lines may demand the prepayment of tolls for the service of forwarding the message on its own lines.

Provided, however, that the local receipts of the railway company on such messages shall be divided between the parties hereto in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as provided in the tenth clause of this agreement.

Fifth. The railway company agrees to furnish at its own expense all the labor except a foreman for the maintenance, repair, and renewal or reconstruction of the existing lines and wires along all of the railway company's railroads, and for the construction, maintenance, repair, and renewal or reconstruction of such additional wires or lines of poles and wires, as may be required for commercial or railroad telegraph purposes along said railroads and along future branches and extensions thereof, and along new railroads constructed or acquired by the railway company, except as modified in the sixth clause hereof.

The telegraph company shall furnish a foreman skilled in the work of telegraph construction, who shall have charge of the construction and reconstruction of the lines and wires and the direction of the labor furnished by the railway company for such purposes, said foreman to be subordinate to the superintendent mentioned in article twelfth of this agreement.

Sixth. Each party hereto shall pay one-half of the entire cost of all poles, wire, insulators, tools, and other material used for the maintenance, repair, and renewal or reconstruction of existing lines and wires along all of the railway company's railroads, and for the construction, maintenance, repair, and renewal or reconstruction of such additional wires or lines of poles and wires as may be required for commercial or railroad telegraph purposes along said railroad and along future branches or extensions thereof, and along new railroads constructed or acquired by the railway company, until the total number of wires shall amount to three for the exclusive use of each party hereto, between Council Bluffs and Ogden; two for the exclusive use of each party hereto, between Kansas City and Denver; and one for the exclusive use of each party hereto, on all other portions of the railway company's railroads, branches, and extensions.

Each party hereto shall pay the entire cost of the construction, maintenance, repair, and renewal or reconstruction of wires for its exclusive use in excess of the number hereinbefore mentioned. The material of the telegraph company for additional wires to be transported free of charge by the railway company over its own lines, as hereinafter provided.

The telegraph company agrees to furnish at its own expense all blanks and stationery for commercial or public telegraph business, and all instruments, main and local batteries, and battery material for the operation of its own and the railway company's wires and offices. The telegraph company shall maintain the main batteries in good working order, but if said batteries are at places where the telegraph company has no battery-man or other employé who can attend to the same, in such cases the railway company's employés shall keep said batteries in good working order, if any of such employés at such place are competent to do it.

Seventh. Each party hereto shall have the exclusive use, under the division of the cost of material hereinbefore provided, of not exceeding three wires between Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Ogden, Utah, and not exceeding two wires between Kansas City, Mo., and Denver, Colo., and not exceeding one wire on all other portions of the railway company's railroads: Provided, however, That in case either party hereto shall require additional wires between said places hereinbefore mentioned, or along any of the other railroads of the railway company, the party requiring such additional wire or wires shall furnish at its own expense all material for the construction, maintenance, repair, and renewal or reconstruction of such additional wire or wires.

The telegraph company agrees to furnish, free of charge, for the railroad business of the railway company, a direct wire connecting the railway company's office in Omaha, Nebr., with its office in Kansas City, Mo., and with the railway company's offices at intermediate railroad stations of the railway company along the Missouri River, including Council Bluffs; and the telegraph company will receive, transmit, and deliver, free of charge, at and from its offices at said intermediate stations of the railway company, such messages on the railroad business of the railway company as may be offered by its agents and officers for points on the railway company's roads: Provided, That the telegraph company may use said wire for the transaction of commercial or public telegraph business when not in use for railroad business.

Eighth. All messages of the officers and agents of the railway company pertaining to its railroad business may be transmitted free of charge between all telegraph stations on the lines of its various railroads, over wires set apart for railroad business.

The telegraph company agrees to issue to such officers of the railway company as may be designated by the president or general superintendent thereof annual franks authorizing the free transmission over any of the lines of the telegraph company in the United States of messages relating strictly to the railroad or corporate business of the railway company to or from points beyond or off the line of the railway company's railroads, to an amount not exceeding $25,000 per annum for the first 3,400 miles of railroad owned or controlled and operated by the railway company, and occupied by a telegraph line erected thereon, and operated under the provisions of this agreement, and $6 per annum additional for each additional mile of railroad owned or controlled and operated by the railway company and occupied as aforesaid.

The tolls on all of such messages to or from points beyond or off the line of said railroads shall be calculated at the regular commercial day rates of the telegraph company between the points at which such messages are delivered to the telegraph company and the points to which they may be destined: Provided, however, That if any such messages be delivered to the telegraph company at any place other than the place at which such messages originate, they shall be transmitted over railroad wires and handled by railroad employés entirely until delivered to the telegraph company. And the railway company agrees to pay to the telegraph company one-half of its aforesaid rates on all such messages in excess of said above-mentioned amount. Settlements to be made yearly.

It is understood and agreed that the free telegraphic service herein provided for is for the transmission of messages concerning the operation and business of the railway company's railroads, and shall not be extended to messages ordering sleeping-car, parlor-car, or steamer berths, or other accommodations for customers of the railway company, the tolls on which messages should be properly chargeable to such customers.

Ninth. The railway company agrees to transport free of charge over its railroads, upon application of the superintendent or other officer of the telegraph company, all officers of the telegraph company when traveling on its business, and all employés of the telegraph company when traveling on the telegraph company's business connected with or pertaining to the lines or wires and offices along any of the railway company's railroads. And the railway company further agrees to transport and distribute free of charge along the line of any or all of its railroads all poles and other materials for the construction, maintenance, operation, repair, or reconstruction of the lines and wires covered by this agreement, and of such additional wires or lines of poles and wires as may be erected under and in pursuance of the provisions of this agreement. Also all material and supplies for the establishment, maintenance, and operation of the offices along said railroads, it being understood that no charge shall be made for the transportation of poles or other materials over any of the railway company's railroads for use on any other of its railroads.

Tenth. The telegraph company agrees to supply instruments and local batteries and blanks and stationery for commercial telegraph business as hereinbefore provided, at offices established and maintained by the railway company. At all telegraph stations of the railway company its employés shall receive, transmit, and deliver such commercial or public messages as may be offered, and shall render to the telegraph company monthly statements of such business, and full accounts of all receipts therefrom, and the railway company shall cause all of such receipts to be paid over to the telegraph company monthly.

As compensation to the railway company for the services herein provided for, the telegraph company agrees to pay or return to the railway company monthly one-half of the cash receipts at telegraph stations maintained and operated by and at the expense of the railway company, tolls on ocean cable messages and tolls for lines of other companies excepted, all of which shall be retained by the telegraph company, it being understood that the railway company shall not be entitled to any portion of the tolls on ocean cable messages or tolls belonging to lines of other companies or to any portion of amounts checked against other offices.

And the employés of the railway company shall not, without the consent of the telegraph company, transmit over said telegraph lines any free messages except those provided for herein.

Either party hereto may maintain telegraph offices at places on said railroads where it now has offices, and either party may establish and maintain offices at such other places on said railroads as it may elect: Provided, however, That the telegraph company shall not establish any new office independent of the railway company's office at any point on said railroads, within one mile of an office which may have been previously established by the railway company, unless the railway company shall consent thereto; but the telegraph company may establish and maintain branch offices wherever it may elect so to do in cities or towns, or on or along said railroads where it may now have independent offices.

It is understood and agreed that so long as the commercial telegraph business of places where the telegraph company has no independent offices, and where offices are maintained by the railway company at its railroad stations, is confined within one mile of such railroad stations, and is performed satisfactorily, the telegraph company shall not open an independent office within one mile of such stations; but in case the commercial business at any such railroad station should not be transacted to the reasonable satisfaction of the public, and if the telegraph company shall seek to establish an independent office at such place within one mile of the railroad station, and the railway company should object thereto, then the question shall be decided by arbitration as hereinafter provided.

The railway company agrees that its employés shall not compete with the telegraph company's offices in the transaction of commercial telegraph business, at any point where the telegraph company may now or hereafter have an office separate from the railway company's office, by cutting rates or by active efforts to divert business from the telegraph company.

Eleventh. It is a condition of this contract that the railway company is not to be responsible for, and the said telegraph company hereby covenants and agrees to save the said railway company harmless and indemnify it against, any loss or damages of any kind arising from any injury to persons in the employ of or property belonging to said telegraph company while being carried free over said roads under this agreement, or from any neglect or failure in the transmission or delivery of messages for any person doing business with said telegraph company, or on account of any other public or commercial telegraph business for which said railway company is to account under article tenth hereof; and said telegraph company shall not be responsible for, and the railway company agrees to indemnify and save harmless the telegraph company against, any loss or damages of any kind arising from or on account of any error or failure in the transmission or delivery of messages sent for said railway company under this agreement.

Twelfth. It is further agreed that the management of the wires, the repairs of all the lines along the railway company's railroads, and the distribution of all materials for use on said lines shall be under the supervision and control of a competent superintendent, who shall be appointed and paid jointly by the parties hereto, and whose salary shall be fixed by mutual agreement, and said superintendent shall be equally the servant of each of the parties hereto, and shall, as far as practicable, protect and harmonize the interest of both parties hereto in the transaction of the railroad and commercial telegraph business along the railway company's railroads.

Said superintendent shall be subordinate to and under the control of the superintendents of both parties hereto in the management, repair, reconstruction, maintenance, and operation of the lines and wires and the distribution of material therefor, and shall co-operate with both parties hereto in giving the utmost efficiency to the transaction of the railroad and commercial telegraph business and the working of the lines and wires on said railroads.

Said superintendent may be removed by either party hereto, but his successor shall not be appointed without the consent of both parties hereto.

Thirteenth. The railway company shall have the right to the free use of any telegraphic patent rights or new discoveries or inventions that the telegraph company now owns and uses in its general telegraph business, or which it may hereafter own and use as aforesaid, so far as the same may be necessary to properly carry on the business of railroad telegraphing on the line of said railroads as provided for herein.

Fourteenth. The telegraph company hereby promises and agrees to assume and protect the railway company from the payment of all taxes levied and assessed upon the telegraph property belonging to either of the parties to this agreement.

Fifteenth. The provisions of this agreement shall extend to all railroads and branches or extensions thereof now or hereafter owned or controlled by the railway company: Provided, however, That in case the railway company shall hereafter acquire the ownership or control of any railroad upon which the telegraph company may already have a line of telegraph in operation, the provisions of this contract shall not apply to such railroad and telegraph line without the mutual consent of the parties hereto at the time of such acquisition.

The provisions of this contract shall be and continue in force for and during the term of twenty-five years from the date hereof, and unless one year's written notice next prior to the expiration of said term is given this contract will continue in force thereafter until one year's written notice shall have been given by one of the parties hereto of its intention to terminate the same.

In case of any disagreement concerning the true intent and meaning of any of the provisions of this contract, the subject of such difference shall be referred to three arbitrators, one to be chosen by each party hereto, and the third by the two others chosen, and the decision of such arbitrators, or of a majority thereof, shall be final and conclusive.

In case of any such disagreement arising, either party may appoint in writing an arbitrator, and in writing request the other party to appoint an arbitrator on its behalf. The neglect or failure to make such appointment or to abide by any award or decision of the arbitrators or a majority thereof shall be deemed a breach of this contract. If the first set of arbitrators chosen shall be unable to agree, a second, and, if necessary, a third shall be selected in like manner. If they fail to agree, then a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States may select three disinterested arbitrators, whose award or decision shall be final.

It is understood and agreed that this contract, as long as it is in good faith observed and kept on the part of the Union Pacific Railway Company, supersedes the contracts specified in Exhibit A; but if the Union Pacific Railway Company shall not keep this contract in good faith on its part, then said contracts in Exhibit A, according to their respective provisions, shall be considered and be in force, and all rights thereunder for the purpose of the protection of the Western Union Telegraph Company. All disputes under this paragraph shall be submitted to arbitration as aforesaid. If this contract is kept by the Union Pacific Railway Company in good faith for the term of twenty-five years, then all rights under said contracts and each of them are at an end; and this contract shall not be construed as granting any easements or rights of way in or over the property of the railway company which shall continue in existence after the said period of twenty-five years.

This agreement shall not be construed to affect the rights of the telegraph company under section 19 of the act of July 1, 1862, or under the act of July 2, 1864, entitled "An act for increased facilities of telegraph communication between the Atlantic and Pacific States and the Territory of Idaho," which rights are disputed by the railway company, and which rights during the existence of this contract are to remain in statu quo, the same as if this contract had not been made, and on the termination of this contract each party hereto is remitted to its legal rights in respect thereof.

It is also agreed between the parties hereto that if at the end of each term of ten years commencing from the date hereof this contract in any of its provisions shall be deemed by either party hereto to work unjustly, and the parties can not agree upon its modification, then either party may have the matter of such difference submitted to the arbitrators herein provided for, whose decision in respect of such matters shall be binding upon the parties. Said arbitrators shall have no power to limit or extend the term of this contract, or to do anything except to provide adequate relief in respect of the matters of specific complaint submitted to them where it shall be found to work unjustly.

In witness whereof the parties to these presents have caused the names of their respective presidents to be hereunto subscribed and their corporate seals to be attested the day and year first above written.

HENRY H. MARMADUKE.

Mr. HEARD. I ask unanimous consent that I may call up for consideration at this time the Senate bill No. 1754. It is a bill proposing to remove political disabilities. It has passed the Senate unanimously, been approved by the Judiciary Committee of the House, and is accompanied by the petition in the usual form.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 1754) for the relief of Henry H. Marmaduke, of Missouri.

Be it enacted, etc. (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That Henry H. Marmaduke, of the State of Missouri, is hereby relieved of all political disabilities imposed on him by the third section of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed (two-thirds having voted therefor).

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield for a few minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

LABOR TROUBLES IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I am directed by the committee appointed yesterday for the investigation of the labor troubles existing in Pennsylvania to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a sum, not to exceed $5,000, sufficient to pay the expenses of the special committee of the House appointed to investigate the extent, causes, and effect upon interstate commerce of the continued failure of the Reading Railroad Company to transport such commerce, etc., shall be immediately available and payable out of the contingent fund of the House on the order of the chairman and one member of the said committee, in sums not exceeding $1,000 at one time; and all vouchers for any such expenditures shall be likewise certified to by the chairman and one member of the committee.

Resolved, That said special committee be authorized to employ a clerk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to state for the information of the House that the resolution which was passed the other day was the ordinary form of resolution where an investigation is to be held in the city of Washington. The committee which was appointed yesterday met last evening and ascertained, first, that in all probability it will be required to go to some point or points in Pennsylvania, and second, that under the resolution which the House adopted the committee can not draw from the contingent fund the necessary funds to pay its expenses and the fees of witnesses who may be summoned. The resolution which I have just presented has been drawn by the Sergeant-at-Arms to obviate this difficulty, and is substantially the same in its provisions as the resolution providing for the Curtin investigation of the last Congress. The object is to enable the committee to prosecute its work, which at present it can not do. And by direction of the committee, and upon the request of the chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be now considered and passed.

In frankness I ought to say one other thing to the House In the resolution which was first introduced by me there was a provision for a messenger and a stenographer. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER], a member of the committee, who was also a member of the Curtin committee, called our attention to the fact that very much time would be saved by having two stenographers, as that committee had. In the resolution which was passed the other day there was an omission of any provision for a messenger. The only difference in that respect between this resolution and the one heretofore passed by the House is the insertion of the provision for a clerk, who is to be used as a stenographer, so as to give the committee the services of two stenographers in order that it may transact its business more speedily.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield now to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HAYDEN], who desires to introduce a resolution.

"HISTORICAL LOCATION," MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present not a resolution, but a petition, for reference to the Committee on the Library, and to ask that the body of it, omitting the names, be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The petition was referred to the Committee on the Library. It is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned citizens of the United States, respectfully request Congress to take such action as may be necessary to secure to the United States, by purchase, about one acre of land, known as Prospect Hill, situated in the city of Somerville, formerly Charlestown, in the State of Massachusetts, and about one and a half miles from Bunker Hill monument, being the "historical location" where, on the 18th day of July, 1775, Major-General Putnam's Continental troops were assembled, and the first flag of the United Colonies of North America was unfurled, bearing on one side, "An appeal to Heaven," and on the other side, "Qui transtulit, sustinet."

CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY BUILDING.

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN].

Mr. RYAN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and hereby is, instructed to inquire and report to the House what contracts have been made for the construction of the building for the Library of Congress, and the amount expended under the same, and for what purpose, and the cause of the delay in the progress of the work on the building.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA.

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR].

Mr. GEAR, by unanimous consent, presented the following; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

SECRETARY'S OFFICE, IOWA STATE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY,
Des Moines, Iowa, February 6, 1888.

Resolved by the State Agricultural Society of Iowa (representing as it does almost every county and district society in the State), That we most respectfully ask of Congress to do all in its power to exterminate what is known as pleuro-pneumonia, or lung-plague, and to this end we would urge the immediate passage of what is known as the Miller-Carey bill.

And that the secretary of this association be instructed to forward a copy of this resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

JOHN A. THOMPSON.

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield now to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] with the statement that after this I can not yield further.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 874) for the relief of John A. Thompson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officer of the Post-Office Department is hereby authorized and directed to place to the credit of John A. Thompson, of Manistee, Mich., in his account as postmaster at said city of Manistee, the sum of $167.44, being the amount of postal funds lost by him by the burglary of his office, vault, and safe on the 8th day of May, 1886, without fault or neglect on the part of the said postmaster; and the said amount is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be placed to the credit of the Post-Office Department.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. This bill is in precisely the same terms as one which was passed by the House in the last Congress, and was reported favorably in the Senate, but was not reached there.

Mr. SHAW. I wish to ask whether the amount named in the bill has been paid into the Treasury, or whether this bill is merely for the purpose of adjusting the matter in the settlement of the postmaster's accounts?

Mr. CUTCHEON. The amount has been paid, and this bill makes an appropriation in order that an allowance therefor may be made to the postmaster.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CUTCHEON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY AND POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

M DOCKERY resumed the floor.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] will allow me to ask what is his present purpose in connection with this bill? What does he propose to do at the present time?

Mr. DOCKERY. I understood that it was the desire of gentlemen who filed the minority report to discuss the bill somewhat at length before taking the vote. We shall not have the time this afternoon for a full discussion and vote upon the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the debate continue after this afternoon?

Mr. DOCKERY. It will continue when we resume consideration of the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. I merely wished to remark that as this report, which is a most voluminous one, has been given to the House within an hour, I did not wish any determination of the question to be reached this afternoon.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman is quite right.

Mr. Speaker, the consideration of this bill at the present time is to me somewhat unexpected and finds me unprepared for a satisfactory discussion of the measure, and therefore at this moment I shall content myself with a brief statement of its provisions. The subject involved is not a new one. It was originally called to the attention of the House at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress by a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] instructing the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to make an investigation with a view of determining whether additional legislation was needed to prevent a monopoly of telegraphic facilities, and to give to the Southern, Western, and Pacific States the benefit of competition between telegraph lines.

Under the authority of that resolution the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads made an exhaustive investigation of the question. They heard testimony and statements, and, as a result of their examination, reached the conclusion that the Pacific railroads had not complied and were not then complying with the terms of their charters, which required them not only to construct and maintain railroad lines, but to construct, maintain, and operate telegraph lines.

To enforce the provisions of the charter the committee reported H. R. 10398; but by reason of the delay incident to the investigation it was not made until December 22, 1886, and therefore too late for any action by Congress. The committee at the present session have given the subject careful examination and have reached substantially the conclusions of the Post-Office Committee of the last House. As preliminary to a brief explanation of prior legislation affecting this question, I will state that the bill reported by the committee requires:

1. That all railroad and telegraph companies to which the United States has granted any subsidy in lands or bonds or loan of credit for the construction of either railroad or telegraph lines, which, by the acts incorporating them, or by any act amendatory or supplementary thereto, are required to construct, maintain, or operate telegraph lines, and all companies engaged in operating said railroads or telegraph lines shall forthwith and henceforward, by and through their own respective corporative officers and employés, construct, maintain, and operate for railroad, governmental, commercial, and all other purposes, telegraph lines, and exercise by themselves alone all the telegraph franchises conferred upon them and obligations assumed by them under the acts making the grants as aforesaid.

2. That whenever any telegraph company which shall have accepted the provisions of Title LXV of the Revised Statutes shall extend its line to any station or office of a telegraph line belonging to any one of said railroad or telegraph companies, referred to in the first section of this act, said telegraph company so extending its line shall have the right and said railroad or telegraph company shall allow the line of said telegraph company so extending its line to connect with the telegraph line of said railroad or telegraph company to which it is extended at the place where their lines may meet, for the prompt and convenient interchange of telegraph business between said companies; and such railroad and telegraph companies, referred to in the first section of this act, shall so operate their respective telegraph lines as to afford equal facilities to all, without discrimination in favor of or against any person, company, or corporation whatever, and shall receive, deliver, and exchange business with connecting telegraph lines on equal terms, and affording equal facilities, and without discrimination for or against any one of such connecting lines; and such exchange of business shall be on terms just and equitable.

The remaining provisions of the measure simply furnish the necessary machinery for enforcing the requirements of the first two sections and invest the Interstate-Commerce Commission with the authority, and charge them with the duty of seeing that the law shall be duly executed.

TRANSCONTINENTAL TELEGRAPH LINE.

The original act authorizing a transcontinental telegraph line was approved June 16, 1860, the first section providing—

That said line or lines * * * shall be open to the use of all citizens of the United States during the term of the said contract, on the payment of the regular charges for transmission of dispatches.

Section 3 of the same act requires—

That messages received from any individual, company, or corporation, or from any telegraph lines connecting with this line at either of its termini, shall be impartially transmitted in the order of their reception, excepting that the dispatches of the Government shall have priority.

The same section further provides—

That Congress shall at any time have the right to alter or amend this act.

FIRST PACIFIC RAILROAD ACT.

The first act which authorized the construction of a transcontinental line of railroad was approved July 1, 1862, and made generous grants in lands and bonds in aid of "a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean," and also empowered the Union Pacific Railway Company "to lay out, locate, construct, furnish, maintain, and enjoy a continuous railroad and telegraph, with the appurtenances," etc. The right of way was granted by the second section "for the construction of said railroad and telegraph line." Wherever in this act the railroad is referred to it is joined with the telegraph line, and the obligations apply with equal force to both. Section 12 specifically requires that—

The whole line of said railroad and branches and telegraph shall be operated and used for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and Government are concerned, as one connected, continuous line.

Section 18 expressly authorizes Congress to "alter, amend, or repeal this act, having due regard for the rights of said companies."

Section 19 provided—and I wish to call especial attention of the House to this provision—

That the several railroad companies herein named are authorized to enter into an arrangement with the Pacific Telegraph Company, the Overland Telegraph Company, and the California State Telegraph Company, so that the present line of telegraph between the Missouri River and San Francisco—

That is the line authorized under the act of June 16, 1860—

may be moved upon or along the line of said railroad and branches as fast as said roads and branches are built; and if said arrangement be entered into, and the transfer of said telegraph line be made in accordance therewith to the line of said railroad and branches, such transfer shall, for all purposes of this act, be held and considered a fulfillment on the part of said railroad companies of the provisions of this act in regard to the construction of said line of telegraph. And, in case of disagreement, said telegraph companies are authorized to remove their line of telegraph along and upon the line of railroad herein contemplated without prejudice to the rights of said railroad companies named herein.

SECOND PACIFIC RAILROAD ACT.

The act of July 2, 1864, was amendatory to the act of July 1, 1862, and approved before any work had been done or any right had accrued under the original incorporating act.

Section 15 of this act declared the policy of non-discrimination in the following terms:

That the several railroad companies authorized to construct the aforesaid roads are hereby required to operate and use said roads and telegraph for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and the Government are concerned, as one continuous line; and, in such operation and use, to afford and secure to each equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of the road or business of any or either of said companies, or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others, and it shall not be lawful for the proprietors of any line of telegraph authorized by this act, or the act amended by this act, to refuse or fail to convey for all persons requiring the transmission of news and messages of like character, on pain of forfeiting to the person injured for each offense the sum of $100 and such other damage as he may have suffered on account of said refusal or failure, to be sued for and recovered in any court of the United States or of any State or Territory of competent jurisdiction.

Section 22 reserved the right of Congress to "alter, amend, or repeal this act."

Mr. Speaker, I have given a brief résumé of all the laws upon which repose the provisions of the pending bill, and it will be seen that the right to alter, amend, or repeal is expressly reserved in each one of these incorporating acts. It further appears that it was the purpose of Congress to require these railroad and telegraph lines, in their operation and use, to afford "equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation" to individuals, corporations, and connecting telegraph lines. In pursuance of the act of July 16, 1860, the Pacific Telegraph Company, the Overland Telegraph Company, and the California State Telegraph Company acquired the right of corporate existence, and as such were subject to the provisions of this same act, which in the most unequivocal terms declared against discrimination.

The act of July 1, 1862, authorized the Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railroads to "enter into an arrangement" with these telegraph lines so that they might be "moved upon or along the line" (or lines) of the railroad companies, and such removal under this arrangement should be taken as fulfillment of that part of the charter which required these roads to construct, maintain, and operate a telegraph line.

It is claimed by the minority of the committee that the authorization of the transfer or removal of these telegraph lines to the lines of the Union and Central Pacific Railroads exempts the latter from that stipulation of their charters which imposes the obligation to construct, maintain, and operate a telegraph line. The committee do not concur in this construction of the law, but maintain that if it is held that the "arrangement" authorized by the nineteenth section of the act of July 1, 1862, operates to exempt the Pacific railroads from the construction and maintenance of a telegraph line, then the Western Union Telegraph Company, as successor to the Overland Telegraph Company, shall be subject to the provisions of the act of June 16, 1860, the third section of which positively commands—

That messages received from any individual, company, or corporation, or from any telegraph lines connecting with this line at either of its termini, shall be impartially transmitted in the order of their reception, excepting that the dispatches of the Government shall have priority.

Under this view, therefore, we insist that any contract which discriminates against individuals, corporations, or connecting telegraph lines is in violation of the letter and spirit of this section; for, as stated in the report—

Nothing in the act authorizing the removal of the telegraph line as originally constructed to the line of the railroad changes in this respect the terms of the original grant.

So that when the Overland Telegraph line had been removed to the line of the railroad as it was built, it was there in place of a telegraph the railroad company otherwise would have been obliged to construct; it was there in place of such a line, and to do the work of such a line, and to do it in all respects the same as it would have to be done by a line built by the railroad company. Hence the obligation of the railroad company, in the opinion of your committee, to keep in operation a telegraph line that shall fulfill the requirements of the provisions of the law in relation to telegraphs is in no wise lessened by any arrangement that may have been entered into for the transfer of the wires previously constructed on the overland route.

The evidence taken before the committee of the last House fully established the fact that discrimination then existed. Whether the same discrimination exists at this time may be inferred from a telegram of which I am just in receipt (through the courtesy of Senator VEST) from Hon. E. L. Martin, Kansas City, Mo., president of the Pacific Mutual Telegraph Company, a gentleman of high standing and reputation, who, after expressing his desire to appear before the committee, states:

The Pacific Mutual Telegraph lines extend from St. Louis to Sioux City, Iowa, via Sedalia, Kansas City, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth, Lincoln, Omaha, Nebr., and intermediate points. We are barred from exchanging business over the land-grant railroads on account of their failure to operate and maintain independent telegraph lines over their system for the use of the public and connecting lines, as required by their charters. We think the Anderson bill should be passed by all means, thus giving independent telegraph lines other than the Western Union an opportunity to exchange business with the land-grant lines in the same manner that the railroads interchange, upon an equitable basis.

VESTED RIGHTS.

I will now ask the Clerk to read the views of the minority of the committee as to the constitutionality of the proposed legislation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Upon the question of the competency of this legislation the minority will content themselves with the brief and terse statement of the propositions on which is predicated their opinion that Congress can not make and enforce a law embracing the provisions of this bill because the same are not constitutional.

Prior to the act of July 1, 1862, there was a line of overland telegraph, built and operated under the provisions of the act of June 16, 1860, which was for ten years a subsidized line. Section 19 of act of July 1, 1862, expressly gave the railroad companies the right to enter into an arrangement with the overland telegraph companies, so that the overland line might be moved upon the right of way of the railroad companies, and such removal, if made, should "be held and considered a fulfillment on the part of said railroad companies of the provisions of this act in regard to the construction of said line of telegraph."

Here, then, was express authority at law for the removal and consolidation even of these lines of telegraph. The lines of the overland telegraph were in point of fact removed, and the Western Union Company became the de facto successor of the old overland company. The question of whether the Western Union was such successor de jure may probably not be held as res adjudicata, yet the opinion of Mr. Justice Miller in Western Union vs. Union Pacific (circuit court of United States, district of Kansas, October, 1880) holds that prima facie it is such successor; that section 19, act of July 1, 1862, was in full force in 1881, and is in full force and unrepealed to-day.

On July 1, 1881, there being at that time full express authority to act, the subsidized roads and the Western Union made an arrangement for a joint operation of all the wires and lines of both of them over their common right of way. The arrangement was and is beneficial to each. It was a contract proper and lawful to be made at common law unaided by statute. It had statutory authority in addition. Under that contract, lawfully made, reciprocal vested rights inured. The Western Union built, at its own expense, additional lines for the railroad. It gave, and gives, the use of its lines and employés for railroad business, and in the opinion of this minority there is no more right or power in the United States Government to annul such contracts by legislation than there is to legislate the title of a granger's farm into a base-ball ground without the farmer's consent.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, then, Mr. Speaker, I have submitted the sections of the various incorporating acts relating to this question and the views of the minority of the Post-Office Committee, who hold that the existing contracts between the Pacific Railroad and the Western Union were proper and lawful, and therefore that "vested rights have inured" which are beyond the power of Congress to disturb. Let us apply the facts to the law and to the views of the minority. What are these facts?

An examination of the evidence taken at the last session discloses the fact that the Overland Telegraph Company and its successor, the Western Union, availed themselves of no rights whatever, "vested" or otherwise, under the act of July 1, 1862, except the privilege of moving their line of telegraph "along and upon the line of the railroad." Although the nineteenth section of the act was adopted at the request of their friends, yet as a matter of fact they made no "arrangement" whatever with the railroad companies, but, on the contrary, after the road was constructed they simply removed their lines upon its right of way, pursuant to the authority of the act. Both the Union and Central Pacific Railroad Companies constructed and operated their own telegraph lines as required by their charters until they assumed to divest themselves of such obligation, the Central Pacific under the contract of December 14, 1877, and the Union Pacific under the contract of July 1, 1881. The entire constitutional proposition of the minority, therefore, must fail because, if for no other reason, it does not harmonize with the facts upon which it is supposed to rest.

"WESTERN UNION MONOPOLY."

In view of the foregoing it is manifest that the Pacific railroads must "exercise by themselves alone all the telegraph franchises conferred upon them," and that they can not lawfully acquit themselves of this obligation by contracting with another company. In this view of the case, the propositions we offer are neither novel nor startling, but are simply designed to enforce the provisions of the acts of incorporation, and are in thorough accord with their intent and purpose. We are but following, sir, in the wake of our illustrious predecessors, who, animated by a great national spirit, sought to unite the people more closely by extending lines of railroad and telegraph from the Atlantic to the Pacific. For although they were grappling with the questions incident to a great civil strife, yet did they hedge about their liberal grants of lands and bonds with stipulations that placed individuals and corporations upon an equality before the law. They studiously avoided the very appearance of monopolistic tendencies, and sought in this legislation to secure "equal rights to all; exclusive privileges to none." They believed that monopolies should not enjoy and exercise "vested rights" in contravention of the highest and best interests of the whole people.

Mr. Speaker, the existing contract between the Western Union Telegraph Company and the Pacific railroads gives the Western Union an absolute and complete monopoly of telegraph privileges from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean. Since the adjournment of the last Congress the necessity for some sort of telegraphic regulation has been most pungently and forcibly brought to the attention of the country in the absorption and overthrow of the Baltimore and Ohio telegraph system by its great competitor, the Western Union. Sir, I know something of the power of this mighty corporation, backed as it is by eighty millions of capital, politically and financially dominating, and imperious by reason of its tremendous monopoly: but I yet believe that had the provisions of this bill been upon the pages of the statute-books it would have been impossible to overthrow the magnificent system of the Baltimore and Ohio. As it is, however, the country to-day stands in the shadow of a giant telegraph monopoly, which should be speedily put within the pale of some wholesome measure of legislative restriction. The Post-Office Committee under the rules has confined itself to the regulation demanded along the line of the Pacific railroads, and has not sought to enlarge the scope of the bill beyond the purpose of the original inquiry.

We therefore offer no general proposition for telegraphic regulation; but, sir, in the light of the experience of the last six months, I submit that this is one of the great and pressing questions which should challenge and engage the attention of Congress, for it is manifest that legislation must speedily be had to check the encroachments and overshadowing power of the Western Union Telegraph Company. The business interests of the country inexorably demand some measure of wholesome and equitable reform. Individual enterprise seems powerless and inadequate to furnish a successful competitor.

I trust, therefore, that the committee of the House charged with the duty of considering this question will at an early day present some proposition just and equitable to all interests involved, and which will receive the approval of Congress before the close of the present session.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON], and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly that duties connected with the investigating committee announced yesterday will likely prevent me from being present when this bill is voted upon, and also from taking an active part in the discussion after gentlemen upon the other side have been heard. I shall therefore content myself now with simply stating in a general way the object sought to be attained by the bill, the region of country chiefly affected by it, and simply to suggest reasons which present themselves to my mind for its passage.

There can be no possible question that the intention of Congress in creating the Pacific railroad companies was to provide for competition between the several lines for the benefit of that great half continent west of the Missouri River. In every one of the land-grant acts you will find not only in the title, but wherever the railroad company is mentioned, the words "and telegraph line" always added. The clear intention of Congress was manifestly to require these companies to construct, maintain, and operate not only the railroads, but the railway and telegraph lines. Furthermore, it is a clear rule of law that no authority is given to a corporation, except that which is expressed or necessarily implied in the grant. No power to transfer the telegraphic franchise is given by any act.

It is also a principle of law that the holder of an exclusive franchise must personally perform the service under the grant made to him. I think there can be no question that such was the intention of Congress in giving an exclusive telegraphic franchise—one worth so many millions of dollars, running for an indefinite period of time—an exclusive franchise to construct and operate both a railroad and telegraph across the continent. It was the intention of Congress in giving so rich a franchise, not only that the lines should be constructed, but also that they should be operated personally and de facto by the grantee, and not transferred to a stranger company. The courts have distinctly held, on this very issue, that the service must be a personal service.

So that the railroad companies in court, I venture to assert, would risk the forfeiture of their charters upon the simple ground of non user. Why? Because in every instance from the North Pacific down to the Texas Pacific they have bartered away their franchise or its use by entering into a contract with the Western Union Telegraph Company by which the railroad companies refuse to perform or fail to perform the telegraph service imposed by their grants, and by which means they have given to the Western Union an absolute monopoly over the whole region of that half of our continent west of the Missouri upon which are living eight millions of people.

The original act certainly never contemplated such an abuse. In defiance of that charter, by the sweeping genius of that most unscrupulous of pirates, Jayhawk Gould, and by the exercise of his terrible power, he has obtained a complete monopoly of this telegraphic service, and we find the Western Union Telegraph Company holding an absolute, ruthless monopoly of the entire service. This bill simply proposes that the original intention of the original act shall be executed. That is all. There is no new legislation in it. It simply attempts to interpose a little bit of God's burnished justice between the people and Jay Gould. That is the total purpose and effect of the bill.

Now, what is the region affected by this measure? Suppose every one of the land-grant roads were to-day operating its telegraph wires as its charter requires them to be operated. You would then have competition in the telegraphic service between all these roads, a great network covering half the continent from the Gulf to the Canada line, and from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean; you would give to its people, in their countless cities and villages, the benefit of competition, and by so doing you would benefit the people of the East, and of the whole nation.

This bill seeks to secure that competition. It comes up as a prayer from eight millions of people living west of the Mississippi River to deliver them from the greed, the bowelless, merciless grind of the most extortionate, insatiable, unscrupulous, and piratical set of incorporated scoundrels on the continent. [Laughter and applause.]

You will find that opposition to this bill will be very gladly welcomed by the Pacific railway interest. You will find that the defeat of the bill would be hailed with "ghoulish glee" by Dr. Norvin Green, that great dispenser of Western Union telegraph "franks."

I am compelled to content myself with saying this much to the House at this time. I hope I have at least suggested facts showing that the bill is not only righteous, and that it not only brings down from the great sun of justice some beams of light, but that it proposes to strike a square blow between the eyes of Gould's Western Union monopoly, and likewise a square blow between the eyes of each of the Pacific railway companies, as an emphatic way of saying to them, "There is power in wealth, there is power in the combination of great monopolies, yet there is more power in the arm of the American people, and you, too, shall obey law." [Applause.] I am much obliged to my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] for the time I have occupied.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. In this day of great clamor in respect to trusts, in respect to corporations, in respect to monopolies, and in respect to men who have succeeded in achieving what others would gladly achieve for themselves, it may be necessary that a man who comes to discuss the interests of the Government should apologize before he commences his discourse by saying that he is not here to speak for monopolists. But I have no apology to make in this case, for none is necessary.

I have a word of criticism first to the title which the eloquent gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] gave to this bill when he introduced it. I will read the title. It says, in the most harmless words possible:

Supplementary to the act of July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," and also of the act of July 2, 1864, and other acts amendatory of said first-named act.

Now, if there had been proper candor and the same free use of the United States tongue that characterized the gentleman's speech to-day this bill would have been entitled "A bill to enable the Congress of the United States to get in its work temporarily against Jay 'Hawk' Gould and the Western Union Telegraph Company."

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Does the gentleman think they own it for all time?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I will yield to the gentleman, if necessary, by and by, but not now.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I do not propose to interrupt the gentleman again.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. The question before Congress is a very simple one when you have got it rid of the rotund verbiage in which it has been enveloped by the gentleman who introduced the bill. "What do you read, my lord?" said Polonius to Hamlet; and his reply was, "Words, words, words." And that is what is in this bill—"words, words, words;" and all that it contains in reality is to be found in three or four words which I will emphasize in the first section. The first section reads:

Be it enacted, etc., That all railroad and telegraph companies to which the United States has granted any subsidy in lands or bonds or loan of credit for the construction of either railroad or telegraph lines, which by the acts incorporating them, or by any acts amendatory or supplementary thereto, are required to construct, maintain, or operate telegraph lines, and all companies engaged in operating said railroads or telegraph lines, shall forthwith and henceforward, by and through their own respective corporate officers and employés, construct, maintain, and operate for railroad, governmental, commercial, and all other purposes, telegraph lines, and exercise by themselves alone all the telegraph franchises conferred upon them and obligations assumed by them under the acts making the grants as aforesaid.

Now, in this word "alone" we disclose the gist of this bill and we show the bill to be objectionable, first, on the ground of public policy in the wise administration of the affairs of this country, and second, because the provisions of this law are repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, as interfering with what have over and over again been decided to be vested rights, and therefore it can not be enforced if passed.

Now, what is it they are striking at? The gentleman having this bill in charge brought to the attention of the House what has occurred in reference to the Baltimore and Ohio Telegraph Company. Like too many other institutions that company commenced without counting the cost, and found they had built "not wisely, but too well." The Western Union have made a contract by which, having bought the stock without destroying the corporate existence of the company, they work the line themselves.

Mr. DUNHAM. And put up rates.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Yes; putting up rates and putting them down, too.

Mr. DUNHAM. I admit that in some places they have put down rates.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. And I admit that in some places they have put them up; so "honors are easy" between us.

Mr. DUNHAM. But on the great business interests of the country, and between the large commercial cities, especially in the Northern States——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I do not, at this time. I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that this bill was brought under consideration at a time when the Baltimore and Ohio line had reached Omaha, and was trying to compel the Union Pacific to break a contract which it had theretofore made with the Western Union Telegraph Company. Now, sir, on that point, as to the practical working of the thing at this time, I have to say this: There is not another line in the world that reaches either of the terminal points of the Pacific railroads; to that we, in behalf of the good of the United States, the largest creditor of the Pacific Railroad Companies and interested as such creditor in the safe and profitable management of the business of those roads, we are saying to them, "Gentlemen, we insist that, without the possibility of receiving any business which does not originate either at the termini or along the route of your lines, you shall from this time forth cease doing business with the Western Union Telegraph Company. You must employ your own telegraph operators and send every dispatch over your own lines." As it is now, they have a right to send over the Western Union lines or their own interchangeably, but we propose to prohibit that and to compel them to do the whole business independently, no matter what it may cost. And why? For nothing, as I said before, except to enable this Congress to "get in its work" against the Western Union Company.

Now, I say it would be unwise to do that even if we had the power. I say that first because there is nobody here at present asking for any telegraphic facilities. The Western Union Telegraph Company has the network of its lines extending over all the States and Territories, bringing the grist to its mill, and even the spirit of communism has not ventured to suggest that they should be compelled to give up the business which they have solicited and obtained and brought to the end of the Pacific road's telegraph wires.

Now, what does the evidence show with regard to the contract which exists between these companies? A contract was made to operate the lines jointly, that the Pacific railroads should have the privilege to use the Western Union Company's lines whenever their own are overloaded, and that the Western Union should have the right to use the railroad companies' lines whenever it was necessary. In other words, that they should in every way work harmoniously, employing one set of operators only for each station instead of the two sets that would be required under this bill.

The result has been, as the evidence here shows, that in 1886, when this testimony was obtained, the business had grown, under this arrangement, from the Union Pacific doing a net business of $38,000 before consolidating the business, to $110,000, and at the same time—I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] to listen to this—at the same time the price over those lines had been reduced from $1.50 to $1 between San Francisco and all points in these United States.

Mr. DUNHAM. When did they make that reduction? When another line was built to compel them to do it?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Not at all; there is not another line built yet. They reduced the rate from San Francisco to Portland, Me., to $1.

Mr. DOCKERY. When was that reduction made?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. It was made after the pooling arrangement. I do not remember the date exactly. I had no expectation that this bill would come up for consideration this afternoon, so that I have not arranged the statistics as I would have done.

I claim, first, Mr. Speaker, that it is for the best interests of this Government, as the largest creditor of the Pacific railroads, to keep those roads earning the largest amount of money that they can earn, in order that that money may pass into the Treasury of the United States, where it belongs.

Second, I pass to a most important point, a proposition which will commend itself to every lawyer in this country, to wit, that there being not only the common-law right (although that was sufficient), but there being also a statutory provision enacted by the Congress of the United States, authorizing the overland telegraph companies, of which the Western Union is the successor, to consolidate and work together with the lines of the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific roads, all contracts that were made under that authority are binding, and this Congress has no more right to interfere with them than they have, as I say in the minority report, to legislate a granger's farm into a base-ball ground without judicial proceeding.

Let us look now at the provisions of this law. Bear in mind that the overland telegraph companies were first in the field; they commenced operations nearly two years and a half before the act incorporating the Pacific railroads was passed. When that act was passed the existence of these telegraph companies was recognized; and this provision, contained in section 19 of the act of July 1, 1862, became a part of the laws of this country:

Be it further enacted, That the several railroad companies herein named are authorized to enter into an arrangement with the Pacific Telegraph Company, the Overland Telegraph Company, and the California State Telegraph Company, so that the present line of telegraph between the Missouri River and San Francisco may be moved upon or along the line of said railroad and branches as fast as said roads and branches are built; and if said arrangement be entered into, and the transfer of said telegraph line be made in accordance therewith to the line of said railroad and branches, such transfer shall, for all purposes of this act, be held and considered a fulfillment on the part of said railroad companies of the provisions of this act in regard to the construction of said line of telegraph.

Here was the express action of Congress declaring that the then existing lines of telegraph might be operated upon or along the line of this railroad and its branches, and authorizing the Pacific railroads themselves to make a running arrangement with these companies, even to the extent of stopping their own lines.

Now, it is a well-recognized proposition at common law that where two companies doing business make an arrangement mutually advantageous, or believed to be so, and not in conflict with public policy, the contract is lawful and can not be interfered with. Under the terms of this arrangement the Western Union Telegraph Company undertook to and did connect the two lines of the Union Pacific road between Kansas City and Omaha with lines the sole use of which was given to the railroad companies in order to enable the officers at Omaha to have the supervision of the entire system of roads by a direct line. That arrangement exists to-day. The Western Union gave the use of their own lines, side by side with the Pacific Railroad lines, upon terms that were mutually agreed upon and believed to be mutually advantageous; and those contracts were lawful.

Now, are we left in doubt in regard to this matter? When a lawful contract is made and reciprocal obligations have arisen between the two contracting parties, can such a contract be abrogated by legislative act, thus destroying vested rights? Why, sir, the question was settled as long ago as the case of Woodward vs. The Trustees of the Dartmouth College, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States and reported in 4 Wheaton. This point has been decided over and over again in cases coming down to the present time, cases, too, in which this much-despised corporation which we, as its largest creditor, are now attempting to injure, was a party. In a case of this very Union Pacific Railroad as lately as 99 United States Reports the Supreme Court of the United States has passed upon this direct question. This decision was made in the famous Sinking Fund cases. I read from 99 United States Reports, page 721:

Giving full effect to the principles which have thus been authoritatively stated, we think it safe to say that whatever rules Congress might have prescribed in the original charter for the government of the corporation in the administration of its affairs, it retained the power to establish by amendment. In so doing it can not undo what has already been done, and it can not unmake contracts that have already been made; but it may provide for what shall be done in the future, and may direct what preparations shall be made for the due performance of contracts already entered into.

That declaration of the court was made in the case of this Union Pacific Railroad, against which we now propose to strike this blow. The Union Pacific made a contract with the Western Union, and the Western Union contracted with the Union Pacific for the building of a line from Omaha to Kansas City, giving the exclusive use of it to the railroad. The railroad company entered upon the use of it, and has used it from that time till this. An arrangement was made whereby one-half of the expenses of the Union Pacific for telegraph operators was to be cut off; and that arrangement has been maintained from that time till the present. In the various directions and ramifications of this business vested rights have resulted; and in view of the plainly-expressed opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States that whatever has lawfully been done Congress has not the power to undo, it is madness for us to undertake, at this time, to abrogate by legislative enactment these contracts.

Mr. Speaker, I have said all that I desire to say in opening this discussion. I was entirely unprepared to make these remarks, and when the question came up had not even a book at hand. I propose to reserve the residue of my time, to be used by myself or yielded to other gentlemen who may desire to speak in favor of the views which I entertain.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understood the gentleman to state that, by reason of this contract with the Western Union Telegraph Company, they acquired vested rights, and that the provisions of the act of July 2, 1864, which expressly gave Congress the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act, can not apply to such contract.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I say this: that the right to alter, amend, or repeal is in full force as to all new acts to be performed and new contracts to be made, but I say it can not violate or annul any contract which has been legally made under it. To illustrate: The right inherent to alter, amend, and repeal could not be exercised after the Union Pacific Railroad Company had lawfully issued its first-mortgage bonds. After putting them into existence and vested rights had accrued thereby, it could never, by repealing it, have destroyed the lien created on the property of the Union Pacific Railroad. When the Western Union Telegraph Company has advanced money; when it has built lines; when it has done all it could under its contracts and has thereby acquired vested rights, this Congress can say, you shall do no more; but all the power of Congress can not say that what it has done under those vested rights is null and void.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I understand from the statement of the gentleman from Missouri that the act of incorporation provides that Congress shall have the power to amend, alter, and repeal any of the provisions of the act. Does it so provide?

Mr. DOCKERY. It does.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Were not the contracts, to which reference is made, entered into in full view of that power to amend, alter, and repeal?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. The question has been passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States, and I beg leave to read, again, a paragraph from that decision by Mr. Justice Miller:

Giving full effect to the principles which have thus been authoritatively stated, we think it safe to say that whatever rules Congress might have prescribed in the original charter for the government of the corporation in the administration of its affairs, it retained the power to establish by amendment. In so doing it can not undo what has already been done, and it can not unmake contracts that have already been made, but it may provide for what shall be done in the future, and may direct what preparation shall be made for the due performance of contracts already entered into.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. That is a contract entirely different from this proposed legislation. That decision assumes the contract so entered into was a contract which was lawfully made under the charter itself. But the question I put here is this: Did not the original charter reserve this right to alter, amend, and repeal, and therefore anybody contracting under it entered into that contract with reference to that right, so that it becomes a question whether these contracts you speak of are lawful or not.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. There is no question about it. I have not only shown the inherent right of a body corporate to do everything necessary for the conduct of its business, but I have shown that under section 19 of the law of 1862 there was an express provision of law given to the Overland Telegraph lines, of which the Western Union is the successor, by which they provided the moving on to the lines of the Union and Pacific Railroads, upon the right of way of those railroads, and on their undertaking to operate them the Pacific railroads were relieved of the responsibility of building telegraph lines themselves.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand that the Western Union Telegraph Company succeeds to the Overland, California State, and Pacific Telegraph Companies.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. That is so. Mr. Justice Miller, in the suit of Western Union vs. Kansas Pacific Railroad, at Topeka, Kans., in 1880, on a motion to dissolve an injunction obtained by the Western Union against the defendant, where the question was material to the maintenance of the injunction, held that prima facie the Western Union were their successor. It is conceded everywhere that they are such successor de facto, and that decision held that prima facie they were de jure, although the learned justice held the question open for a further hearing on the evidence on the final trial. Before the final hearing was reached the two companies made this arrangement for working in harmony, and the question has not been otherwise decided. But there is no mistake that the decision was made in that form.

Mr. COX. May I ask my friend a question?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. COX. I had something to do with the passing of the Thurman bill here, and following the conclusions into the courts. Now, I ask my friend, representing the financial and legislative ability of a large section of country, whether he believes there is power to alter or amend, or to prevent the alteration, amendment, or repeal of a law of Congress, except by the limitation of the Constitution?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I do not believe there is power to prevent the passage of a law. But I do believe that when the legislative power leaves its proper sphere and steps into that realm which the courts of the country have held to be unconstitutional, then the law fails, as this law will fail if it passes Congress and is ever brought before such a tribunal.

Mr. COX. But the gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Repeat it.

Mr. COX. What I want to know is if the Constitution does not come in with its limitations upon the power of Congress? You give Congress the power to amend, alter, repeal, or pass an enactment.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX. Subject always to the Constitution?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX. Only?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX. Then you are gone. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I consider my colleague the best of authority on parliamentary proceedings, but on a constitutional question I prefer the Chief-Justice to my colleague, and according to the Chief-Justice I think I am here. I may be gone, but this proposition remains.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, the question of whether I may be representing a popular or unpopular side of this controversy is not what will be the measure by which the decision will be reached when it comes to the cold arbitrament of men who have passed upon such questions from the earliest history of this country down to the present time, and always held that a law which undertook to destroy vested rights or which was in derogation of title is unconstitutional.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill a question.

Mr. DOCKERY. Very well; I will yield for a question.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. This measure is one of a great deal of importance; and I would like to know whether the reports of the committee—the majority report and the minority views as well—have been printed for the use of the House, so that members can have access to them?

Mr. DOCKERY. I will state, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois, that I am advised the report is already exhausted; but to save that point I have already requested, after the reading of the bill by the Clerk, that the report proper, including the views of the minority, with the contracts in question affecting the Western Union Company, be printed in full in the RECORD, so that the entire report submitted in the last Congress by Mr. Warner, of Ohio, with the report of this committee, and the views of the minority, as well as the contract with the Western Union Telegraph Company, will appear in the RECORD to-morrow morning. I apprehend that will give the House all the information it requires.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I will make this suggestion, so far as I am concerned: I have not seen either the majority or minority report, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE], from my standpoint, has given expression to some extraordinary views of the law this evening, to which I can not accede. I for one would like to have the report for the purpose of examining it, to see the exact condition of the question.

The Dartmouth College case—if the gentleman from Missouri will indulge me a moment longer—to which reference has been made in this discussion, is not the recognized law of the country to-day as applied to this class of questions. It has not been so regarded since the decision was rendered by the Supreme Court in that celebrated case.

The current of authority in this country to day is that no legislative body, I care not whether it be the Congress of the United States or the legislature of a State, can so bind the people. The current of authority is that the created can never be greater than the creator; that the stream can not rise higher than its source. In other words, the people in this country are supreme, and no legislative body can enact a law which will give to a person or a corporation vested rights that will bind the people hand and foot in the manner suggested by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PETERS. I believe I am entitled to the floor.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Allow me to ask a single question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas has been recognized.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Illinois wished to ask a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Kansas to yield?

Mr. PETERS. I have not yielded.

Mr. DOCKERY. I was about to suggest that I would yield to the gentleman from Illinois sufficient additional time out of mine, and then let the gentleman from Kansas go on.

Mr. PETERS. I ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] if he intends the argument to proceed further to-night? I will state to him that I shall not be able to finish my argument by 5 o'clock.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am entirely content to agree to what may be the pleasure of the gentleman from Kansas, if he does not desire to proceed at this time.

Mr. PETERS. I should not desire to begin my remarks if I can not finish them to-night.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand the gentleman to say that he does not at this time desire to proceed.

Mr. PETERS. Because I will not be able to conclude before 5 o'clock.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I move that the House do now adjourn.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 5352) to grant an American register to the German-built bark Nordstjernen.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER].

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman withdraws the motion to adjourn, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PETERS. I ask if the gentleman from New York can take me off the floor in order to make a motion to adjourn. I am willing, however, to yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] to make that motion.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move that the House adjourn, but yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER].

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman, having moved to adjourn, yields the floor, it belongs to the Chair to recognize gentlemen.

Mr. DOCKERY. I withdraw the motion.

MILITARY AND POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

Mr. RAYNER. I move that next Wednesday be specially assigned for the consideration of the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. The House to-day has postponed the consideration of another bill to that day.

Mr. RAYNER. I will say Tuesday.

Mr. DUNHAM. Why not Saturday?

Mr. RAYNER. This bill involves very nice and complicated principles of law, and should not be argued without a full opportunity to investigate. I have not seen either the majority or the minority report; and I move, therefore, that the consideration of the bill be specially assigned for Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent. The gentleman can move to postpone the consideration of the bill to a day certain.

Mr. DOCKERY. As I stated at the beginning of the discussion, there was no purpose on our side to take a vote on the bill to-day. Of course the discussion has to begin at some time. The gentleman from Maryland will have an opportunity before it is renewed to obtain the report and acquaint himself with the issues on which he may desire to present his views to the House. We will call up the bill for renewed discussion as soon as we can do it under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland moves to postpone the consideration of this bill until Tuesday next.

Mr. RAYNER. I withdraw the motion if it is understood that the bill takes its place on the House Calendar and will not be called up to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. If the House adjourns to-day pending the consideration of this bill, it will come up on Saturday immediately after the hour for the consideration of bills, being the only unfinished business of the House Calendar.

Mr. RAYNER. Then I renew my motion.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House bills of the Senate of the following titles; which were read twice, and referred to the committees indicated:

CHOCTAW COAL AND RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (S. 1346) to authorize the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, that is a Senate bill. A similar bill was referred to the House Committee on Indian Affairs and unanimously reported by that committee with one slight change, in reference to the limitation of the time within which the road should be built. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to have this bill considered at this time. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Minnesota, be, and the same is hereby, invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, owning, equipping, operating, using, and maintaining a railway and telegraph and telephone line through the Indian Territory, beginning at a point on Red River (the southern boundary line) at the bluff known as Rocky Cliff, in the Indian Territory, and running thence by the most feasible and practicable route through the said Indian Territory to a point on the east boundary line, immediately contiguous to the west boundary line of Polk or Sevier Counties, in the State of Arkansas; also, a branch line of railway to be constructed from the most suitable point on said main line for obtaining a feasible and practicable route in a northwesterly direction to the leased coal veins of said Choctaw Coal and Railway Company in Tobucksey County, Choctaw Nation, with the right to construct, use, and maintain such tracks, turnouts, branches, and sidings and extensions as said company may deem it in their interest to construct along and upon the right of way and depot grounds herein provided for.

SEC. 2. That said corporation is authorized to take and use for all purposes of railway, and for no other purpose, a right of way 100 feet in width through said Indian Territory for said main line and branch of the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company; and to take and use a strip of land 200 feet in width, with a length of 3,000 feet, in addition to right of way, for stations, for every 10 miles of road, with the right to use such additional ground where there are heavy cuts or fills as may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the road-bed, not exceeding 100 feet in width on each side of said right of way, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill: Provided, That no more than said addition of land shall be taken for any one station: Provided further, That no parts of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be leased or sold by the company, and they shall not be used except in such manner and for such purposes only as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railroad, telegraph, and telephone lines; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used such portion shall revert to the nation or tribe of Indians from which the same shall be taken.

SEC. 3. That before said railway shall be constructed through any lands held by individual occupants according to the laws, customs, and usages of any of the Indian nations or tribes through which it may be constructed, full compensation shall be made to such occupants for all property to be taken or damage done by reason of the construction of such railway. In case of failure to make amicable settlement with any occupant, such compensation shall be determined by the appraisement of three disinterested referees, to be appointed, one (who shall act as chairman) by the President, one by the chief of the nation to which said occupant belonged, and one by said railway company, who, before entering upon the duties of their appointment, shall take and subscribe before a district judge, clerk of a district court, or United States commissioner, an oath that they will faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of their appointment, which oath, duly certified, shall be returned with their award to, and filed with, the Secretary of the Interior within sixty days from the completion thereof; and a majority of said referees shall be competent to act in case of the absence of a member, after due notice. And upon the failure of either party to make such appointment within thirty days after the appointment made by the President, the vacancy shall be filled by the district judge of the court held at Fort Smith, Ark., or by the district judge of the northern district of Texas, upon the application of the other party. The chairman of said board shall appoint the time and place for all hearings within the nation to which said occupant belongs. Each of said referees shall receive for his services the sum of $4 per day for each day they are engaged in the trial of any case submitted to them under this act, with mileage at 5 cents per mile. Witnesses shall receive the usual fees allowed by the courts of said nations. Costs, including compensation of the referees, shall be made a part of the award, and be paid by such railroad company. In case the referees can not agree, then any two of them are authorized to make the award. Either party being dissatisfied with the finding of the referees shall have the right, within ninety days after the making of the award and notice of the same, to appeal by original petition to the district court held at Fort Smith, Ark., or the district court for the northern district of Texas, which court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the subject-matter of said petition according to the laws of the State in which the same shall be heard provided for determining the damage when property is taken for railroad purposes. If upon the hearing of said appeal the judgment of the court shall be for a larger sum than the award of the referees, the costs of said appeal shall be adjudged against the railway company. If the judgment of the court shall be for the same sum as the award of the referees, then the costs shall be adjudged against the appellant. If the judgment of the court shall be for a smaller sum than the award of the referees, then the costs shall be adjudged against the party claiming damages. When proceedings have been commenced in court the railway company shall pay double the amount of the award into court to abide the judgment thereof, and then have the right to enter upon the property sought to be condemned and proceed with the construction of the railroad.

SEC 4. That said railway company shall not charge the inhabitants of said Territory a greater rate of freight than the rate authorized by the laws of the States of Arkansas and Texas for services and transportation of the same kind: Provided, That passenger rates on said railway shall not exceed 3 cents per mile. Congress hereby reserves the right to regulate the charges for freight and passengers on said railway and messages on said telegraph and telephone lines until a State government or governments shall exist in said Teritory within the limits of which said railway, or a part thereof, shall be located; and then such State government or governments shall be authorized to fix and regulate the cost of transportation of persons and freights within their respective limits by said railway; but Congress expressly reserves the right to fix and regulate at all times the cost of such transportation by said railway or said company whenever such transportation shall extend from one State into another or shall extend into more than one State: Provided, however, That the rate of such transportation of passengers, local or interstate, shall not exceed the rate above expressed: And provided further, That said railway company shall carry the mail at such prices as Congress may by law provide; and until such rate is fixed by law the Postmaster-General may fix the rate of compensation.

SEC. 5. That said railway company shall pay to the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of the particular nations or tribes through whose lands the said railway may be located, the sum of $50, in addition to compensation provided for in this act, for property taken and damages done to individual occupants by the construction of the railway, for each mile of railroad that it may construct in said Territory, said payments to be made in installments of $500 as each 10 miles of road is graded: Provided, That if the general council of either of the nations or tribes through whose lands said railway may be located shall, within four months after the filing of maps of definite location as set forth in section 6 of this act, dissent from the allowance hereinbefore provided for, and shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior, then all compensation to be paid to such dissenting nation or tribe under the provisions of this act shall be determined as provided in section 3 for the determination of the compensation to be paid to the individual occupants of lands, with the right to appeal to the courts upon the same terms, conditions, and requirements as therein provided: Provided further, That the amount awarded or adjudged to be paid by said railway company for said dissenting nation or tribe shall be in lieu of the compensation that said nation or tribe would be entitled to receive under the foregoing provision. Said company shall also pay, so long as said Territory is owned and occupied by the Indians, to the Secretary of the Interior, the sum of $15 per annum for each mile of railway it shall construct in the said Territory. The money paid to the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this act shall be apportioned by him, in accordance with the laws and treaties now in force between the United States and said nations and tribes, according to the number of miles of railway that may be constructed by said railway company through their lands: Provided, That Congress shall have the right, so long as said lands are occupied and possessed by said nations and tribes, to impose such additional taxes upon said railroad as it may deem just and proper for their benefit; and any Territory or State hereafter formed, through which said railway shall have been established, may exercise the like power as to such part of said railway as may lie within its limits. Said railway company shall have the right to survey and locate its railway immediately after the passage of this act.

SEC. 6. That said company shall cause maps showing the route of its located lines through said Territory to be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and also to be filed in the office of the principal chief of each of the nations or tribes through whose lands said railway may be located; and after the filing of said maps no claim for a subsequent settlement and improvement upon the right of way shown by said maps shall be valid as against said company: Provided, That when a map showing any portion of said railway company's located line is filed as herein provided for, said company shall commence grading said located line within six months thereafter, or such location shall be void; and said location shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior in sections of 25 miles before construction of any such section shall be begun.

SEC. 7. That the officers, servants, and employés of said company necessary to the construction and management of said road shall be allowed to reside, while so engaged, upon such right of way, but subject to the provisions of the Indian intercourse laws and such rules and regulations as may be established by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with said intercourse laws.

SEC. 8. That the United States circuit and district courts for the western district of Arkansas and the northern district of Texas, and such other courts as may be authorized by Congress, shall have, without reference to the amount in controversy, concurrent jurisdiction over all controversies arising between said Choctaw Coal and Railway Company and the nations and tribes through whose territory said railway shall be constructed. Said courts shall have like jurisdiction, without reference to the amount in controvery, over all controversies arising between the inhabitants of said nations or tribes and said railway company; and the civil jurisdiction of said courts is hereby extended within the limits of said Indian Territory, without distinction as to citizenship of parties, so far as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. That said railway company shall build at least 100 miles of its railway in said Territory within three years after the passage of this act, and complete the main line of the same within said Territory within one year thereafter, or the rights herein granted shall be forfeited as to that portion not built; that said railroad company shall construct and maintain continually all road and highway crossings and necessary bridges over said railway wherever said roads and highways do now or may hereafter cross said railway's right of way, or may be by the proper authorities laid out across the same.

SEC. 10. That the said Choctaw Coal and Railway Company shall accept this right of way upon the express condition, binding upon itself, its successors or assigns, that they will neither aid, advise, nor assist in any effort looking towards the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Indians in their land, and will not attempt to secure from the Indian nations any further grant of land, or its occupancy, than is hereinbefore provided: Provided, That any violation of the condition mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

SEC. 11. That all mortgages executed by said railway company conveying any portion of its railroad, with its franchises, that may be constructed in said Indian Territory, shall be recorded in the Department of the Interior, and the record thereof shall be evidence and notice of their execution, and shall convey all rights and property of said company as therein expressed.

SEC. 12 That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act.

SEC. 13. That the right of way herein and hereby granted shall not be assigned or transferred in any form whatever prior to the construction and completion of the road, except as to mortgages or other liens that may be given or secured thereon to aid in the construction thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope there will be some explanation of the bill, especially as to its object. The bill provides for ascertaining the value of the property taken and occupied, and it allows an appeal to the district court; but, if I understand it correctly, it provides also that the railroad company shall pay $50 per mile for the land actually taken but not occupied. Now, whether that is a correct basis of valuation or not I am not prepared to say, but it seems to me that the land, in this strip 100 feet wide, and also in the strip 200 feet wide and 300 feet long for the stations, should be appraised in such manner as to secure to the Indians its full value. I suggest, therefore, to my friend having charge of the bill whether it would not be fairer that, as to the land taken and not occupied, $50 per mile should be made the minimum price, leaving the appraisers to appraise the actual value of the land taken, at a price, however, not less than $50 per acre.

Another point to which I wish to call attention is this: The bill seems to be designed not for a public, but for a private object. It appears to be simply a bill to enable this company to build a branch road to reach a coal mine. I hope my friend will explain that. I simply desire to understand the object of the bill, and I make these suggestions, reserving the right to object. The main point that I wish to raise is in reference to this branch road, called the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company. As to the through line, that stands upon a different footing, because it has already become the settled policy of the Government not to permit the Indian Territory to interfere with through travel from one section of the Union to another. This branch road, however, appears to be a private enterprise, and it seems to me that it is a measure that ought not to be authorized by Congress except with the consent of the Choctaw Nation; and inasmuch as the Choctaws and Chickasaws own this land in common I believe, the consent of both ought to be required.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, this bill is one that has been perfected by the concurrent action of the Interior Department and the House and Senate committees, and the effort has been to guard as well as possible the rights of the Indians, and to prevent certain fraudulent schemes and franchises that have been heretofore put through and sold by parties obtaining rights of way through the Indian Territory. The policy of the committee has been to encourage the building of railroads through that Territory, because we think it will tend to the civilization of the Indians, and we believe that that Territory should not be allowed to stand as an obstruction to the general progress. So far as the price, $50 a mile, is concerned, I believe that is what has been generally agreed upon as a fair valuation of the lands in that Territory that have been taken by railroad companies where they have taken a strip 100 feet wide, as provided for in this case. I do not know of any special reason for it, but I think that has been generally agreed upon, because it was supposed to be a fair valuation, and I know that it has met the approval of the Indian Office in the Interior Department. So far as this branch road to the coal-fields is concerned, I do not exactly see the force of the objection to granting the right of way.

If it is not practicable to build the main line to the coal-fields, I do not see why the public should be cut off from access to that coal. It seems to me that it is just as much within the power of Congress to grant this right of way as to grant any other right of way through the Territory, and so far as the consent of the tribes is concerned, these coal-fields belong to the Indians and can not be used without their consent.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEAVER. I understand that these coal-fields are in the Choctaw Nation?

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEAVER. And that they are really leased by this railroad company?

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEAVER. And that this is a proposition to condemn this right of way for this spur line 18 miles long. Therefore, it is a proposition to condemn land for the benefit of a corporation and not for the benefit of the public, because it is a private corporation that owns those coal-lands. I am not making objection to the bill, but I suggest to the gentleman the question whether we have the constitutional power to do that.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I do not see any trouble about the constitutional power if we have the right to condemn land for railroad purposes. This branch is to be a public road and is to be under the same limitations as to the rights of the public as the main line. There is no distinction on that point. This branch will be just as much a public highway, and the public will have a right to transport their property over it and to travel over it the same as over the main line.

Mr. McRAE. Is not the obtaining of this coal necessary to the running of the main line?

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. The obtaining of the coal from these coal-fields may be a matter of great importance to the public, and great benefits may accrue from it to the public. Coal has been very scarce this season in some portions of the country, and it may be a matter of public interest and concern to grant facilities for getting at this coal. I can see no objection either in the Constitution or in policy to granting to these people a right to build a railroad to this coal-mine. If the limitations upon the powers of the corporation in the use of this branch line were not the same as those which govern their use of the main line, the objection would be good, but the limitations in both cases are the same.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Yes, sir; two of them.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I will be content with one at this time. Is there any one petitioning for the passage of this bill except the railroad company?

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Yes, sir, a number of persons.

Mr. HOLMAN. The point of my objection was as to the principle upon which the value of this strip of land is to be ascertained. I think myself that about $50, or some such sum, should be the minimum price, and that an appraisement should be made to ascertain whether there is any value in the strip of land beyond that amount.

That is one point of objection which I had, but I shall be compelled to waive that, inasmuch as it is the fact that we have passed bills heretofore containing similar provisions.

The other point is that this spur road, 18 miles long, which runs into the lands owned jointly by the Choctaws and Chickasaws, is really in the nature of a private enterprise; and this bill proposes to confer upon this corporation powers of eminent domain, so to speak, to appropriate the property of these Indians, subject to certain conditions, for the benefit of a purely private enterprise. This is the matter to which I wished particularly to call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, has the House entered regularly upon the consideration of this bill?

The SPEAKER. The House has not entered upon its consideration.

Mr. LANHAM. If there be any purpose to object to its consideration, I hope that will be made known at once in order to save time. I am not objecting to the bill myself.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] whether the rights of the Indians are fully and thoroughly protected.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. As well as they can be after years of consideration by both Houses of Congress and by the Interior Department.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The question being on ordering the bill to a third reading,

Mr. McRAE said: I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HITT, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Patrick Flynn.

SMITH R. MENSHON.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 360) for the relief of Smith R. Menshon, and to put the bill now on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Smith R. Menshon the sum of $308, for services rendered as custodian of a distillery warehouse in Lincoln County, Kentucky, seized by a United States revenue officer, and held for seventy-seven days by said Smith R. Menshon under the orders of said United States revenue officer.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Claims was read, as follows:

In lines 5 and 9 strike out "Menshon" and insert "Mershon."

Mr. SOWDEN. I call for the reading of the report.

The report of the Committee on Claims (by Mr. LANHAM) was read, as follows:

On the 2d day of September, 1878, Captain Taylor, deputy United States marshal under Hon. Robert Crittenden, United States marshal for the district of Kentucky, arrested William M. Ball for violating the internal-revenue law. On the same day, to wit, the 2d day of September, 1878, William Wilmore, deputy United States collector for the seventh Kentucky collection district, who claimed to be acting under direction of Col. S. A. Whitfield, United States revenue agent, seized the distillery warehouse of William M. Ball, in Lincoln County, Kentucky, and placed Smith R. Mershon in charge thereof, and he continued in charge thereof and exercised daily care therefor until the 29th of November, 1878, a period of seventy-seven days, when he was relieved from duty, William M. Ball having given bond.

The claimant gave his entire time to the care of said distillery warehouse, and was compelled to and did hire a horse on which to go back and forth from his home to the said warehouse.

The evidence of W. J. Wilmore, deputy collector for the district in which the warehouse was situated, shows that, by direction of Revenue Agent S. A. Whitfield, he seized the distillery of William M. Ball, in Lincoln County, Kentucky, and by direction of said revenue agent turned said warehouse over to the claimant, Smith R. Mershon, for safe-keeping.

When claimant was relieved from duty he presented his account for $308, which is $4 per day for seventy-seven days he was engaged, being the amount usually allowed a revenue store-keeper, to the collector of the seventh district, and this claim was approved both by the collector of the seventh district and by Hon. W. J. Landram, collector of the eighth district, in which Lincoln County, the county of his residence, was soon thereafter placed.

There is no fund in the revenue department out of which this claim can be paid, but as the services were efficiently rendered in good faith by claimant, under the orders of a United States revenue officer, your committee believe that Smith R. Mershon should be paid $308, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

Wherever the word "Menshon" appears in the printed bill let it be struck out and "Mershon" inserted.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCREARY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. McCREARY. I move to amend the title so as to conform to the amendment already made in the body of the bill, by striking out "Menshon" and inserting "Mershon."

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection that amendment will be made.

MRS. ESTHER B. HAYFORD.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar, for immediate consideration, the bill (H. R. 369) granting a pension to Mrs. Esther B. Hayford.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Esther B. Hayford, widow of Orlando Hayford, deceased, late a private in Company G, First Regiment of Maine Cavalry Volunteers.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, the report in this case is somewhat lengthy, and unless there is a call for the reading of it, I will state the substance of this bill, which has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The soldier whose widow the bill proposes to pension was severely wounded during the war, and subsequently died. When the widow applied for a pension under the pension laws a question arose between the medical experts as to whether the soldier had died in consequence of the wounds received in the service or from some other cause. The attending physician testified that in his judgment the soldier's death had been in consequence of those wounds. The medical experts at the Pension Office, following unquestionably the mere technicalities of the matter, decided that there was doubt respecting this point, and therefore the claim was rejected. But the Committee on Invalid Pensions, upon examining fully the whole evidence, decided that the probabilities point clearly to the conclusion that death resulted from the soldier's wounds, and therefore the committee unanimously reported the bill.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DINGLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INEFFICIENT POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. LANHAM. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. There is a privileged matter before the House.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I ask the Clerk to read the report which I send to the desk.

The following resolution, introduced January 23, 1888, by Mr. PERKINS, was read:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to inquire into and inform the House of Representatives of the cause and foundation of the grievances complained of in the subjoined editorial taken from the Capital, a daily newspaper published at Topeka, Kans., under date of January 11, 1888, and also to inform the House whether the almost universal complaint prevailing in the West against the present unsatisfactory mail service results from the appointment of inexperienced and incapable employés or from inadequate and insufficient appropriations to meet the wants of the Post-Office Department and the needs of the people, or whether it results from other causes, and if so, what.

[From the Capital, official State paper.]

THE MAIL SERVICE OF KANSAS.

Never at any time in the history of Kansas has there been in the United States mail service such an utter disregard of the rights of the people as at this time. Notwithstanding the great increase in population, the stupid attempt on the part of the Administration to make a record for economy has cut down the clerical force necessary to properly distribute the mails at large offices and in the mail trains, and it is consequently too small to do the work. Tons of mail matter pass through Kansas on the trains westward that can not be disposed of by the force allowed by the Post-Office Department. The result is that it is carried past the towns where it belongs, and brought back after two or three days' absence in Colorado or New Mexico. It is not the fault of the railway clerks, because the Department asks of them a task that it is not possible for them to perform. The people of Kansas have been patient, and the press has been lenient over this Democratic folly. Mails going west are so heavy that men working to the extent of their strength, doing more than double duty, can not handle them.

Appeals to the Department at Washington for adequate help to take care of this important public service are unheeded. The railway mail service through Kansas has become criminally neglected, and it is time this attempt of the Democratic party to make capital by a show of false economy should be brought to the attention of Congress. In reply to continued appeals for the Department to send a man to examine the railway mail service in Kansas, a man came, and overlooking the tons of mail that could not be distributed in time to be thrown off at the towns where it belongs, he succeeded in having two or three clerks fined for not having the regulation gold-lace band on their caps, and thus civil-service reform was indorsed and the record the party for economy maintained.

The accompanying report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, having had under consideration the accompanying resolution, report the same back favorably, with the following amendment:

Add to the end of the resolution the words "and also that the Postmaster-General be directed to further inquire and inform the House of Representatives what, if any, improvements or extensions have been made in the mail service of the West during the last three years."

Your committee, in reporting back this resolution, do not wish to be understood as indorsing the statement of the resolution that there is an "almost universal complaint prevailing in the West against the present unsatisfactory mail service," deeming that a matter within the scope of the proposed investigation.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the amendment proposed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, though I think it unnecessary, because I believe that the resolution as offered by myself contemplates the obtaining of the information suggested by the amendment. In other words, as the author of this resolution, I desire that the House shall be put in possession of all the facts pertaining to this railway mail service. If the inefficiency of that service is the fault of the Administration, we desire to know it; or if it is the fault of Congress in consequence of inadequate appropriations we still desire to know it. Whatever the facts may be, we desire to have them established.

This resolution was offered on the 23d of last month, and under the rules of the House it should have been reported back within one week from that time. I merely suggest that in this matter the committee has been almost as unsatisfactory as the mail service. But I hope that when we get the facts we shall be enabled to act intelligently.

This resolution was not offered as a political resolution; and when the information which is asked for is furnished to the House in answer to the resolution, when it is adopted, I will attempt to show that the complaints are not political in their character, but are widespread and real. I know that in my section of the country both Republicans and Democrats unite in their complaints of the inefficiency of the postal service, and they want to know the reason for it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose at this time to discuss the merits of the proposition offered by the gentleman from Kansas. I simply desire to say that the Post-Office Department, as well as the Post-Office Committee and this side of the House, agree in desiring the fullest and freest investigation of any complaints which may be made in reference to this matter, and I believe that the result of the investigation will show that the mail service is now as efficient and satisfactory as at any prior time in its history.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from Illinois will permit me to move an amendment before the resolution is adopted.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana for that purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is stated in this resolution as a matter of fact that there is universal complaint of the mismanagement of the postal system throughout the West. That is asserted in this resolution as a matter of fact. I do not think gentlemen should be called upon to vote on any such proposition.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. If you will notice the report of the committee——

Mr. HOLMAN. I did notice the report of the committee, but we are not voting on the report of the committee. We are voting on the adoption of the resolution, and I am not willing to say, so far as my action is concerned, that there is any such universal complaint of the mismanagement of the postal system. In the section of the West which I have the honor in part to represent the postal system is admirably conducted and the postal facilities are equal if not superior to what they have been in former years. This is the experience of gentlemen in the country from which I come, and I believe throughout the country the postal system was never better conducted than it has been in recent years. I understand the Post-Office Department is in favor of the widest inquiry; and in order that members may not be compelled to vote on the adoption of the resolution that the system is not well conducted in the West, I move to insert the word "alleged," because this is an allegation on the part of gentlemen on this floor, and the resolution should provide "whereas it is alleged that there is dissatisfaction," etc.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I do not object to that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is not in order until the amendment of the committee has been disposed of.

Mr. ROGERS. Let the resolution be again read.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. REED. Is the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana admissible?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so, as it relates to the postal service in the West.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now move to strike out the words "almost universally" and insert the word "alleged."

Mr. McMILLIN. That covers the amendment I wish to make. I do not think the resolution should be argumentative.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is entirely satisfactory to the mover of the resolution.

Mr. PERKINS. I think the amendment should only strike out the word "almost," as, in my judgment, it is a universal complaint that the postal system is mismanaged and inefficient. If the gentleman will modify his amendment in that way, I will accept it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment was agreed to; and the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROHIBITION.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a privileged motion. I send to the Clerk's desk four bills the titles of which I ask to be read, and which have been referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The petitions in support of those bills have been referred indiscriminately to the Committee on the District of Columbia and to the special Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic. Both committees have instructed me to ascertain from the Chair where these bills belong, and for that purpose I move that they be referred to the special Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

The SPEAKER. The titles of the bills will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1493) to prohibit the manufacture and sale of spirituous and intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 1748) to prevent the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 3385) to provide for the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 4959) to prohibit the manufacture and sale of spirituous and intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves to discharge the Committee on the District of Columbia from the further consideration of these bills, and refer them to the Select Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I will.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to ask if it is the desire of the Committee on the District of Columbia that this change of reference shall be made?

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. It is the opinion of that committee that the reference ought to be made under the rules.

Mr. TAULBEE. Has the gentleman any authority from that committee to say that such is the desire of the committee?

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to ask the Speaker if these bills ought not to be referred to the special Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic; and I am authorized by that committee to say that it is the prevailing sentiment of the committee they should be so referred.

Mr. REED. The House has already made the reference, and it certainly is a proper one under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to state that when a reference has been made of a subject to a committee, and it is desired to change it, if there be objection the Chair could not discharge the committee and change the reference. That can only be done by the House itself. It is, of course, frequently done by the Speaker, with the consent of the House, but that is the action of the House. If objection is made, of course it is a matter which the House itself must determine. In this case there is a question as to the proper committee, and the gentleman from Ohio moves a change of reference.

Mr. DINGLEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to ask if under the rules all proposed legislation that relates exclusively to the District of Columbia does not go to that committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair prefers not to make a decision upon the question until there is one before the House. The Chair will state that the rule to which the gentleman refers provides that all proposed legislation relating to the District of Columbia shall be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the resolutions which created the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic provided that all proposed legislation relating to the alcoholic liquor traffic should be referred to that committee, so that the legislation referred to here might, in the opinion of the Chair, be properly referred to either committee.

Mr. REED. But it has been already referred.

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. REED. If it has been referred by the House to the proper committee, who has the right to take it away from that committee?

The SPEAKER. It has been already several times decided that when a member rises on the floor and alleges that there has been an improper reference of a bill, and moves to correct it, such motion presents a privileged question for the determination of the House. This was settled in the Forty-fifth or Forty-sixth Congress, when a bill was referred improperly to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and the question was submitted to the House whether it did or did not present a question of privilege. It was submitted to the House by the Chair, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] being Speaker at the time, and it was then decided by the House that a question of privilege was presented.

Mr. LONG. But the Chair holds that there has been no improper reference in the present instance.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not. The Chair has stated that in its opinion it might be referred properly to either committee, but the Chair can not decide the question when it is raised in this form. After the House has referred a subject to a committee the Chair can not, without the consent of the House, discharge the committee from its consideration and refer it to another committee. Such a correction can only be made by the House itself.

Mr. LONG. But I understand there is nothing to correct here.

The SPEAKER. The House must determine that. If there is anything to be corrected it is the action of the House, not of the Chair; and the Chair can not undertake to correct the action of the House.

Mr. LONG. But in this case, as I understand it, there is nothing to be corrected.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to make a further parliamentary inquiry. While it is true that legislation relating to alcoholic liquor traffic goes to that committee, yet is it not also true that specific legislation relating to the District of Columbia goes to the Committee on the District of Columbia?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that this is a matter for the House to determine under the present circumstances. The motion is based upon the supposition that there is an erroneous reference of the bills, which presents a question for the determination of the House.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think it is proper to say——

Mr. LONG. I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONG. Is there any motion pending before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has submitted a motion.

Mr. LONG. Will the Chair be kind enough to state it?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio sent to the Clerk's desk several bills the titles of which have been read, and moved that the Committee on the District of Columbia be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I desire to state, as members of the House, or probably a majority of them, know, that there are a great many petitions coming from all parts of the United States, asking legislation upon the subject of alcoholic liquor traffic in the District of Columbia. Under the rules, many of these have been sent to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic and many others to the Committee on the District of Columbia. A great many bills relating to the subject have also been introduced, some of which have been referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and others to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

It is a matter of some consequence to let one committee have charge of this business, in order that all the material that comes here for or against the proposition may go to that committee and be considered by it.

Now, there is no question that the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic generally belongs to the select committee upon that subject. It is possible that the matter, so far as it relates to the District of Columbia, should go properly to that committee. But there is this consideration about it, that the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic has this one subject for its consideration. It is raised for that special purpose, and they are now hearing argument from a number of people interested in the subject, and are considering that question in all its bearings.

The Committee on the District of Columbia have a great many bills before them, probably several hundred—I do not know how many—and as is known by this House we do not have an opportunity to present our bills here and have them discussed, from day to day, like other committees. We have only one day, or possibly two days, in the month, and at the end of a particular day our business comes to an end, and must stand over.

This is a question of considerable importance to the people of this District. It is one about which there is a great difference of sentiment in this country. If it has to be dealt with by the District Committee the chances are that it will be the means of preventing a great deal of District legislation which it is of great importance to the people of the District should be considered.

Therefore, when the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic Committee undertook to take charge of this whole subject, as I think they properly can, the District Commitee moved by these considerations instructed the chairman of the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic Committee, who is also a member of the District Committee, to state to the House that it was the prevailing sentiment of the District Committee that this subject should go to the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic Committee in its entirety.

Mr. CANNON. I have listened carefully to the remarks of the chairman of the District Committee, and what he has said has convinced me that the District Committee ought to have this matter in charge, because it has, or it is understood will have, one-fifteenth of all the time of the House from now to the adjournment—two days in each month. I think the subject is more apt to be acted on by a committee having so much time than by any other.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman from Illinois is easily convinced; but I think his persuasion is on the wrong side of the question. He must have had his mind made up in advance.

Mr. DINGLEY. Will the gentleman from South Carolina permit me a question?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Certainly.

Mr. DINGLEY. My question is whether all the bills relating to the liquor traffic were not referred in the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and whether that committee did not report a bill to this House relating to the liquor traffic in this District?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I was not on the District Committee in the Forty-eighth Congress, and if my recollection serves me we did not in the Forty-ninth Congress report any such bill.

Mr. ROWELL. We reported a license bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. We may have reported a license bill, but not a prohibition bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. A license bill relates to the same subject.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I am not sure that we did report the license bill.

Mr. ROWELL. I think we did. At any rate we agreed to do it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I have no feeling about this matter at all, and I do not know what action the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic is likely to take. But I have no doubt there will be action taken by that committee. I believe they are not afraid to go on one side or the other.

Mr. DINGLEY. I am very glad to hear that.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman comes from a prohibition State, and can afford to be very brave, because his folks are all one way. But I want it to be distinctly understood, so far as the District Committee is concerned, if the bills on this subject are left in their charge they will give them a chance like all other bills. We think the subject properly goes to the other committee, but we are ready to abide by the judgment of the House.

Mr. BLAND. If this bill does not go to the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic I would like to inquire what does go there? For in this matter Congress has no jurisdiction over the people outside of the District. This committee having been appointed, I suppose was appointed for a purpose, and that purpose only relates to the territory over which Congress has jurisdiction. Congress can legislate in this matter for the District, but has no jurisdiction with regard to it in the States. Hence, if these bills are not to go to the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, I think it is manifest the committee ought to be abolished.

Mr. LONG. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONG. Is this question debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not strictly so under the rule. No proposition to refer is debatable except as to bills and resolutions which have been reported from a committee, and this motion is not a report.

Mr. LONG. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL].

The House divided; and there were—ayes 117, noes 20.

So (no further count being called for) the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic be discharged from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 1472, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. That bill relates to special taxes upon liquor dealers under the internal-revenue laws; and if there be no objection it will be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. TAULBEE. I object to that reference, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivisions 4 and 5 of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes of 1878 are hereby amended by adding to the end of each the following words:

"Provided, That no person or persons shall be granted a special-tax stamp or authority to deal in intoxicating liquors by retail, until such person or persons shall have first procured a license from the local authorities of the town, village, or city in which the said person or persons propose to carry on the said business of retailing, and until such person or persons shall have also procured a license from the county and State authorities having legal jurisdiction thereof; and that the collectors of internal revenue shall require, as a condition-precedent to the granting of a special-tax stamp or authority to retail dealers in liquors, such dealer to file in the office of such collector a proper license from such town, village, or city, and a proper license from the county and State in which said retail dealer in liquors proposes to carry on said business, where such town, village, city, State, or county requires such business to be carried on under license; and where the laws of the State, county, town, village, or city in which said retail dealer proposes to carry on his said business prohibit the retail of spirituous liquors, then the said collectors of internal revenue shall not issue such special-tax stamp or authority. But nothing herein shall be construed as affecting manufacturers or any Territory or District under exclusive legislative control of the Congress of the United States."

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make this observation with reference to that bill. I concede that the suggestion of the Chair that this bill relates to raising revenue is correct, but if it does not relate also directly to the alcoholic liquor traffic I am unable to conceive of any bill that would relate to that subject. I would have no objection to its reference to the Committee on Ways and Means but for the fact that that committee is well known to be pressed with work so that probably it would be unable to report this bill. I believe the bill will commend itself to any committee, and the reason I incline to insist on its remaining with the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic is the fact that that committee is not presumed to be so crowded with business as to be unable to find time to consider a bill of this character. I am extremely anxious that we shall have a report on the bill, and for that reason I would like to insist that it shall remain with the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

Mr. PERKINS. That committee has not got it. Move that it be referred to the committee.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I wish to object to any further discussion of this proposition unless it is in order.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order. The question is on discharging the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic from the further consideration of this bill and referring it to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MILLS. On that I ask a division. This bill should go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 95, noes 46.

So (no further count being demanded) the motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD BRIDGE AT MOUNT CARMEL, ILL.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The report was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 6, 1888.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, requested to furnish the House with information touching an alleged obstruction of the Wabash River at a point opposite to the city of Mount Carmel, Ill., by the construction and maintenance, without authority of law, by the Louisville, Evansville and St. Louis Railroad Company, of a railroad bridge.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to whom was referred the foregoing resolution, have considered the same, and report it back to the House, recommending its passage.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. JONES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANDREW D. WHITE.

Mr. COX. With the permission of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] I ask by unanimous consent to call up from the Speaker's table joint resolution S. R. 50, appointing Andrew D. White a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, and to put it upon its passage.

There was no objection, and the joint resolution was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the existing vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class "other than members of Congress" shall be filled by the appointment of Andrew D. White, of the State of New York, in place of Asa Gray, deceased.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar. And pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I move that the committee shall pass over for this day the bills which are found upon page 10 of the Calendar. They are the Court of Claims reports made in the Forty-ninth Congress which have been brought forward. That will enable us to proceed to the consideration of the bills reported at this Congress. We have already consumed two hours of the private-bill day. I think my motion is really in the interest of the dispatch of business.

Mr. McCOMAS. On the last private-bill day these Court of Claims reports made in the Forty-ninth Congress, and which have been brought forward at this session, were passed over, and now we propose that they shall be passed over again. The Speaker of the House has decided that they are first to be considered, and I think, under the circumstances, instead of passing them over, the remainder of this day should be devoted to their consideration.

Mr. LANHAM. I will say that there are now pending before the Committee on Rules two distinct propositions in relation to the Court of Claims reports brought over from the Forty-ninth Congress—one involving their proper reference and the other giving them priority. I am advised that these resolutions have not been considered by the Committee on Rules, and that it is probable they will be by next private-bill day, and some action will be recommended.

The SPEAKER. A member of the Committee on Rules has been called away from the city, or otherwise there would have been a meeting of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. McCOMAS. These Court of Claims reports are entitled to priority of consideration, as the Speaker has already decided, and I do not think they should be postponed every private-bill day; but as the gentleman from Texas thinks some resolution of procedure will be adopted by next private-bill day I will not insist upon their consideration to-day.

Mr. LANHAM. I am not authorized to speak for the Committee on Rules, but simply state that the propositions I indicate are pending before that committee and it is likely action will be taken upon them before next private-bill day.

Mr. McCOMAS. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas that the Court of Claims cases be passed over for to-day?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

C. M. BRIGGS.

The first bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4909) for the relief of the estate of C. M. Briggs, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims is hereby given, subject to the proviso hereinafter mentioned, like jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim of the legal representatives of C. M. Briggs, deceased, for the proceeds of 455 bales of cotton, now in the Treasury of the United States, alleged to have been owned, in whole or in part, by said Briggs, as is given to said court by the acts of March 12, 1863, and July 2, 1864, upon petition to be filed in said court at any time within two years from the passage of this act, any statute of limitations to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, however, That unless the said court shall, on a preliminary inquiry, find that said Briggs was in fact loyal to the United States Government, and that the assignment to him hereinafter mentioned was bona fide, the court shall not have jurisdiction of the case, and the same shall, without further proceedings, be dismissed: And provided further, That if the court shall find that the alleged assignment from one Morehead to said Briggs, of date April 18, 1862, under which said Briggs claimed said cotton, was intended only as security to said Briggs for indebtedness, and against contingent liabilities assumed by him for said Morehead, judgment shall be rendered for such portion of the proceeds of said cotton as will satisfy the debts and claims of said Briggs, to secure which said assignment was given.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. STONE, of Kentucky) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the legal representatives of the estate of C. M. Briggs, deceased, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report:

The facts out of which this claim for relief arises will be found stated in Senate report of the Committee on Claims (No. 1356), first session Forty-ninth Congress, a copy of which is hereto appended.

Your committee adopt said report as their own, and report herewith a bill and recommend its passage.

[Senate Report No. 1356, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3328) for the relief of the estate of C. M. Briggs, deceased, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report:

That in April, 1862, Charles S. Morehead, ex-governor of Kentucky, resided at Louisville, in that State, and that C. M. Briggs, the deceased claimant, also resided at Louisville.

Morehead and Briggs had been partners in the practice of the law, and the latter was, in August, 1862, largely the creditor of the former for money loaned, indorsements paid, partnership moneys used by said Morehead beyond his share, moneys advanced in paying indorsements made for Morehead, and the said Briggs was, moreover, contingently liable on indorsements then existing.

The amount of the indebtedness is not shown, although it is stated in the affidavits before the committee to have been "many thousands of dollars."

Morehead owned in 1862, and had owned for some time prior thereto, two plantations in the county of Washington, near Egg's Point, Miss., on which, in 1862, was a crop of cotton. In this condition of affairs Morehead executed and delivered, on April 18, 1862, to C. M. Briggs the following instrument:

"For and in consideration of money loaned and advanced heretofore by C. M. Briggs, and further valuable considerations, by way of suretyship for me by said Briggs, I hereby sell and transfer to said C. M. Briggs all of the cotton on my two plantations in Mississippi, near Egg's Point and Greenville. Said cotton so sold embraces all that I may have, baled and unbaled, gathered and ungathered. This is intended to cover all cotton that I have now, or may have this year, on said two plantations, supposed to be about two thousand bales.

"C. S. MOREHEAD."

This paper itself, and the affidavits before the committee, may perhaps be fairly said to leave it an open question whether it was intended as an absolute sale to Briggs of the cotton, free of all equity of redemption in Morehead, or was intended to be a security for advances theretofore made and liabilities theretofore incurred by said Briggs by his indorsements for the benefit of said Morehead, and then existing, out of which the said Briggs was to reimburse himself, rendering, that done, the surplus to Mr. Morehead. The quantity of cotton, the utter indefiniteness as to the amount due from Morehead to Briggs, together with the fact that part of it was only by way of contingent liability, tend very strongly to show that the transfer was for purposes of security; but whether an absolute sale or as security only, is quite immaterial in the view taken by the committee as to the justice of the claim of Briggs upon the cotton and its proceeds, to the extent at least of the advances made at the date of the instrument, and thereafter paid by Briggs for Morehead.

Ex-Governor Morehead (who died about 1869), the committee is satisfied, so far as it has any information upon the subject, was a disloyal man at the time this instrument was executed, and afterwards. He was arrested by the Government and confined in one of the prisons; but loyal or disloyal, the committee know of no reason why he was not competent in law to own the cotton, and to make a valid assignment of it to Briggs, either absolutely in payment of a debt, or by way of security.

The staunch loyalty of Briggs to the Government from the beginning of the war is abundantly vouched by men distinguished for service to the Union. General Rousseau, ex-Attorney-General James Speed, W. D. Gallagher, and Joseph H. Humes, late paymaster United States Army, vouch for his loyalty, and among the papers is found a letter of date of February 20, 1863, to Hon. Salmon P. Chase, Secretary of the Treasury, from George D. Prentice, in which it is stated:

"Mr. Briggs is perfectly reliable, and you may be assured that no trust confided to him will be abused or transcended. He is and always has been a devoted Union man. If any reference be necessary I would suggest that Hon. J. J. Crittenden and Hon. Henry Grider have known him since boyhood."

The said Briggs made repeated attempts to obtain the cotton, but was prevented by military orders and the then condition of affairs.

On the 7th day of March, 1863, under orders from General Grant, Captain Osband, of the Fourth Illinois, with three steamers, proceeded to Worthington's Landing, directed to capture cotton and forage for the use of the Army; and at such landing he seized 2,180 bales of cotton, the property of divers people, loaded it upon the steamer Empress, and carried it to Memphis, Tenn., where it was by proper authority turned over to Capt. G. L. Fort, assistant quartermaster of the United States, and by him sold, and the net proceeds paid into the public Treasury under the act of March 12, 1863, to be held by the Government in trust for the owners.

In the cotton seized and sold were 455 bales of the cotton grown on the Morehead plantations, and embraced in the bill of sale to Briggs.

Other owners of the cotton taken at the time who have presented their claims have been paid.

If Briggs had known the fact, and could have established his ownership of the cotton under the acts of Congress of 1863 and 1864, he could have, of course, recovered the proceeds, or such part thereof as the court found him entitled to. Lapse of time has not, except technically, made any change in the title to the proceeds. If the bill should become a law, and the legal representatives of Briggs shall be able to establish his loyalty and his absolute ownership of the 455 bales of cotton, of course they will be entitled to recover the entire proceeds of that cotton. If, on the other hand, it should turn out that the transfer to Briggs was colorable, and a make-shift to enable a disloyal man to save to himself, through the use of the name of a loyal friend, his property, that ends the case, and the money remains in the Treasury. If it should be found by the court that Briggs was loyal, that Morehead was indebted to him, and that the assignment of the cotton was as security only, then the judgment should be in favor of the estate of Briggs for so much of the proceeds of the cotton as will pay the debt for which it was security, and the surplus, if any there shall be, will remain in the Treasury.

Mr. CULBERSON. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill add:

"Provided, That such judgment shall not be paid out of the general fund in the Treasury arising from the sale of captured and abandoned property, but shall be paid out of the special fund charged to and accounted for by Capt. G. L. Fort, assistant quartermaster at Memphis, arising from the sale of 2,209 bales of cotton received by him with which claimant's cotton was intermingled, said claimant to receive only the proportion his cotton bears to the net proceeds accounted for by said Fort."

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to explain the reasons for offering that amendment to this bill.

When the bill of which this is a copy was before the House in the Forty-ninth Congress, I opposed its passage upon the ground, as I then understood it, that the proposition was to pay this applicant the amount of money claimed in the bill out of the trust funds in the Treasury, which represent the proceeds of the sale of captured and abandoned property.

I was misled on that occasion by the report of the Committee on War Claims, and I wish to state that the Committee on War Claims of this Congress have incorporated the same mistake in their report which was embodied in the report accompanying a similar bill in the Forty-ninth Congress.

I send to the desk and ask the Clerk to read the paragraph I have marked in this report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On the 7th day of March, 1863, under the orders of General Grant, Captain Osband, of the Fourth Illinois, with three steamers, proceeded to Worthington's Landing, directed to capture cotton and forage for use of the Army; and at said landing he seized 2,180 bales of cotton, the property of divers people, loaded it upon the steamer Empress, and carried it to Memphis, Tenn., where it was by proper authority turned over to Capt. G. L. Fort, assistant quartermaster of the United States, and by him sold and the net proceeds paid into the public Treasury, under the act of March 12, 1863, to be held by the Government in trust for the owners.

In the cotton seized and sold were 455 bales of the cotton grown on the Morehead plantations, and embraced in the bill of sale to Briggs.

Mr. CULBERSON. Now it will be seen, from the statement therein contained, that this bill proceeds upon the idea that the proceeds of the cotton were turned into the Treasury and credited to this trust fund. The facts of the case are, as I have found on investigation, that this lot of cotton, consisting of 2,180 bales, was seized by order of General Grant on the 7th day of March, 1863, five days prior to the passage of the act of March 12, 1863, which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint agents of the Treasury to receive and sell captured and abandoned property and turn the proceeds into the Treasury to the credit of whomsoever the property belonged.

Now, this lot of cotton, or the proceeds of the cotton claimed in this bill, 455 bales, belonged to this lot of 2,180 bales seized by order of General Grant. That cotton was sent to Memphis, Tenn., and turned over to Captain Fort, the quartermaster of the United States Army, and he carried upon his accounts the amount of the proceeds of the sale of that cotton as of Memphis.

The cotton never was in the hands of the Treasury agent, never was sold by him, and the proceeds of the sale never went into the Treasury to the credit of this fund.

These facts were judicially ascertained by the Court of Claims in Douglas vs. The United States, Douglas having claimed a portion of the proceeds of the sale of this lot of cotton; and I ask the Clerk to read the statement of facts found by the court in the fourteenth volume of the Reports of the Court of Claims. Douglas I understand to be one of the heirs of Judge Douglas, who claimed that the cotton was seized upon his plantation.

The Clerk read as follows:

The claimant's cotton was intermingled with other cotton at the place of capture and its identity lost. The mass of intermingled cotton, amounting to 2,209 bales, was brought out on the steamer Empress and turned over to Capt. G. L. Fort, assistant quartermaster, at Memphis, about the 1st of April, 1863. By losses arising from the damaged condition of the cotton and the rebaling of a portion of it the mass was reduced to 2,111 bales, and was sold by Captain Fort in April, 1863, for $429,663.39. This money was expended by Captain Fort in the ordinary expenses of the Quartermaster Department, and was subsequently charged to him by the accounting officers of the Treasury as money which had been received by him under appropriations of Congress for the use and purposes of the Quartermaster Department, and was accounted for by him as such.

Subsequently the mass of cotton before referred to was charged by officers of the Treasury Department with the expenses of its transportation, so that the gross proceeds of $429,663.39 received by Captain Fort are to be reduced to $421,063.39, which the court, on an investigation and adjustment of the accounts, finds as the amount of the net proceeds of the mass of 2,209 bales.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is sufficient.

I concede the fact that the proceeds of the sale of this lot of cotton constructively were placed in the Treasury, but that these proceeds were not placed to the credit of the captured and abandoned property fund. It is proper for me to state, perhaps, in this connection, that there are some half a dozen or more millions of dollars in the United States Treasury now, which the Supreme Court have declared to be trust funds, and that the Government of the United States holds that fund for the benefit of the owners of property which was sold and the proceeds placed in the Treasury. Over $20,000,000 since the act of 1863 was passed have been so placed in the Treasury, and of that amount over a half dozen millions of dollars remain.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state again the amount remaining?

Mr. CULBERSON. Something over $6,000,000.

In order to emphasize my position on this question, I desire to say that I believe nearly the entire amount now remaining in the Treasury as a credit to this fund, and belonging to this trust fund, belongs to that unfortunate class of people at the South who were disloyal; and since the Supreme Court of the United States have decided that this money belongs to that unfortunate class, notwithstanding that they participated in the rebellion, and the President's proclamation of 1868 restored them to all of their rights of property, and the Government of the United States not having confiscated this money, but having placed it in the Treasury to the credit of the owner of the property, whomsoever he might be, I have struggled for years to open the door of the statute of limitations and let these poor and unfortunate people have their money.

Now, I objected to this bill in the Forty-ninth Congress, because, as will be seen from the report in the case, it proposed to take this sacred fund, this fund that belongs to the unfortunate people at the South, to pay this claim, when in point of fact the proceeds of the cotton belonging to Morehead or to Briggs, as the case may be, never went into the Treasury at all. It did go into the hands of a quartermaster of the Army, and was expended by him in some way for the use of the Army; and I have no objection, so far as I am individually concerned, that Congress shall direct this money to be paid to him or that the Court of Claims may find, if they see proper, that the Government is responsible for the claim. But for one I desire to say I do not think that however Congress may feel upon that subject as to turning this money out of the Treasury, this trust money, this money that the Supreme Court declares belongs to the people of the South, and which they could get any day if Congress would open the bar of the statute of limitations, and let us sue under the act of 1863—however they may feel in that respect, I protest for one against the fund being dwarfed and reduced by appropriations made for claims which did not fall within the law of 1863.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. As I understand, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARUTH], who introduced the bill, is perfectly willing to accept this amendment, and so informed the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] before it was offered; so that the speech just made by the gentleman from Texas was not so much to advocate his amendment as to express his position on the captured and abandoned property fund.

Now, I want to say to this committee that I have introduced a bill, and the Committee on War Claims have instructed me unanimously to report that bill to the House, asking Congress to remove the bar and allow people who have any claim to this captured and abandoned property fund to go to the Court of Claims and make proof of their right to it. All the statements of the gentleman from Texas as to how this fund arose are true and are all set forth in the report and the decision in the case of the heirs of Douglas against the United States. Part of the property belonged to Mr. Douglas and his heirs recovered it. Other parties who had cotton in the same lot have recovered the money for their cotton.

Two years ago a bill was introduced and was passed by the House allowing Briggs to go to the Court of Claims. It was sent to the Senate; in the Senate it was amended, and it came back to the House too late to be reached for concurrence in the amendment. This bill is introduced in this session in exact accordance with the amended bill which passed the Senate. The report which we make to the House is exactly the report which was made to the Senate. So that all the objections, it seems to me, which could have been brought against this claim have been removed. The fact that this money is due to somebody certainly exists, because the Supreme Court of the United States have decided cases where money was paid to parties who made claims exactly like this.

In this bill the question of Morehead's loyalty is entirely removed from consideration. It provides if any sort of attempt was made to cover up anything that Mr. Briggs shall not recover. It provides that the transaction shall be shown to have been straight and correct, and that the transfer of this property from Mr. Briggs to Mr. Morehead was made in good faith to pay the debt Morehead owed to Briggs. So that every one of the objections presented up to this time has been removed, and I hope the committee will recommend to the House the passage of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me a question?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. When was the property taken? I did not understand that from the report of the committee.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. On the 7th of March, 1863.

Mr. PERKINS. The assignment to Briggs seems to have been made in 1862?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. PERKINS. Was this the crop of 1862 that was taken?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Yes, as I understand it. I can not say whether it was all of the crop of 1862.

Mr. ROWELL. I desire to offer the following amendment:

In line 15, after the word "Briggs," insert "and Charles S. Morehead, the alleged original owner of said cotton," and change "was" into "were."

The effect of this will be that the question of loyalty to be determined before the Court of Claims shall apply as well to the owner as to the assignee. The purpose of offering this amendment is this——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield any time to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then does the gentleman from Kentucky yield the floor?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I yield the floor for the present.

Mr. ROWELL. The proposition of this amendment, as I was about saying a moment ago, is to put the owner and assignee on the same level as to their status. This assignment was made in 1862 of cotton within the lines of the so-called Confederate States. It was a transaction with reference to property that might then be used for the protection and support of the armies engaged in opposing the authority of the United States. It was, during the continuance of the war and before its close, seized by the armies of the United States in the country of the enemy, appropriated by the army, and the proceeds used to support it; and it rests, as I think, upon an entirely different foundation from the cotton thereafter seized under a law of Congress, sold, and the fund covered into the Treasury, both with reference to the status of the owner and with reference to the law.

It seems to me that this House of Representatives ought not to give its sanction to the propositon that a disloyal man whose property was subject to confiscation, property, too, of a kind that was especially the subject of confiscation, could transfer his rights to a loyal man so that the loyal man could recover against the United States when the assignor could not recover.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. Suppose the bar of the statute was not complete and the case was pending in court, would it make any difference at all to the court whether the assignor was a loyal man or not?

Mr. ROWELL. I think it would make a very great difference to the court.

Mr. OATES. As a matter of law?

Mr. ROWELL. As a matter of law.

Mr. OATES. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. ROWELL. The question of public policy is always a question for adjudication in the courts, and it could not have been possible for any court in the United States sitting at that time to hold that a man could deal with property within the lines of the Confederate States, so called, could transfer it, and could thereby transfer any right to anybody to enforce a contract made with reference to that kind of property. The contract would be against public policy; it would be a contract in aid of the public enemy.

So far as anything disclosed here is concerned, I do not know whether Mr. Morehead, when he made this assignment, was within or without the jurisdiction of the authorities of the United States so far as they were able to enforce that jurisdiction. For all that appears, he may have been within the Confederate lines. For all that appears, he may have been actively participating with the enemy in leading its armies, and under this bill, without this amendment, it may appear in court that at the time of this assignment he was in the camp of the enemy participating with them, and it may even appear that he sent this assignment through the lines from the camp of the enemy.

Mr. HOUK. What is your amendment?

Mr. ROWELL. My amendment is to make the loyalty of Morehead and Briggs stand upon precisely the same footing, and to require proof of the loyalty of both as a condition-precedent to the jurisdiction of the court.

Mr. HOUK. Then they may as well abandon the case.

Mr. ROWELL. Let it be abandoned, then.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understand that by this means Briggs secured payment of the indebtedness which Mr. Morehead owed him. Would the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] discourage a loyal man from trying to get his money out of a disloyal man?

Mr. ROWELL. No; but I would discourage a loyal man from trying to get that which was the property of the United States under the laws of war. This property was at that time subject to confiscation, provided we could get the enemy out of the way. The only difficulty was that there was a line of armed men between us and the property.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is to say, it was the Government's if the Government could get it.

Mr. ROWELL. It was not subject to the payment of Mr. Morehead's debts, superior to the right of the United States.

Mr. BUCHANAN. You do not want to punish a man for being loyal?

Mr. FELTON. Does the gentleman mean to say that because a man was loyal at that time in the South he had no right to collect his debts, provided the payment came from a disloyal man—that he should be doubly punished for being loyal?

Mr. ROWELL. The result of my amendment would be that if Mr. Morehead was disloyal he could transfer no right even to a loyal man, and I am not sure that it was an indication of very great loyalty for a man to trade with another who was within the Confederate lines, and possibly in its armies.

Mr. HOUK. I will ask the gentleman whether we have not had since the war an almost unbroken line of decisions to the effect that the rebels in the South had a right to transfer their property at any time they saw fit to do so before it was seized? Has not that been adjudicated time and time again?

Mr. ROWELL. To persons trading across the lines?

Mr. HOUK. Trading anywhere.

Mr. ROWELL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am probably not as well acquainted with the universal proceedings of the courts and of Congress as my friend from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK], but I had supposed that it was everywhere recognized as a violation of public policy for a man inside of the Union lines to trade with anybody on the other side. I supposed that that was both good law and good policy.

Mr. HOUK. But have not the courts decided that where the trading has taken place and been perfected, they will leave it where they find it?

Mr. ROWELL. I do not know what they have decided with regard to lands and such things, but I do know that the Committees on War Claims have usually reported against any bill which transferred title from a man within the Confederate lines to one on this side of the line.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. ROWELL. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. If it should appear to be the fact (and that question is submitted to the court by the bill) that Mr. Briggs had a just, valid, honest claim against Governor Morehead, and that the transaction was a bona fide one, not intended to cover up anything, does the gentleman see anything wrong about it simply because the property was within the rebel lines?

Mr. ROWELL. The case which the gentleman supposes would not make a bit of change in the public policy. The good public policy which is violated is that policy which declines to permit a man to trade across the lines.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But at the time this trade was made both parties were within the Union lines, as I am informed by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. ROWELL. That I don't know anything about. I do know, however, that about that time Mr. Morehead got on the other side of the line, and possibly he made this assignment in contemplation of going over to the other side. My objection is not that Mr. Briggs was loyal, because I like to see loyal men get their pay, and disloyal men also are sometimes in a position where they ought to be paid, especially if it is a matter of contract, but I do not believe it is a good thing for the House to overturn the great public policy which prohibits a man on one side of an army line to trade across the lines with a man on the other side. That is all I desire to say.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman reserve the balance of his time?

Mr. ROWELL. No; I yield the floor.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in answer to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] has said in favor of his amendment, I want to suggest to him what he seems to have forgotten, that he finds himself in the situation of offering an amendment to defeat, if possible, the allowance of this claim, because of the fact that the party lives in Kentucky instead of Illinois.

Mr. ROWELL. I hope the gentleman will not misrepresent me in that way.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Now, in the case of Mr. Douglas, who lived in the State of Illinois, who was paid his money by the judgment of the court, we find that he was in partnership with Mr. McHatten, who lived in Louisiana, and during the continuance of the war Mr. McHatten took his part of the partnership property and went still farther south, where he could take care of it, leaving Mr. Douglas's part, which was taken charge of by another man, named Dodds, a disloyal man, who held on to the property until the war was over. The heirs of Mr. Douglas—his sons—obtained their rights by a judgment of the court; but Mr. Morehead and Mr. Briggs happened to live in Kentucky, not upon the sacred soil of Illinois; and therefore because Mr. Morehead was disloyal—a fact which nobody denies—Mr. Briggs, who was a loyal man, must be deprived of his rights.

The two cases are exactly similar, and if there is any reason why Mr. Douglas, or his heirs, should not have been deprived of their rights, the same reasons apply in favor of Mr. Briggs. I hope the Committee of the Whole will not adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield to my colleague [Mr. CARUTH].

Mr. CARUTH. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely trust that the bill as reported by the committee will be passed with the amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]; but that the amendment introduced by our friend from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL], the purpose of which can only be the defeat of this bill, will be voted down.

I have been delighted to see manifested during this session of Congress, all over this House and particularly upon the other side, a disposition to pay the fair, just, and honest claims of the citizens of this Government. I believe that when a citizen of Kentucky who can bring in evidence of his loyalty the testimony of General Lovell H. Rousseau, a gallant Union general, who was among the first to uplift the flag of his country upon the soil of that State in the hour of the nation's extreme peril; I believe that when a citizen of Kentucky can support his loyalty not only by the testimony of that great Union general but by that of such a man as John J. Crittenden, the great son of Kentucky who on the floor of this House lifted his voice in behalf of peace and unity and conciliation; nay, more, I believe that when a son of Kentucky can bring in proof of his loyalty in the hour of the nation's peril the testimony of that gifted son of New England who made his home in Kentucky, George D. Prentice—when the loyalty of a citizen of Kentucky can be thus supported, I think his claim deserves consideration at the hands of the American Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the spirit which has been manifested upon the other side of the House since the commencement of this Congress will, by the passage of this bill, recognize the rights of loyal citizens. It is admitted in this report that Governor Morehead was not a loyal citizen; but because a loyal man, who during an extensive law practice in which he and Governor Morehead had been associated in the city of Louisville, had become the creditor of Governor Morehead, was endeavoring in time of war to secure his righteous claim—because he made this effort to secure this assignment, does it follow that the value of the cotton which was covered by the assignment should not be paid to that loyal citizen, particularly when the money lies idle in yonder overflowing Treasury to the credit of claimants of this character?

Now, the gentleman from Illinois said that he did not believe there should be acts of trade, contract, and barter between loyal citizens and disloyal persons; but he forgets that a higher authority than himself—the Supreme Court of the United States—has decided that such contracts made during the course of the war are righteous contracts and can be enforced. And this decision was made, not twenty-five years after the declaration of peace, but almost before the sound of warfare had ceased in this great land. It was decided by the Supreme Court in December, 1869 (I refer to the case of United States vs. Anderson, reported in 9 Wallace), that a contract of this kind must be sustained. Says the court:

> This condition of things Congress was aware of—

That is, the fact that nearly everybody in the South was disloyal, and that any trade made by a loyal man must almost necessarily have been made with a disloyal man as the other party—

> This condition of things Congress was aware of, and if it had been its purpose to limit the privilege in controversy to the loyal citizen who happened to acquire his property from another person equally loyal, they would have said so. But Congress had no such narrow policy in view.

I ask my friend from Illinois to mark the language:

> No such narrow policy in view. Its policy in the matter was broad and comprehensive—

I commend this language to the gentleman's consideration—> and embraced within its range all persons who had adhered to the Union. It treated all alike, and did not discriminate in favor of the person who could trace his title through a loyal source and against him who was not so fortunate. It did not consider the loyal planter who raised his own cotton and rice as entitled to any more protection than the dweller in the cities and towns who lived by traffic and bought where he could buy the cheapest.

I can see, Mr. Chairman, in the consideration of this bill, no objection which could be maintained against it. I find it provided in this measure that the loyalty of Mr. Briggs shall be first ascertained. I find it provided that this assignment should be first found to be a bona fide transaction; that it was not made for the purpose of defrauding Morehead's creditors; that it was not made for the purpose of keeping this property away from confiscation; but that it was a bona fide transaction on the part of Briggs—and his transactions with Governoa Morehead, I happen to know personally, had extended for many years; that Briggs had acted squarely and honorably; and as the whole matter is left under the discretion of the Court of Claims, to that tribunal this Congress can afford to leave it; and I trust, Mr. Chairman, the bill will pass.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I will now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. THOMAS] for ten minutes.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I think when the merits of this bill are understood there will be no objection in relation to it.

Under the act of the 3d of March, 1863, the military authorities of the United States seized 2,180 bales of cotton. This cotton was, under that act of Congress, sold, and the proceeds carried into the Treasury, and there held by the Government, in the language of the act, in trust for the owners.

Now, Mr. Chairman, by the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] which has been accepted, as I understand, by the gentleman in charge of the bill, the proceeds of these 2,180 bales of cotton are to be divided among the owners and reaches no other fund.

Some of the owners of this identical cotton proceeded, under this act, within the time allowed by the law, and received their portion of the proceeds. In some cases they were identical with these cases.

Mr. Briggs, it is said, was a loyal man, and Governor Morehead, it is said, was a disloyal man. The bill provides that the question as to the transferring of this cotton shall be inquired into by the courts, and if they find it was a cover so as to permit Morehead to enjoy the proceeds or anybody else, they are to discharge the claim. If they find there is any question about the loyalty of Briggs, the claim is to be defeated.

But the fact that Briggs was a loyal man and Morehead a disloyal man, it is claimed, should defeat this bill. Why should this rule be for the first time adopted in this case when other cases presenting the same feature were presented to the court and it was decided that fact made no difference as to the right of the claimant, whether he was loyal or not? The Supreme Court has decided this transaction was not rendered nugatory because the party of whom the cotton was bought was at the time disloyal. I say that the money that went into the Treasury in trust for Briggs and his heirs, if he is lawfully entitled to it, if he was loyal, if the transaction was honest—I say there is no reason in justice or in equity why the Government of the United States should keep this money when they are not entitled to it and when it was put there in trust for the benefit of the owners.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the amendment of the gentleman from Texas be again reported.

Mr. ROWELL. I offered my amendment in order to submit some remarks, and to call the attention of the House to my views about this case; and, as I have accomplished that purpose, I will now withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question, then, is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. That amendment was accepted.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I think there is no such special fund, as the gentleman from Kentucky will find, for the simple reason that, prior to the passage of the act of the 3d day of March, 1863—known as the captured and abandoned property act—the property was disposed of, and the proceeds paid into the Treasury were applied to the use of the Army. If that is understood, and this is to be paid out of the general fund of the Treasury, it expresses, undoubtedly, what will be the effect of the amendment. If the committee acts on the theory they are reaching some particular fund, I apprehend they are laboring under a mistake, as there is no such special fund. The gentleman from Texas was guarded in his statement, as he spoke of it as a constructive fund. The money was taken for the use of the Army, taken up by the quartermasters on their reports, and as a matter of fact never went into the Treasury.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Would there be any funds out of which this claim could be paid if the amendment of the gentleman should prevail?

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no fund except, possibly, by construing the amendment to mean this: that it should be paid out of the money received by the quartermaster and applied to the use of the Army, implying that the money is in the Treasury of the United States, and is to be so construed in connection with the amendment.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I understood the gentleman to say, or to have read a decision by the Court of Claims, to the effect that the money derived from these two thousand and odd bales of cotton had been appropriated by the quartermaster and expended for the use of the Army, and that it did not go into the Treasury of the United States at all, as a part of this fund, unless constructively.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is correct.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Then I suggest to the gentleman, and I intend to support the bill, whether the effect of the amendment might not be to defeat the collection of this claim altogether?

Mr. CULBERSON. I will state that the facts have been judicially ascertained in the case of Douglas vs. The United States, to which I have referred, that the proceeds of the sale of these two thousand and odd bales were paid over to G. L. Fort, a quartermaster in the United States Army, at Memphis, Tenn.; and that the quartermaster charged himself upon his accounts with that sum of money, the proceeds of the sale of the cotton. He was charged at the Treasury with that amount. The money never went into the Treasury, but was expended by Fort as quartermaster of the Army, and under the direction of General Grant.

Now, the court say, in the case of Douglas, that this fund, the proceeds of this lot of cotton, is constructively in the Treasury; and in that case, as I understand it, judgment was rendered in favor of Douglas, not against the captured and abandoned property fund, but against the fund which was in the Treasury, by construction, of the proceeds of this property sold and turned over to the Treasury on the quartermaster's accounts.

I have no disposition whatever to defeat or hamper in any way the passage of this bill; and if my amendment would accomplish that, I should not insist upon it; nor would I in any manner do anything to prevent this claimant from obtaining his money. But, as I stated in my remarks when this question was first presented, I want to save the rights of the persons to whom this fund belongs.

Mr. MORGAN. Is there not a large amount of money arising from this same source already covered into the Treasury?

Mr. CULBERSON. I am not aware of anything of that kind.

Mr. CARUTH. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to know if there is not a large fund arising just as this did, out of this same cotton, already in the hands of the Government and covered into the Treasury?

Mr. CARUTH. If the gentleman from Texas will permit me I can answer by giving the exact figures. There is to the credit of that fund, I mean this particular lot of cotton seized and sold at that time, $127,461.11.

Mr. MORGAN. Then another question. Are there not a large number of claims against that fund?

Mr. CULBERSON. Not that I know of.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand that there are a large number of claims against the fund; and if this claim is paid out of that fund, other claimants would be left without sufficient funds from which to get their payment.

Mr. CULBERSON. I beg to suggest to the gentleman that I think he is referring to the captured and abandoned property fund.

Mr. MORGAN. Is not this a portion of that?

Mr. CARUTH. No; this has reference to the fund arising from the sale of the two thousand and odd bales of cotton referred to here.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is not a portion of the captured and abandoned property fund. I am trying to protect that fund.

Mr. MORGAN. The reason I ask is that quite a number of my constituents have just claims against that fund, and if they can be heard I am sure they will be able to sustain them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

NATHANIEL M'KAY AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2477) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay and the executors of Donald McKay.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claims of Nathaniel McKay and the executors of Donald McKay for further compensation for the construction of the iron-clad monitors Squando and Nauset and the side-wheel steamer Ashuelot may be submitted by said claimants within six months after the passage of this act to the Court of Claims, under and in compliance with the rules and regulations of said court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine and render judgment upon the same: Provided, however, That the investigation of said claim shall be made upon the following basis: The said court shall ascertain the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by the contractor for building the light-draught monitors Squando and Nauset and the side-wheel steamer Ashuelot, in the completion of the same, by reason of any changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required and delays in the prosecution of the work which were not provided for in the original contract; but no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered unless such advance occurred during the prolonged term for completing the work rendered necessary by the delay resulting from the action of the Government aforesaid, and then only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractor: And provided further, That the compensation fixed by the contract between the contractor and the Government for specific alterations shall be conclusive as to the compensation to be made therefor: And provided further, That all moneys paid to said contractor by the Government over and above the original contract price for building said vessel shall be deducted from any amounts allowed by said court by reason of the matters hereinbefore stated: And provided further, That if any such changes caused less work and expenses to the contractor than the original plan and specifications, a corresponding deduction shall be made from the contract price and the amount thereof be deducted from any allowance to be made by said court to said claimant.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I yield the time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HAYDEN], if he desires to be heard.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose and objects of this bill are set forth in the bill itself. The intention is to reimburse Nathaniel McKay and the heirs of Donald McKay for the action of the Government during the years 1863 and 1864 in connection with the contract held by them. If the report should be read by the members of the House, it will be clearly understood why these parties come here at this time and ask to have the question of their claim sent for adjudication to the Court of Claims.

I do not care to go into the details of the case unless it be necessary. It has been presented to the House and the Senate many times, and was before the House and passed it on four different occasions, passed the Senate six times, and at one time went to the President, but was vetoed for the reason that there was not sufficient protection to the Government in consequence of the omission of a proviso which seemed necessary and proper. Hence it was very properly vetoed.

Now it comes, we think, with sufficient safeguards to protect the Government, and also to give these people the right to go to the Court of Claims and present their case, and if the Government has done them harm or owes them money, that it shall reimburse them and pay their claim. That is the whole case; and unless some gentleman on the floor desires further information upon the subject, I do not care to detain the committee by going into the details of the matter.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. How much is probably involved in the claim?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is very difficult to say how much is involved. There are three vessels. In 1863 these vessels were contracted for. The Government contracted with the McKays to build the vessels. Changes were made in the plans of the vessels; they were to be completed under the direction of the Government, and at an expense which can be shown by evidence to any court which will go into the particulars.

Mr. FELTON. That is the object of this bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes, sir; merely to send the claim to the Court of Claims.

Mr. LYMAN. I have no desire or intention to oppose this bill in any way; but I think there is one matter in which the interests of the Government are not sufficiently guarded. This matter was before the War Claims Committee of the last Congress, of which I had the honor to be a member, and if I am not mistaken this bill was in my charge as chairman of a subcommittee.

There are several other similar cases. These vessels were built during the war, and it is claimed that by the acts of the Government they were compelled to cost more to the contractors than the contract price; amounting in this particular case to several hundreds of thousands of dollars.

One of the questions in all these cases is whether certain vouchers or receipts given to the Government are not conclusive. In this particular case, and in some of the others, receipts in full were given by the contractors. Now, it is claimed that those receipts were given under a sort of duress or fraud of some kind, and that they ought not to be binding upon the contractors. If they were given under the circumstances which the contractors claim, they ought not to be binding. But that is one of the questions which ought to be determined by the Court of Claims.

I am willing now, as I was willing in the last Congress, that these claims should all go to the Court of Claims, to be tried there, but so tried as that the interests of the Government shall be protected when there. One of the difficulties which the committee experienced in the last Congress was so to prepare such bills as that the interests of the Government should be properly protected.

I do not think this bill protects the Government sufficiently with reference to those vouchers or receipts. It appears to me if these claims are sent to the Court of Claims under this bill, those vouchers and receipts are to be entirely ignored; and for the purpose of providing for that contingency I desire to present an amendment.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Add to the bill the following proviso:

And provided further, That the receipts or vouchers heretofore signed by the contractors for the building of said vessels shall be considered by said court as prima facie evidence of settlement of and payment for the claims now made, but which vouchers and receipts may be shown by competent evidence to be procured by fraud or duress; and if such fraud or duress shall be established legally to the satisfaction of said court, the same may then be considered as not binding on the claimants."

Mr. LYMAN. I think that amendment will perfect the bill, and if it is adopted I will then be in favor of its passage.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I would like to say to the gentleman from Iowa and the members of the committee, that there is no disposition, I believe, on the part of these claimants to take any advantage of the Government; and I am sure there is no disposition on the part of the Committee on War Claims to do anything that would give them an advantage. But to adopt that amendment would put these claimants in the position of being suspected of doing a wrong.

These receipts that they gave to the Government they were compelled to give. While there was not any particular duress about it, they were compelled to give them in order to get the amount of money they did get. But the contract under which these vessels were constructed provides on its very face that if any change should be made in the plans by which the work should cost less, these people are to get less; if changes were made by which the vessels are to cost more, they will be paid more.

A change of plans was made and the work ran to an enormous expense. The Government proceeded to settle. They said, "We will pay you the amount we agreed at first to pay, but you must sign the receipt before you get it."

I do not think the amendment is necessary. The gentleman from Iowa is favorable to the claim, and only wants to protect the Government; but I think by putting that provision into the bill you send these people before the court with the idea implied that they are attempting to do something that is not right, and I do not think the House should do that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. COX. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to waive that for a moment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] whether he would interpret or the court would interpret the word "duress" to mean an emergency in which a man needing the money signed the receipt, or whether he would not limit the amendment by putting it in the language of the report, "to treat the receipt as prima facie evidence, but susceptible of explanation by proofs."

Mr. LYMAN. I am willing to accept that modification.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE] agree to that?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I will agree to that.

Mr. LYMAN. Under the provisions of this bill these vouchers and receipts should not be considered. All I desire is that such a provision shall be made as that the interest of the Government shall be protected.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] that he word the amendment so that it will provide that all sums received on these vessels shall be credited to the parties who built them, in payment of the cost of the ships.

Mr. NUTTING. If this bill passes in its present form can not the Government introduce in evidence these receipts, just as they have them, and then, under the rule of evidence which now exists, the receipts can be attacked by the claimants, and the rights of the Government protected, without this legislation? In other words, is not the gentleman asking here to have a particular rule of evidence applied in a particular case?

Mr. ROWELL. The difficulty is that the bill itself provides what the Court of Claims shall consider. The interrogatory put to me by the gentleman from New York [Mr. NUTTING] is entirely proper, and if this case were going to the court for trial, as other cases are usually tried, there would be no difficulty about it, for this receipt would be presented and would be a complete defense on the part of the Government. Then under proper pleadings the receipt would be open to explanation on the part of the claimant; but my idea is that under this bill no such proceeding could be had, because it indicates exactly what the court shall act upon.

Mr. NUTTING. Does the gentleman say that the bill provides that this receipt shall be conclusive?

Mr. ROWELL. It does not say anything about it.

Mr. NUTTING. Then, if it does not say anything about it, the rule of evidence already existing takes care of it. That is my point.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. STONE, of Kentucky) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2477) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay and the executors of Donald McKay, having considered the same, make the following report:

Your committee find that this bill has been favorably reported by six Committees on War Claims on part of the House and eight of a like committee on part of the Senate within the past twenty years; that the bill has passed the House four times, passed the Senate six times, and we adopt in the main the report made by the Senate and House Committees on War Claims in the Forty-ninth Congress and Senate Committee of the Fiftieth Congress, which is as follows:

"In the winter and spring of 1863 the Navy Department prepared plans and drawings for several light-draught steam iron-clad monitors, with specifications showing the dimensions, kind, and thickness of the plating, and submitted the same to various contractors for proposals for construction.

"The time required in the construction was a material element in the contract, and none were made for a period longer than eight months. Some of the contracts were limited to six months. So material was the matter of time considered that in the contracts made for six months the contractors were to receive $395,000, while those whose contracts extended to eight months for completion were only to receive $386,000, or at the rate of $1,500 per month less; but there was a provision in all contracts then made that if the vessels were completed in less time than provided in the contract the contractor was to receive an additional pay of $1,500 per month, and if the completion was delayed beyond the period named the Government was to deduct from the contract price at the same rate—that is, $1,500 per month. McKay & Aldus were contractors for the building of the light-draught monitor Squando, to be completed in six months, the Department first satisfying itself of their facilities for doing the work in that time.

"Donald McKay was contractor, and built the light-draught monitor Nauset, also the iron double-ender Ashuelot. The Washington Iron Works, contractor for the machinery of the wooden double-ender Lenapee, is now represented by George M. Clapp. The Squando and Nauset were identical in the original plans and in the changes and alterations thereon with the Etlah and Shiloh, built in St. Louis.

"Having accepted the undertaking to build these vessels, the several parties named made their arrangements accordingly, having the yards, machinery, etc., necessary therefor, and entered into contracts for the necessary materials, based upon the contracts with the Government, and commenced the work on the several vessels named. About this time Chief Engineer of the Navy Stimers, having returned from Charleston, where he had been sent to make observations as to the conduct of Ericsson's monitors in battle, a consultation was had at the Navy Department, in which (quoting from Stimers's evidence)—

"'The matter was discussed as to whether we had better build our vessels in strict accordance with the letter of the contracts which we were giving out, without any change whatever, or had better take advantage of every such fight and make improvements as we went along, although we fully appreciated that it would delay their completion and add to their cost. Assistant Secretary Fox made the remark that he thought following this course would probably entail an extra cost of a million of dollars for each battle where the monitors were engaged.

"'Well, it was decided that that course should be followed. The contracts for the light-draught monitors, of which the Etlah was one, had already been drawn, specifications, general drawings, etc., of the original plans, but we went immediately to work to make changes on them in accordance with what I have already explained as the policy to be pursued. You will understand, therefore, why it was that I should send constant instructions to Mr. McCord, directing him to make his vessel different from what he had contracted to do; why I sent him drawings that differed from those specified in the contract. You will find, too, that these might be very material, as they certainly were. The acts, therefore, which I performed, which affected Mr. McCord and affect this case; were to direct him to make a different vessel from the one he contracted to do.'

"Acting upon this theory, the Department commenced forwarding to the contractors orders for changes and drawings before even the keel was laid, and those changes, which in the aggregate affected all parts of the vessel, making in the end almost entirely different vessels, were continued, and the drawings furnished therefor for nearly a year and a half after the time specified in the contract for their completion had elapsed, and from the 23d of June, 1864, for about the period of three months, work was suspended altogether upon these vessels, by the orders of the Navy Department, which had then in contemplation some general changes in their construction which required time to perfect. All of this time, however, the contractors were under heavy expenses for the maintenance of the yards and men, whom they dared not discharge for fear of inability to supply their places, and not knowing on what day their services would be required.

"In addition to all this, the prices of labor and materials required for the work, and for which the contractors had made provision during the time of the contracts, rapidly advanced, so that, as found by the Committee on War Claims of the first session of the Forty-third Congress, iron, that at the date of the contracts was worth $65 per ton, advanced during the prolonged time to $220 per ton, and labor from $2.50 per day to $4 per day.

"This committee have not, however, considered it necessary to investigate the details as to amounts or percentage of such increase of prices, but are convinced that the cost of the work was greatly enhanced by reason of the delay caused by the course adopted by the Government in these changes and alterations from the original plans.

"Chief Engineer Stimers, in his evidence in McCord's case, states the case as understood by him and presumably by the Department, which had no authority to adjust claims for damages, as follows:

"'Before expressing an opinion on the matter as an expert, I must explain that the principles upon which the contractors of this, and the contractors of similar vessels were to be paid were settled upon before I left the office, and I have always understood that these principles were adhered to, and they were as follows: That we should pay for the contract work by making the contract payments, or the payments provided for in the contract; that we should pay for alterations and changes a proper sum, as might be agreed upon between the Government and the contractors at current rates. Now, that being the case, I consider that the Government is still indebted to the contractors of the Etlah, because, although the original contract work has been paid for as originally agreed upon, and the extra work may have been paid for per se, the fact of calling upon the contractor to make the changes on his vessel and his compliance with those demands delayed him in the execution of the original contract work. This delay compelled him to pay the increased rates for labor and material which obtained at the time when the work was actually performed; and although the contractor took the risk of a rise in prices when he signed his contract, it was only for a risk during the period of his contract, or the period he would have required to perform the work if the Government had not delayed him by their direct interference. Now, whatever increase there was in the cost of the original work contemplated by the contract, due to the delay caused by the Government, that increase is now due, as there has been no pretense on the part of the officers of the Government to have paid it. If you will determine the increased cost of material and labor of the original contract work during the extent of time when the contract was delayed by an interference of the Government to execute it, you will have, in my judgment, the indebtedness of the Government. There may be very large claims on account of extra work of which I know nothing.'

"There seems to be no question that but for the interference of the Government these vessels would have been completed within the time specified in the contract; that these contractors had the means and the ability to do so, and that the heavy losses sustained by reason of the interference of the Government could not have been prevented by any reasonable prudence or foresight on their part, as the labor could not be anticipated, nor could they possibly know, from the frequent changes being made, the kind, quantity, or, in the case of the iron plating, the thickness or size of the plates to be used. The question of the duty of the Government to relieve the contractors for the building of these vessels has been repeatedly recognized by Congress. (Sloan, Report No. 17, Thirty-ninth Congress, second session; Senator Nye, Report No. 45, Thirty-ninth Congress, first session; Senator Drake, Report No. 163, Forty-first Congress, second session; Senator Nye, Report No. 37, Forty-second Congress, second session: A. B. Smith, Report No. 36, Forty-second Congress, third session; Senator Cragin, Report No. 124, Forty-third Congress, first session; Senator HOAR, Report No. 14, Forty-seventh Congress, first session.)

"Congresses reported favorably on those bills, recommending the claimants such relief as they desired. Several of them have passed both Houses of Congress.

"In 1865 a board was appointed under a resolution of the Senate, called the Selfridge board, which examined and reported upon numerous vessels. Their awards were not paid, but their discussion led to the passage of the act of March 2, 1867, directing the Secretary of the Navy to investigate the claims of all contractors for building vessels of iron, etc., and to ascertain the additional cost incurred by them by reason of any changes and alterations therein, with the proviso:

"'But no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered, unless such advance occurred during the prolonged time for completing the work made necessary by the delay resulting from the action of the Government aforesaid, and then only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractor.' (14 Stat., 424.)

"The Secretary of the Navy delegated the matter thus submitted to a board, of which J. B. Marchand was chairman, and called the Marchand board. This board, perhaps for economic reasons, decided to confine their examination to the question of extra work, holding that the question of increased cost by reason of the delays caused by Government was one sounding in damages, and therefore beyond the jurisdiction of the Department and not included within the act.

"Claims were filed by these contractors, but reported as 'not considered within the province of the board' (report contained in volume 10, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 1504), nor were the claimants permitted to appear before the board on behalf of their claims.

"In the Forty-first Congress, second session, a joint resolution was passed by Congress referring these cases to the Court of Claims, but failed to receive the sanction of the President, on the ground that the bill as passed omitted the proviso contained in the act of March 2, 1867, and above quoted, since which time various reports have been made and favorable action had by one branch of Congress or the other, but no general bill for the relief of these and other contractors has become a law.

"A majority of the contractors for the building of this class of vessels have, from time to time, received relief through Congress, but these claimants have thus far received no relief. Among those who have been relieved are George C. Bestor, contractor of the Shiloh, by act of Congress (17 Stat., 733, 1873) appropriating $125,000; Miles Greenwood (17 Stat., 764); S. S. Marchen, jr. (18 Stat., 635); Donohue, Ryan & Co. (15 Stat., 353); C. W. Whitney (17 Stat., 671). Under act of 25th June, 1864 (13 Stat., 409), Ericsson was allowed $1,070,438.93 for such increased cost.

"These contractors also claim that they have not received full pay for the extras furnished by them in the construction of the said vessels, aside from the main question of increased cost by reason of the delays. The facts concerning this branch of the case are as follows:

"The frequent changes and alterations ordered by the Department on these vessels, and which, under the contracts, the Government had a right to demand by paying the extra expense caused thereby, occasioned a large amount of extra work, some of which was specifically agreed upon, and part of which was done under the orders of the Department without any agreed price. This extra work was recognized as being within the jurisdiction of the Department to pay, and the Department did pay a large portion of said extras, but did not pay all that the parties were entitled to receive. The accounts were made up in the Department without consultation with the claimants, and payments made from time to time until the last and final payment, when a voucher containing the words 'For work done which is extra to the contract, being the full and final payment on all extras, and in full for all claims and demands for that work,' was presented, and which was required to be and was receipted by the claimant upon receiving the amounts specified in the vouchers.

"This committee are satisfied, from the evidence before it, that the account for such extra work was not correctly adjusted; and inasmuch as the said receipts are prima facie evidence not only of payment in full for such extras per se, but may be construed to cover the question of the extra expense caused by the delays as well, therefore deem it just to all parties that the entire matter should be considered by a legal tribunal, with competent jurisdiction to hear and determine the question involved, and in considering such receipt to treat the same as prima facie evidence, but susceptible of explanation by proofs, if any they have, showing the real indebtedness of the Government to them for such increased cost of such vessels beyond the contract price, and beyond the accounts paid by reason of such changes and alterations as evidently contemplated in the previous acts of Congress providing for an adjustment thereof, upon the principle that when the Government has by its acts caused its citizens performing labor for it to incur additional expense in its performance, such additional cost should be borne by the Government.

Your committee are unanimously of the opinion that the claimants should not be concluded by the voucher and final receipt in question unless it should appear in equity that they should be, and that the claimants should have their rights adjudicated upon the merits of their claim.

Wherefore your committee report the bill favorably and recommend that it do pass.

During the reading of the report the following took place.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the report. There is a great deal of conversation going on in the Hall, and the reading of the Clerk interrupts it. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER (at the conclusion of the reading of the report) Mr. Chairman, I called for the reading of this report, not for the purpose of offering any factious opposition, but to call the attention of the committee to its extraordinary character. This claim is an old one, well known to all who have long been members of this House. It is one of those oft-recurring facts that are familiar to all gentlemen who have paid attention to claims pending before Congress. It seems that this claimant will never be satisfied. Nothing will satisfy his demands—not even a veto by the President and the failure of his claim to pass Congress after Congress. Nothing seems to interfere with the steady pressure of this claim. From this report it seems that early after the war an act of Congress was passed, having in view the settlement of these claims. That law went into effect, and under it a board of commissioners was appointed. That board took all these facts into consideration at a time when they were comparatively fresh in the minds of those concerned, and when living witnesses could be had. That board met, deliberated, and decided. I mean the Marchand board.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Did not that board, or commission, sit with closed doors, and refuse to let the parties themselves appear before it, much less permit them to produce the witnesses?

Mr. SPRINGER. I was not present at that board, nor have I any knowledge of what it did except that it was appointed in pursuance of law, that it discharged its duties, made an award in this case, and adjourned, and that the claimant received the amount that was awarded to him by that board and gave therefor a receipt in the following words:

For work done which is extra to the contract, being the full final payment upon all extras and in full for all claims and demands for all work.

That is the receipt that was given to the Government of the United States and accepted by the Government, and the money was paid. There is no explanation given why this receipt should be voided, but the committee report in this very general language:

Your committee are unanimously of opinion that the claimant should not be concluded by the voucher and final receipt in question, unless it should appear that they should be, and that the claimants should have their rights adjudicated upon the merits of their claim.

In other words, they say that these claimants are not to be precluded by the receipt unless it shall appear in equity that they ought to be.

Mr. LONG. Is not that the ordinary rule of law?

Mr. SPRINGER. I think not. I am willing that my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW], who sits near me, should state the rule of law upon that subject.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would like to ask the gentleman why a claim is brought before Congress unless it is in order to obtain some relief which can not be obtained under the ordinary operation of law.

Mr. SPRINGER. Of course, I understand that; but I want to call attention to this point: that there must be some time an end of all litigation between an individual and the Government; and that time in this instance was reached when this claim was referred to a commission created by authority of law, which commission deliberated, upon the claim and made an award which was accepted by the claimant, a receipt in full having been given to the Government.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The gentleman certainly did not intend to convey a wrong impression to the House, but he has stated that this bill has been rejected by Congress over and over again.

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not say it had been "rejected" by Congress; I said it had failed to pass at many previous sessions.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understood the gentleman to say that the claim had been rejected; but the fact is the bill has been passed by the House five or six times, and by the Senate nearly as often.

Mr. LONG. The bill has passed one House or the other fourteen times in all.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And it simply was not reached at the last session of the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not say that the bill had been rejected by Congress; I said it had been before Congress at many previous sessions. I did say—and the statement is sustained by this report—that the bill was once vetoed by President Grant.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Not in this shape. My friend certainly would not convey to the House the impression that this claimant has been spurned from the doors of Congress and the bill rejected.

Mr. SPRINGER. I said that the claimant had been here session after session, and had not received what he was claiming, but still persisted in coming——

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And it is a shame that a just claim should be postponed Congress after Congress, until finally the grandchildren of the original claimant are compelled to come here asking for what was the just due of their ancestor.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] to this language of the report——

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question about a matter of fact; for I want to understand the facts in this case. I understood the gentleman from Illinois to say that this whole question was submitted to the Marchand board, who had reported the amount of compensation to be paid, and that the claimant had receipted for this amount. Now, I ask the gentleman whether it does not appear by the report—it certainly does as I read it—that the question of the increased cost of the work growing out of delays on the part of the Government was not considered by that board, on the ground that that was a claim sounding in damages, and not within their jurisdiction; in other words, that it was within the jurisdiction of Congress.

Mr. SPRINGER. The case was submitted to the board; the decision of the board was made upon the law and the facts, and the party was paid under that award.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman will allow me to say that, as I read the report, the receipt given was not for the amount awarded by that board.

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, the claimant did give a receipt, else why does the committee state that the receipt should not be a bar to his claim?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The receipt was given upon an express stipulation, although not put in writing, that it was not to be conclusive as to the full payment of the claimant's demands.

Mr. SPRINGER. He did give a receipt, if he received the money.

Mr. FELTON. Suppose he did give a receipt and it can be proved that he receipted erroneously, when he was in fact entitled to more, would not a court allow him to show that?

Mr. SPRINGER. And so the claimant might come back time and again, asking one trial after another, until the end——

Mr. FELTON. He ought to be allowed to urge his claim a hundred times, if he has failed to get justice.

Mr. SPRINGER. Gentlemen will pardon me a moment. I shall be glad to have them discuss this case when I am through, because it is one which ought to be discussed. It has been discussed in Congress for the last fifteen or twenty years, but a little further light on it will not hurt anybody.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Let me ask the gentleman a question on that very point—whether he understands that this Marchand board was authorized to take into consideration at all the equities of the case—whether it was not simply a naval board organized for the purpose of reporting what was due this contractor under the specific terms of the contract, and without any power to go beyond that?

Mr. SPRINGER. I can only give the language of the report as to that. It says:

This board, perhaps for economic reasons—

I do not know what the reasons of the board were; but the committee, giving a surmise as to their nature, suggests that they were "economic reasons"—the very best reasons in the world; and I hope this board will not be reprimanded by an act of Congress if it did place its decision on "economic" grounds.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. SPRINGER. I would prefer to go on; but I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HAYDEN. I wish to make but a single suggestion—and I do not often interrupt any gentleman. Will not the gentleman from Illinois please read a few words more from the same sentence of the report——

Mr. SPRINGER. I was trying to do so, but gentlemen would not let me.

Mr. HAYDEN (reading):

Holding that the question of increased cost, by reason of the delays caused by the Government, was one sounding in damages, and therefore beyond the jurisdiction of the Department.

Why not be fair about this matter, my dear friend?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will say to my friend from Massachusetts that I can not state at once all there is in this report. If he will bear with me a moment I will read the rest of the sentence, as I was proceeding to do.

This board, perhaps for economic reasons, decided to confine their examination to the question of extra work, holding that the question of increased cost by reason of the delays caused by the Government, was one sounding in damages, and therefore beyond the jurisdiction of the Department and not included within the act.

I hold that the board had a right to make that judgment and were entitled to act upon it; and if their reasons were "economic," so much the better for the board; and if the object of this House is to be extravagant and reduce the surplus in the Treasury by allowing these old claims, so much the worse for Congress. I hope this House, in acting on measures of this class, will be actuated by some of these "economic reasons" which actuated boards appointed by the Government shortly after the close of the war.

Mr. LONG. Is the gentleman prepared to say nothing absolutely is due these claimants?

Mr. SPRINGER. I am prepared to say from the information we have——

Mr. LONG. Are you prepared to say nothing is due?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not know.

Mr. LONG. Why not, then, let it go to the courts?

Mr. SPRINGER. I know it has been to the courts.

Mr. LONG. No, never to a court.

Mr. SPRINGER. They have been to a commission.

Mr. LONG. It left out part of their claim. They come now to Congress and they ask Congress to pass a bill for their relief.

Mr. FELTON. Does not the report say there was one feature of their claim which the law did not allow?

Mr. SPRINGER. I know they decided it according to the law and evidence before them, and therefore it is adjudicated. [Cries of "Vote!"] One moment before the vote is taken. I have three-quarters of an hour of my time remaining. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. You are not going to take it all?

Mr. SPRINGER. The more you interrupt me the longer you will be in getting to a vote. It does not disturb me. It does not disturb my equanimity.

Now, sir, this report states that in the Forty-first Congress—that was some time ago. This is the Fiftieth Congress. That was about fifteen or sixteen years ago. This report states that—

In the Forty-first Congress, second session, a joint resolution was passed by Congress referring these cases to the Court of Claims, but failed to receive the sanction of the President on the ground that the bill as passed omitted the proviso contained in the act of March 2, 1867, and above quoted, since which time various reports have been made and favorable action had by one branch of Congress or the other, but no general bill for the relief of these and other contractors has become a law.

It appears from this report that sixteen years ago the claimants in this case—because it must have been at their instance—I assume it was at their instance—secured the passage of a joint resolution similar to this one now before us asking Congress to authorize these claimants to go to the Court of Claims.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Do you say that act was similar to this?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not, because that other act did not contain what this act contains for the purpose of avoiding the objection made by the President when he vetoed the other act.

Mr. LONG. But that proviso is now in.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, we have the proviso now in. You are trying to evade the President's objection. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Certainly it is our duty to do that.

Mr. SPRINGER. You are trying to evade the objections of General Grant to this bill. You are trying to make it acceptable to the President. He at that time vetoed the bill on the ground I have stated. He vetoed it sixteen years ago. We have it now up again with a proviso in it so they can go into the Court of Claims and show the loss they sustained was by reason of the delay in completing their contract and the increased cost of materials by reason of these various delays. In other words, it seems this case is now to be decided in this Congress to give these parties all they claim. And we will be called upon to fix up a bill and tinker with the subject in order to remove the objections of the President and get to the facts by some hook or crook; to invent a means by which these claimants can get all the money they claim from the Government of the United States.

I am willing in ordinary cases to do what the claimants ask in reference to the adjudication of their cases. But I think when a man has had his day in court that should stop his incessant and everlasting clamor at the doors of Congress for further relief. But if gentlemen are disposed to open all these questions, if they are disposed to say nothing has been settled since the war, if they are going to open up the claims commission at St. Louis and the navy-yards of the country, settled when the facts were in the mind of the people—if they are going to open them up, then our friends on this side of the Chamber before we reach the tariff bill will find there is no surplus in the Treasury to be anxious over.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What bill do you refer to?

Mr. REED. What tariff bill?

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Kentucky yields the floor to me.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before I sit down——

Mr. COX. The gentleman has sat down, and I ask to "sit down" on him. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SPRINGER. All right.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I have never heard, since I have been a member of Congress, a more disjointed, incoherent, "ramshackle" speech than that which has just fallen from my friend from Illinois. [Great laughter.] And yet all that he found to say has been drawn from the report of the committee itself, which he did not give in full, but gave in little parcels, little driblets at a time, and did not give to the House in what he did select a fair and, I was going to say, a decent opportunity to pronounce judgment. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Why, I demanded the reading of the report in full.

Mr. COX. You did not give it in full.

Mr. SPRINGER. The report was read in the hearing of the House on my demand.

Mr. COX. And the gentleman did not pay any attention to the report while it was being read——

Mr. SPRINGER. I did.

Mr. COX. For at that time he was decorating me with his bouquet, which I have just returned to him with thanks. [Renewed laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois first gave out the idea that the bill had gone into the courts and had been discredited; then that it had been discredited by Congress, and finally, when it passed here, that it had been discredited by a veto message of the President. But he took good care not to say in the first instance what were the reasons for the veto; and then, when it is suggested that we now avoid the reasons assigned in that veto, and make it acceptable to the man, or the President who vetoed it, this gentleman, after thinking with his heels and dancing with his head, comes to the conclusion that the bill ought not to pass anyway. [Great laughter.] And so he enters his serious objection to any reasonable conclusions which may be reached by the House in reference to it in any shape.

Now, I know these people; I have seen them here for years.

Mr. SPRINGER. We have all seen them.

Mr. COX. And the gentleman from Illinois has created the impression, or was seeking to throw discredit upon the claim, although in point of fact it has fourteen times passed the two Houses or committees favorably.

It did not happen to concur in both Houses at the same time, and once, when it did pass, in point of fact, it was vetoed by the President. Why, this bill is not a bill to pay these claimants. It is a bill right along in the line of the best thing the gentleman from Illinois ever did, and I will give him credit for it, and that was to urge upon the House—upon Congress—a court for the adjudication of private claims. The gentleman has urged that again and again with persistence and with signal ability, and with what I may call good, old-fashioned, roundabout common sense, which does him credit. [Laughter.] But when we bring up a bill the object of which is to carry out his own ideas, he comes up here and tries to break it down by a little detailed talk drawn from the very report of the committee which concludes so handsomely. Why does it conclude so handsomely? Because it comes at last right down to the point—the matter of this receipt.

The gentleman from Illinois knows, if he is a lawyer, and I think I have heard that he was [great laughter]—he knows what the meaning of that conclusion is; that in all equity, in all fairness, in all common honesty, and in a forum larger than any commission, than any court, than any Congress, or any veto message of the President, in the forum of conscience itself, a receipt can always be explained by evidence; and that man would be an unconscionable scoundrel who would take advantage of a receipt improvidently given, or when given under stress or compulsion or in an emergency.

What they ask is simply this, that when the receipt comes into the court and the case of the claimants is thereby adjudged forever, adjudged by the prima facie receipt, that these men shall have the privilege to vindicate, in all fairness, in all equity, in honor, the claim whether the Government owes them anything or not. [Applause.] And then let the court award them what the Government really owes.

I now think a vote might be taken. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] has been very felicitous in his remarks, and nobody enjoys his wit and humor more than I do, even when he puts forth his ability in that line at my expense. [Laughter.]

I would be willing to bear it on every Friday from now to the 4th of July next, and to hear the speeches from my friend even if they were all devoted to me, and that he should be as severe upon me as I know he has been or tried to be to-day, and yet I should not object, in order that I might have the opportunity of still hearing his melodious voice and getting the benefit of his incomparable jokes.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is a matter more serious than that before this committee. There is a question of public moment, business of public interest connected with this question, which demands consideration.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has been recognized.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire the floor? If so, I will yield to him.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. No, sir; I do not wish to be heard.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will give the floor to any gentleman who wants to speak.

Mr. COX. I don't want to talk any more. [Great laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I will yield to my cheerful friend from New York a part of my time, in order that he may have an opportunity of hatching up another joke. I want to have an opportunity of laughing.

Mr. COX. I want to do justice.

Mr. SPRINGER. And I will tell the gentleman "why we laugh," as he has endeavored to tell the people heretofore.

Why does the gentleman state that I have advocated that this class of cases should go to the Court of Claims? I have not done so. I have favored bills sending cases of this kind to the Court of Claims to ascertain the facts and to report them back to this House. But this is not that kind of a bill. It is to send this claim to the court with authority to enter a judgment; and I have never favored the sending of this class of claims to the Court of Claims for that purpose.

As to this particular case, the gentleman says my argument was not—what was the word?

Mr. COX. Coherent. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. He said I thought with—what was it?

A MEMBER. With your heels.

Mr. SPRINGER. That I thought with my heels and danced with my head. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. You have not remembered the best points.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman makes so many points no one can remember all of them. His points are always good, and I have a right, as my friend beside me says, to know whether they are good when he makes them upon me.

The gentleman intimated I probably was a lawyer. I do not know whether he meant that in earnest or not. [Laughter.] The fact is, I have not practiced law for some fourteen years, since I have been in Congress, and I believe the gentleman from New York has not practiced law for twenty-six years.

Mr. LANHAM. I rise to a question of order. I hope all the afternoon will not be taken up with the passage of witticisms between the two gentlemen.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am reaching the merits of the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has endeavored to preserve order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to say to this committee seriously that this is not a question as to how my thoughts run or whether I think with my head or my heels, or whether I have been a practicing lawyer for twenty-five years. But my friend from New York it seems can never treat a matter of this kind in a serious way. It has been treated very seriously for fourteen or fifteen years, and I hope it will be so treated by this House, and that the House will say that this claimant shall not have the relief he asks.

I do not think the claimant is entitled to this relief. I think he has had all he ought to have had, and that this measure is more in the interest of the lobby than of an honest claimant.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, rose.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky how much is involved in this bill?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. If the gentleman from Illinois will cease his opposition to this bill and allow it to pass and go to the courts, we will answer him judicially in a very short time.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is that all you can state in answer to my question?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. It is all I propose to state.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is there any gentleman on this floor who can tell me how much money is involved in this bill?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. All that is justly due.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does anybody else want to answer how much is involved?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE].

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not know how much is involved in the bill, and ask the question for information, but nobody has answered it. And I will state to the Chair that I did not yield the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois sat down, and the Chair then recognized the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I yield for one moment to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SHAW] to offer some amendments.

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield to me for a question?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I have yielded to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. SHAW. I make no opposition to the reference of the claim to the Court of Claims, but rather to the language of the bill, and I send to the desk some amendments which I think will remedy it.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 18 and 19 strike out the words "which were not provided in the original contract" and insert in line 18, after the word "work," the following: "Provided, Such additional cost in completing the same and such changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required and delays in the completion of the work were occasioned by the Government of the United States."

In line 22, after the word "by," strike out the word "the."

In line 25 add the letter "s" to the word "contractor."

In line 27 strike out the words "contract between" and add the letter "s" to the word "contractor."

In line 28, after the word "alterations," insert "in advance of such alterations."

In line 29, after the word "therefor," insert "Provided, Such alterations, when made, complied with the specifications of the same as furnished by the Government aforesaid."

In line 37 strike out the word "to" and insert, after the word "allowance," in the same line, "which may."

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the friends of this bill are ready to accept the amendments as they have been offered. They simply go to explain, and to insert some words that are deemed necessary by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SHAW] to make the bill more explicit.

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. KERR. My colleague from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] said that the bill did not make the receipt prima facie evidence of the payment, and that he desired it so amended as to make the receipt prima facie evidence of payment by the Government. Do I understand the chairman of the committee to suppose that the bill as reported from the committee allows the receipt to be introduced as prima facie evidence of payment, and requires the claimants to go behind it and explain it?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Well, sir, we believed that the bill was full enough on that point, because the existing law is that receipts shall be taken into consideration in the adjustment of a claim; but the friends of the bill have no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN], because it is simply a reiteration of the law. That is exactly the position we occupy.

Mr. Chairman, I had said all about the bill that I intended to say; but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has found it convenient to make some remarks which are very unjust to the committee and to gentlemen who are in favor of this bill. He closed his remarks by saying that this bill was more in the interest of a lobby than of any special claimant.

Now, I don't know how it is, but if I wanted to find a man to be influenced I would hunt up a man who was always saying that somebody else was influenced. I have no fear, sir, of having it attributed to me, or to our committee, that we have been influenced by the lobby, and if any other gentlemen upon this floor who are at the head of committees, or occupying prominent places in the House, are so afraid that they will not be influenced that they have to impute to others that they are influenced, why, I have no explanation to make for them. This claimant has not been here with any lobby. I have seen him here for two Congresses myself, and no doubt he has been here for a good many Congresses; but if he is to be condemned because he has been trying to get Congress to act in the matter of his claim, that simply seals the fate of every claimant. If the simple fact that a man has been here asking Congress to let him go into court to establish his claim condemns him, then no claimant has any chance of justice from this Government.

I tell you, gentlemen, there is no lobby in this case. I have gone through the case in this Congress, and I know that it was examined in the last Congress by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN], and I know that those are gentlemen who can not be influenced by any lobby. It is an imputation that the members of this House ought not to allow to influence them for a moment, to say that the large number of gentlemen here who are in favor of this bill have been brought to favor it by "influence." I am for the bill, Mr. Chairman, because it is right. I believe the claim is just; but even if I were not strong in that faith I would be willing to say to Mr. McKay, as I would say to any other claimant, "You may go into court and try to establish your claim." I now move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the amendments of the gentleman from Maryland, which are designed simply to perfect the text of the bill. Is a separate vote demanded upon them?

A MEMBER. Let the amendments be read.

The amendments offered by Mr. SHAW were read.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the vote will be taken upon these amendments in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN].

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add to the bill the following:
"And provided further, That the receipts or vouchers heretofore signed by the contractors for the building of said vessels shall be considered by said court as prima facie evidence of settlement or payment for the claims now made, but which vouchers and receipts shall be susceptible of explanation by proof showing the nature of the indebtedness of the Government and the circumstances under which the same were given."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass—ayes 168, noes 15.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. COX having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration bills upon the Private Calendar and had instructed him to report the same to the House with various recommendations.

ADJOURNMENT TILL MONDAY.

Mr. MILLS. I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

ESTATE OF C. M. BRIGGS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COX). The first bill now in order, having just been reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, is the bill (H. R. 4909) for the relief of the estate of C. M. Briggs, deceased.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. On that I move the previous question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is upon the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:
"Provided, That said judgment shall not be paid out of the general fund in the Treasury arising from the sale of captured and abandoned property, but shall be paid out of the special fund charged to and accounted for by Capt. G. L. Fort, assistant quartermaster at Memphis, arising from the sale of 2,209 bales of cotton received by him, with which claimant's cotton was intermingled, said claimant to receive only the proportion which his cotton bears to the net proceeds accounted for by said Fort."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill,

Mr. SPRINGER said: I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was passed.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATHANIEL M'KAY AND OTHERS.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2477) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay and the executors of Donald McKay.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was read the third time by its title.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the yeas and nays on that question.

On ordering the yeas and nays there were—ayes 15.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair one-fifth have not voted in favor of the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, only 18 voting in favor thereof.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is in order; the gentleman has the right to make that demand. The previous question has been ordered.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, if the House should adjourn now, would not this bill come up as unfinished business?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would come up on the next day when the same class of business is in order—that is next Friday.

Mr. MILLS. I suggest to the friends of the measure to let the bill go over until next Friday, as it will take some time to engross it. It will come up as unfinished business next Friday, and can be passed the first thing. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 128, noes 37.

So (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House, in accordance with its previous order, adjourned until Monday next.

Mr. PLATT. I have received the address of the constitutional convention of Dakota to the Congress of the United States, asking for the division of Dakota and the admission of South Dakota as a State. It is short, and is perhaps entitled to a place in the RECORD. As the matter has been reported to the Senate, I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD, and also that it be printed in the usual document form and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the memorial will be printed in the RECORD, and printed for the use of the Senate, and lie on the table.

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand that the memorial is to be printed in the RECORD?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut so asked.

Mr. BUTLER. I object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the memorial be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. VEST. What is the memorial?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. "An address to the Congress of the United States by the constitutional convention of Dakota."

Mr. PLATT. I am not particular about the matter; I do not wish to violate any rule of the Senate; but I supposed that this was a document of the character which, upon request, has always been printed in the RECORD. Of course, Dakota is not a State, and Southern Dakota is not a State.

The facts are these: There was a constitutional convention held in South Dakota in 1885 which adopted a constitution, and under which the Senate at its last session voted to admit that portion of the Territory of Dakota which was thus organized under that constitutional convention. That convention did not adjourn sine die; it was last fall reconvened; and it has now addressed a memorial to the Congress of the United States; and it is that memorial which I present, and which I have asked may be printed in the RECORD.

The memorials of Territorial Legislatures and State Legislatures are always printed in the RECORD upon request. That is in accordance with our rules; and other important memorials have been, as is within the knowledge of every Senator, upon request, printed in the RECORD. This memorial is short, and will not much encumber the RECORD; and I thought under the circumstances it had such dignity and was of such importance that I ought to ask for its printing in the RECORD.

Mr. BUTLER. We have in the last two or three weeks had some extremely interesting lectures upon the subject of printing papers in the RECORD and encumbering the RECORD, which was intended, as I have always understood, to be a record of the proceedings of this body. Certainly within the last ten days the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and, if I mistake not, the Senator from Connecticut himself, objected to the introduction and printing in the RECORD of some papers thought to be important by those who presented them.

If this memorial is to be printed in the RECORD, I shall ask, as a matter of right to those who represent the other side of this question, that their memorial shall also be printed in the RECORD.

I understood in the remarks made by Senators on the other side and on this that the printing of such papers in the RECORD is a violation of the rule. It is a violation of the rule, I understand, for a Senator to read during the delivery of his remarks in extenso a paper of that kind. He is required under the rule, as I have understood it, to state the substance of a petition. Perhaps I am wrong about that; it may be that a petition can be printed in the RECORD. The Chair nods assent to that proposition.

I can see no good reason why this memorial should be printed in the RECORD when a great many others just as important have been excluded, and I shall object to it (I do not know what that objection will amount to) unless the other side of this question have the opportunity of having their views printed in the RECORD also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the memorial be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. PLATT. I do not wish to get in any wrangle over this matter. On the other side of the Chamber a somewhat vigorous demand was made that the memorial of the constitutional convention of Utah should be printed in the RECORD, and the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], I think, read it, and therefore it went in the RECORD. If I am not mistaken, the Senator from South Carolina at the time suggested to him that he could get it in the RECORD by reading it as part of his remarks.

Mr. BUTLER. I did; and that is what called forth the observations, I think, from the Senator himself, and I am certain from the Senator from Ohio, that it was clearly out of order. I therefore thought that inasmuch as that vigorous protest was made on the other side against the publication of that memorial in the RECORD, I would try and see what would be the effect of a vigorous protest when a similar paper of that kind came in.

Mr. PLATT. I do not propose to resort to any such method to obtain the printing of this memorial in the RECORD. I desire to conform to the rules of the Senate, and if this is not strictly within the rules of the Senate and the practice of the Senate, I do not ask for the printing of the memorial in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that it is a question of practice, not a question under the rules.

Mr. PLATT. Do I understand the Chair to say that it is not admissible under the rule?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question does not properly arise under the rule, the rules being silent on the subject as to what the RECORD shall contain. It is clearly in order for the Senator to move to print the memorial in the RECORD, if he desires.

Mr. VEST. I should like to make an inquiry, if the Senator will permit me. Was the memorial from the constitutional convention of the Territory of Utah admitted to the RECORD under the action of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair now recalls that incident, it was read by the Senator from Florida from his place, objection having been made to its being printed in the RECORD when presented.

Mr. VEST. My recollection is that when the Senator from Florida asked that the Utah memorial be printed in the RECORD, there was objection made on the other side of the Chamber, and that objection was sustained.

Mr. BUTLER. Not sustained by the Chair?

Mr. VEST. I do not mean to say that the Chair sustained it, but the result of the colloquy and of the debate was that the Senator from Florida was forced to read it himself; and I say if that was done in that case the same objection ought to be valid in this.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think that there is a parallel between the two cases; I utterly dissent from connecting the two cases, but I desire to conform to what has been the unwritten rule and the practice of the Senate. I therefore shall not insist upon this address or memorial going in the RECORD, but I want to give notice now that if I am in the Senate there is an end to this matter of memorials and petitions of any kind whatever going into the RECORD, if I can prevent it.

Mr. BUTLER. I can assure the Senator that I shall join him in that, and I only regret that he had not arrived at that conclusion and that I had not arrived at it before the vast amount of what I call stuff has been printed in the RECORD in the discussion of what is known as the Blair bill in the Senate. If that rule is to be enforced, I hope that my friend from Connecticut will join me in excluding such matter hereafter in regard to that measure as well as others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to print is withdrawn.

Mr. PLATT. Not the motion to print.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to print in the RECORD is withdrawn. The memorial will be printed in the usual form and laid on the table.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill now.

THE PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. VEST introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 52) to regulate the printing of certain public documents; which was read the first time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That 700 copies of any document ordered by Congress shall be printed, and that number shall be known as "the usual number." No greater number shall be printed unless ordered by either the Senate or House of Representatives; and whenever a specified number of copies shall be ordered of any document the usual number of copies shall not be printed or bound in addition to such specified number as now provided by law.

That of the following-named documents there shall be printed and bound the following number of copies, namely:

First. Of the documents accompanying the annual reports of the Executive Departments, 500 copies for members of the Senate and 1,000 copies for members of the House.

Second. Of the President's message, the annual reports of the Executive Departments, and the abridgment of accompanying documents, unless otherwise ordered by either House, 1,000 copies for members of the Senate and 3,000 for members of the House of Representatives.

Third. Of papers relating to foreign affairs accompanying the annual message of the President, 500 copies for members of the Senate and 1,000 copies for members of the House of Representatives.

Fourth. Of the commercial relations annually prepared under the direction of the State Department, 500 copies for members of the Senate and 2,000 copies for members of the House of Representatives.

Fifth. Of the annual report on the statistics of commerce and navigation, exports and imports, merchandise in transit, manufactures and registered and enrolled vessels, prepared by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, 1,000 copies for members of the Senate and 3,000 copies for members of the House of Representatives.

Sixth. Of the public Journals of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, 1,500 copies.

Mr. VEST. It is my purpose, Mr. President, to move the reference of the joint resolution to the Committee on Printing, but I hope the Senate will indulge me in a very few observations with regard to the resolution before it is referred. I do not see any member of the Committee on Printing of the Senate present, but they will of course see my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I ask their attention to what I now state, whether it be worthy of their consideration or not.

In participating in the unpremeditated debate which came up in the Senate last Thursday on a report of the Committee on Printing, I took occasion to notice what I consider a palpable and gross abuse of the laws and practices obtaining now in regard to the printing of public documents. The Associated Press made such reports of my few disconnected remarks that the impression seems to have gone throughout the country on the part of those persons who do not take the trouble to read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but only read the Associated Press dispatches, that I was burdened with a very large number of valuable public documents which I could not distribute and of which I wanted to get rid. The result is that my mail has been filled since that debate with applications from all portions of the United States, asking for full copies of the census reports, of the geological surveys, of the Medical History of the War of the Rebellion, of statistical atlases, of ethnological reports, agricultural reports, Smithsonian reports—all except, as my friend from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] suggests, the debate on the Blair bill or documents appertaining thereto. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I have endeavored in my feeble way to make it distinctly understood—and I hope the reporters for the Associated Press will take notice of what I say, because this has become a matter of personal interest—that the documents to which I referred were not such as I have now enumerated; they were documents issued to me for my personal use under the existing legislation of Congress, and they comprise Journals of the House and Senate, bound copies of every resolution of inquiry adopted by either House of Congress, reports of bureaus, with long arrays of statistical information, which, as I said then and repeat now, no human being will ever read, unless it be some man sentenced to death whose sentence has been commuted to solitary imprisonment for life.

The clerk of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds told me within the last half hour that he sent to the basement of this Capitol last week twenty-five bags of these documents, having no room for them in the committee-room. The shelves and glass cases are now full. There are in the basement of this Capitol, as I have ascertained upon inquiry, over two thousand bags of these documents to-day. There is but one living man who knows exactly what they are, and if he should die it would require a committee of inquiry to ascertain their location. There is not a committee-room in the Capitol that is not filled with them. If a Senator desires any of this information, if he wishes to know what Congress has done or to know what has been reported from a bureau, all of us are well aware that our practice is not to go to these volumes, but to address a note to Mr. Amzi Smith, in the document-room, who immediately sends us the volume, with the proper record.

I do not object to the publication by this Government of valuable information for the people. I object to the wasting of money by the hundreds of thousands of dollars upon this trash, this refuse matter, this débris, which is never used by anybody after it has been published. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] a short time ago informed me that when he entered public life he undertook to preserve the books that were issued for his personal use, and that he had kept six or seven thousand volumes, not one of which he had had occasion to refer to at all.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] said to me the other day that the fact that I could not give away these public documents in the State of Missouri was an argument for the Blair bill, and rather intimated that the educational facilities of that people were a little under par. Mr. President, I would not insult the most benighted Republican in Missouri by sending him one of these documents [laughter], much less a Democrat. What must be the Senator's estimate of the intellectual capacity of one of his constituents when he sends him a Journal of the Senate or the House of Representatives? A brother Senator told me the other day, after the debate, that he had never found but one use for them, and that was in the remote counties of his State to young lawyers just going into practice who were unable to buy a very full library, and he disposed of a few of them for the purpose of being arrayed on their shelves, because they are bound in law sheep or calf and make a show as if they were legal authorities. It is represented that a certain man who acquired an immense fortune determined to buy a private library, but the instinct of economy came in at that time, so he simply bought the outside covering, without any contents, and arrayed them in his library, and they answered all his purposes and those of his family. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, since that debate I have made some inquiries on this subject, and I have been astonished at the condition of the laws in regard to the public printing as they now stand. I spent days in the Printing Office and in the document-room of the Senate, and if the Senate will indulge me for a few moments I will give the result of my explorations. If there is any feature of the public service which needs a little attention on the part of Congress I think it is that in regard to printing.

The present law on the subject of printing to which I ask the attention of my colleagues is as follows:

SEC. 3791. There shall be printed 750 copies of every bill or joint resolution ordered by either House of Congress, or required by any rule thereof to be printed, unless a different number shall be specifically ordered.

SEC. 3792. Fifteen hundred and fifty copies of any document ordered by Congress shall be printed, and that number shall be known as the usual number. No greater number shall be printed unless ordered by either House or as hereinafter provided.

Whenever any document shall be ordered printed by Congress the law says—

There shall be printed, in addition to the number in each case stated, the "usual number" of copies for binding and distribution among those entitled to receive them; and this shall apply to all unexecuted orders now in the office of the Public Printer.

In other words, when a Senator moves that 500 copies of a certain document be printed, under this law the Public Printer prints in addition to the 500 copies 1,550 copies more—2,050 copies instead of 500 are printed if a Senator simply moves that a document be printed; and that has obtained in this country for years.

Mr. CALL. Is that authorized by the section the Senator has just read?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir. It says that whenever any document or report shall be ordered printed by Congress there shall be printed, in addition to the number in each case stated, the usual number of copies, which is 1,550. Now, mark you, this is not for printing, but for binding and distribution among those entitled to receive the same, "and this shall apply to all unexecuted orders." Any public document which any Senator here moves to have printed to the number of 500 or 100 copies, when ordered, under this law the Public Printer prints 1,550 copies more and binds them. The usual number is 1,550. If no specific number is mentioned and there is simply an order to print, 1,550 copies are always printed.

But that is not all of it. There are not only printed of the public Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives 1,550 copies; the number provided by section 3792, which I have just read, is 1,550 copies, and the number authorized by the paragraph which I have just read is 1,550, and 50 copies are ordered by section 3799 for the purpose of exchange with foreign countries. So we print, instead of 1,550 and 50 added, making 1,600, 3,150 copies, by a mistake in the revision of the statutes, and that has been going on for years. One thousand copies are for what are called the reserved numbers; about 1,550 are sent to the document-room and distributed amongst members of Congress, bound and distributed, with no law for it; but I ascertained from the Public Printer and from the superintendent of the document-room that it is a tradition or practice that has grown up without any written law on the subject at all. Further the law provides:

SEC. 3798. Of the documents named in this section there shall be printed and bound, in addition to the usual number for Congress, the following numbers of copies, namely:

First. Of the documents accompanying the annual reports of the Executive Departments, 1,000 copies for the use of the members of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the members of the House of Representatives.

These are all the little minutiæ which accompany the reports of the different Secretaries—Treasury, Navy, War, Interior, etc. The report of the Secretary of the Interior embraces five volumes, of the Secretary of the Treasury six volumes, and we print of them 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of members of the House.

Second. Of the President's message, the annual reports of the Executive Departments, and the abridgment of accompanying documents, unless otherwise ordered by either House, 10,000 copies for the use of the members of the Senate and 25,000 copies for the use of the members of the House of Representatives, etc. [See section 75.]

Third. Of papers relating to foreign affairs, accompanying the annual message of the President, 2,000 copies for the use of the members of the Senate and 4,000 copies for the use of the members of the House of Representatives.

Fourth. Of the commercial relations, annually prepared under the direction of the State Department, 2,000 copies for the use of the members of the Senate and 3,000 copies for the use of the members of the House of Representatives. [See section 208.]

Fifth. Of the annual report on the statistics of commerce and navigation, exports and imports, merchandise in transit, manufactures, and registered and enrolled vessels, prepared by the special commissioner of the revenue, 2,000 copies for the use of the members of the Senate and 6,150 copies for the use of the members of the House of Representatives. [See sections 336, 340.]

Sixth. Of the public Journals of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, 1,550 copies.

By a mistake in the Revised Statutes the distribution required of the Senate Journal is 3,194, the House of Representatives 3,128, but we print 2,150 only.

What has been the result of this nebulous and contradictory legislation? To each member of the Senate and House of Representatives there have been distributed, bound in calf or sheep, in the four Congresses, commencing with the Forty-sixth, 729 volumes. Of the Journals of the Senate and House and of bureau reports, which, I undertake to say, are as absolutely worthless as any trash that ever was dumped out under the authority of a municipal corporation, 729 volumes have been issued in these four Congresses to each member of the Senate and House of Representatives and each Delegate from a Territory. I find on inquiry at the Printing Office that not one of these volumes has cost less than $2, and some of them cost as high as $2.85 and $3 apiece. There are 76 Senators and 334 Members and Delegates of the House, making 410 together in the two Houses. The number of public documents sent to each in the Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh, Forty-eighth, and Forty-ninth Congresses is 729, making 300,348 volumes at $2 apiece, making $600,696, or $150,174 in each Congress, and this for the personal use of Senators, Members, and Delegates alone, for personal reference alone.

Besides this there have been printed and bound of these documents, this same trash and rubbish, in these four Congresses, all documents accompanying the annual reports of the Executive Departments, 12,000; of the President's message and abridgment, 140,000; of papers relating to foreign affairs accompanying the President's message, 24,000; of Commercial Relations, 20,000; of Commerce and Navigation, 32,600; of Journals of the Senate and House, 12,600, making 241,200 of these volumes, which, at the lowest price, the minimum cost in the Printing Office, $2, would amount to $482,400. In other words, we have thrown away in these four Congresses alone $1,200,000 of the public money.

Sir, I alluded a few minutes ago to the letters I had received asking for the valuable publications from the Printing Office, and I made that statement not only on account of the personal inconvenience to myself from receiving these letters, but to emphasize the fact that there is a demand throughout the country for valuable publications, and that demand is not satisfied. Instead of this money being thrown away under the present system it should be applied to the publication of works that the people desire and that would do some good towards distributing public intelligence and information amongst our constituents. The consideration of this matter has drawn me into an inquiry on the subject. I have received, with my brother Senators, 729 volumes of these works during the past four Congresses, and a considerable number of them are now on hand.

Under the law every library in the United States is supplied by the Secretary of the Interior with these publications. The result is that when any Senator or Representative offers them to a library in his State, the reply comes back, "We have already received them from the Interior Department." We are compelled, then, to keep them here and stow them away, or we mock the intelligence of our constituents by sending them this trash, which I say no man, unless put into solitary confinement for life, would undertake to examine. This Capitol is full of them from cellar to garret, every committee-room is full of them, the Departments are full of them, and still the stream of publication goes on.

I have contributed what little I could to the discovery of the nuisance. I hope the Committee on Printing will adopt some amendment of these laws that will do away with what is becoming an intolerable evil.

The joint resolution was read the second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to state on behalf of my colleague [Mr. MANDERSON], the chairman of the Committee on Printing, that he is unavoidably detained from the Senate to-day, otherwise he would undoubtedly be glad to consider the question to which the Senator from Missouri has called attention, and make reply to some of the references made to him and his committee by the Senator from Missouri in the course of his remarks.

I desire to state, so far as I am concerned, that I should be glad myself to receive for my constituents a goodly number of documents such as my friend has furnished a statement of. There are some hundreds of thousands of pioneers upon homesteads on the frontier in my State, and the same is true in greater or less degree of the other States and Territories of the newer West, who are hungry and thirsty for knowledge of any and all kinds, and who would be glad to receive anything upon any subject that might be considered worthy of the attention of Congress or of committees or commissions acting under its direction and upon which reports have been made and printed. Undoubtedly there have been some abuses; I do not know to what extent, because I have not been here for some years; but as for myself, a new Senator, having no documents of any kind worth mentioning for distribution, I should be glad to receive from my friend or from any other source five or six thousand of even these disparaged documents which he has described.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution has been disposed of.

SEGREGATION OF IRRIGABLE LANDS.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to inform the Senate if in his opinion it is desirable to authorize the organization in his Department known as the Geological Survey to segregate lands of the public domain capable of irrigation, in the sections of the United States where irrigation is required, from other lands, and to lay out suitable places to be reserved for reservoirs and rights of way for ditches and canals for the purposes of irrigation.

THE MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. REAGAN. On Thursday last I asked that the resolution which went on the Calendar in relation to the Post-Office Department might go over until to-day, and if it be in order, and the Senate will consent, I should like to take it up, because I desire to submit some remarks on the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call it up after the conclusion of business under the order of "concurrent and other resolutions." The Chair must first receive original resolutions.

PRINTING OF TARIFF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. FAULKNER submitted the following resolution; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate, to be paid for out of the contingent fund, 8,000 copies of Treasury Department Document No. 937, embracing "The tariff on imports into the United States and the free-list, as contained in the act of March 3, 1883; also, the Hawaiian reciprocity treaty, and extracts from the navigation and oleomargarine acts."

THE LIBRARY BUILDING.

Mr. VOORHEES. I offer a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate the report made to him as chairman of the commission for the construction of a building for the Library of Congress by John L. Smithmeyer, architect, dated February 1, 1888, and that the same be printed for the use of the Senate and the commission.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, before action is taken upon the resolution I desire, with the consent of the Senate, to make a few remarks.

On Thursday last, it will be remembered, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] indulged in a criticism in regard to the expenditure of money thus far by the commission who have in charge the construction of the Congressional Library. I was out of the Chamber at the time and when I returned I was informed that an attack had been made, and I supposed it was as to the delay of the work, which had already been complained of, and I answered accordingly. I do not regret that I made answer upon that point, but at the close of the colloquy between the Senator from Kansas and myself he challenged any explanation of the expense account upon which he had dwelt, and I undertook to respond.

Now, before I do that—and I shall occupy not much time of the Senate—I desire to call the attention of Senators to the responsibility which belongs to this work and where it rests, and for that purpose I will ask the Secretary to read the first section of the act of April 15, 1886, authorizing the construction of the building.

The Secretary read as follows:

That a fire-proof building, for the accommodation of the Library of Congress, shall be erected east of the Capitol, and either between B street north and East Capitol street and First street east and Second street east, or between B street south and East Capitol street and First street east and Second street east, and as the commission hereinafter provided shall determine; and the construction of said building, substantially according to the plan submitted to the Joint Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress, by John L. Smithmeyer, in the Italian renaissance style of architecture, with such modifications as may be found necessary or advantageous, without materially increasing the cost of the building, shall be in charge of a commission composed of the Secretary of the Interior, the Architect of the Capitol Extension, and the Librarian of Congress, who shall be authorized and directed to make contracts for the construction thereof, after proper advertisements and the reception of bids; and the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to commence the construction of said building; and the moneys appropriated for said building shall be disbursed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, that was what we thought was best after six years of careful consideration and labor by joint committees and by both Houses of Congress. I have had it read now to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the work is in charge of three officers of the Government who can be paid no additional salary, each one being a salaried officer—the Secretary of the Interior, the Librarian of Congress, and the Architect of this Capitol.

I call attention to the further fact that they, and they alone, can make contracts, advertise for bids, receive bids, employ labor, skilled and otherwise, in this work, and disburse all the money appropriated. In other words, when this matter is simplified, the architect of this building does not disburse a dollar, signs no voucher, can not employ, of his own will and power, a single human being, can make no contract, can consider no bid; he can only act in regard to all matters as he is directed and controlled by the commission. He himself is an employé of the commission and is paid for his work. So that whatever has been done or undone, whether well done or ill done, the responsibility rests upon the commission. If there has been delay, or if there has been extravagance in the expenditure of money, we know very well where to place it.

It is needless for me to say, knowing the character of this commission, that in my judgment there has not been the slightest impropriety in the expenditure of moneys or in anything else. The bill, one section of which I have had read, was approved on the 15th of April, 1886, less than two years ago. The first summer was largely consumed in clearing the ground, which was almost compactly built up with many valuable buildings. They had to be purchased pursuant to the law and then removed.

Sir, in 1872 the bill for the construction of the State, War, and Navy Department became a law, more than fifteen years ago, and it is only just now being finished and fully occupied. I do not cite this as an example to be emulated, by any means. I expect to see the books of this Congress and of this Government in the new Library building in less than one-third that time; but it does seem to me, and I say it with all kindness, for I have no disposition otherwise, that those who have seen that work going on for fifteen years are somewhat uncharitable when they seem to expect this Library building to be almost completed in less than two years. Especially does this appear when it is understood that the Library building in contemplation is 21,000 square feet larger than the State, War, and Navy. It is 21,000 feet larger than that entire Department. It is to be the largest library building in the world; there will be none to compare with it; and consequently each step taken should be with the utmost circumspection, skill, prudence, and care.

I shall turn now, however, to the specific charges made by the Senator from Kansas, the items of expense which he read without explanation. Let us see how they sound accompanied by the statement of facts which I have in my hand.

The first item cited by the Senator, charging extravagance, was $38,000. Sir, this amount was expended in the tearing down and removal of upwards of forty-five buildings; the leveling of the grounds; removing water, gas, and sewer pipes; removing curb-stones; taking up asphalt pavements on First street and Pennsylvania avenue; removing trees; filling up cellars under the forty-five houses; filling up cisterns, wells, and out-houses; surveying and staking out the site; digging out the bed of an old creek which ran through the site, and grading in front of the grounds.

I am willing for that item to speak for itself. I can add nothing.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him there?

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

Mr. PLUMB. Do I understand that he says this work of which he speaks was done out of that $38,000?

Mr. VOORHEES. I do. I mean what I say. If I am wrong, I am open to correction by the Senator.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator will look at pages 14 and 15 of the report of the commissioners he will see at once that no such labor as he speaks of was embraced in the $38,000 that I referred to the other day.

Mr. VOORHEES. Sir, I will stand or fall on the substantial accuracy of the statement I have made. Such is my information from a most reliable source. I will not take up the time of the Senate by turning to the pages of the report to see whether it agrees or not. I know that my statement corresponds with the facts.

The second item cited by the Senator from Kansas was $1,821.15 for office expenses. This includes the necessary material, mathematical instruments, compasses, T-squares, brushes, coloring paints, rules, paper, drawing-pencils, pens, inks, etc., without which the work could not be performed; also the printing of advertisements for proposals, as required by law, for excavating the soil, excavation of trenches for foundations, for laying and furnishing drainage system, for heating and ventilating pipes, for laying concrete foundations, and for the necessary binding of a few architectural works.

It will be observed before we are done that this is a large work; it is not a small or ordinary building that we are now engaged in.

The third item is $2,612.16—office furniture, drawing-boards, cases, awnings. This amount includes the fitting up of the rooms of the commission and its secretary, disbursing agent, clerk, and messenger, with desks, tables, chairs, type-writing machines, copy-presses, safes, etc., on the first floor, and the fitting up of quarters for the architectural force on the second floor, with necessary desks, drawing-tables, drawing-boards, cases for safe-keeping of instruments, plans, and working drawings; also the necessary awnings to shield the draughtsmen from the sun in the prosecution of their work.

The fourth item is $1,954.17 for fitting up offices at 145 East Capitol street. This amount includes the removing of partitions, propping up joists in upper stories of building in place of these partitions, enlarging rooms for use of draughtsmen (the front room in the old residence selected for that purpose not affording necessary accommodations); also removal of bath-rooms, water-closets, etc., and for refitting, repairing, and the furnishing of stoves and other heating apparatus. This item also includes the fitting up of old building No. 3 Second street for weighing the building material brought to the premises, and for making tests of lime, cement, etc.

The fifth item is $919.66 for blue-print room. This item includes the construction and fitting up on the roof of the office building of a "blue-print room." By this process the numerous copies of plans and working drawings required for the various bidders on the different work, and for contractors during the prosecution of such work, are most accurately and economically made. At the present time no department of the Government where drawings are made and multiplied for the purposes above stated is without such a room. A single copy of a plan made by the old process of copying by hand would cost as much as several hundred of them made by this process, and is less accurate. It also saves the expense of paying for photographing views of the progress of the work as they become necessary from time to time.

The sixth item is $261.51 for fuel and gas. This amount is necessary from the fact that twenty-seven men who are employed in sedentary work have to be kept comfortable during the winter. Perhaps the Senator will say that twenty-seven men are a large number engaged in draughting and other sedentary work, but it is only necessary to reply that each stone that is to go into this building is to be computed in square inches, and its weight and its resisting power and all its other qualities scientifically tested. It is an enormous work. It staggered me when I came face to face with it and saw what had to be done. I knew but little on the subject, and yet I presume I am no more ignorant and no more wise than most of my brother Senators on the question of the construction of one of these great Government buildings. It is an enormous and elaborate work, or certainly the Department I have spoken of at the west end of the Avenue would not have taken fifteen years to complete.

The seventh item is $573 for laborer and janitor. This item is for the pay of men employed to keep the house clean, attend to the fires, water-closets, etc.

The eighth item is $868. I will say in advance that if it is thought best to economize on a horse and buggy, here is the place to do it. There has been a great deal of complaint about a coupé being employed. I call it a buggy. The Senator may call it a coupé if he chooses, but in the plain vernacular of my country we speak of a horse and buggy. This reads:

Coupé and two horses—

I will explain that—

One to replace horse sold and proceeds covered into the Treasury.

So that there are no two horses. It is only a one-horse chaise.

Coupé and two horses, harness, robe, and blankets. The architect considered it necessary to a proper discharge of the duties enjoined by his position to make a request of the commission for a horse and coupé. It was utterly impracticable for him to cover the distances necessary to be made in the ordinary public conveyances which confined him within certain limits and would have enforced the consumption of much time. The travel from 145 East Capitol street to Easby's wharf, at the foot of Twenty-second street, and thence to navy-yard, involving about nine miles, would have kept him on the street and drawn him from the important and necessary duties of his office. He could not inspect material by telephone. The original cost of the horse and second-hand coupé in use was increased by the unfortunate fact that the horse first purchased became unsound; was condemned by a veterinary surgeon, and had to be sold, the amount thus realized being covered into the Treasury. Hence the item for two horses and driver.

I have nothing more about this to say. If anybody objects to that item, it can be very easily remedied.

The ninth item is $540.49, for livery bills for carriage, horse, repairs. Inasmuch as the horse must be fed and the carriage kept in cleanly condition, the above charge is both proper and moderate.

The tenth item is $35.11 for washing towels. I am following these items seriatim, because the Senator from Kansas cut out the work in that way. On this point I have to say that in a house where twenty-seven men are employed as draughtsmen and clerks, all of whom must have clean hands, from the nature of their business, this amount for washing towels covering a period of more than a year, at 25 cents a dozen, is a very proper one.

The eleventh item is 75 cents, for notary's fees. I promised that I would try, although not a great success as a financier, to answer this financial problem. That is my apology for taking up so much time. The law requires that if an article is urgently needed and obtained, an affidavit to that effect must be made before a notary, for which a charge of 25 cents is levied each time.

The twelfth item is $25.30 for cleaning windows and putting away fuel. The only light which penetrates into the house is through the windows, and as we need much light, they must be kept clean. The fuel must be put away when it arrives from the coal-yard, otherwise it would be carried away by others.

The thirteenth item is $11.25 for lantern and oil for watchmen. There must be watchmen in the building and outside, to prevent trespass, nuisance, and danger from fire, this last danger to be apprehended for a variety of reasons, the house being old, the heating apparatus and stoves being likewise, and a carpenter shop beneath adding to the peril. These facts, combined with the combustible material everywhere present, such as papers, drawings, etc., give serious cause for alarm. The watchmen must have lanterns and oil.

The fourteenth item is $216 for making models for architect. The person who does this work is the one who was jeered at for being a sculptor, and it was queried in a critical way, as I see by the RECORD, what the architect of the Library needed with a sculptor! There is no architect who, being employed on a monumental structure such as this, does not require his ideas to be graphically illustrated by models—models which afford him a correct idea of proportion necessary in point of depth, width, and heights, etc., more especially in a grand reading-room. The modeler, or we might call him a sculptor in this case, is borrowed from the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, and is only paid for the time he is needed by this office. His pay ($5 per day) is exceedingly reasonable.

Again: Miscellaneous supplies, $54.07. This item includes hardware and lumber for making and repairing draughting-boards and office furniture, supplies for the carpenter shop, etc.

The fifteenth item is $5,639.08 for secretary, accountant, disbursing agent, and messenger. This item is fully explained in the accompanying letter from the secretary of the commission, addressed to the architect, February 11, as is also the seventeenth item, mentioned by Senator PLUMB in his remarks before the Senate, as given by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 10, page 1130, under the caption, "Employés in charge of horses and carts."

I understand there was a great deal of amusement created by the charge made by the Senator that there was an item of expense made in paying women who had charge of horses and carts. Here is the letter to which I have alluded, from the secretary of the commission:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSION FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY BUILDING,
No. 145 EAST CAPITOL STREET,
Washington, D. C., February 11, 1888.

SIR: In response to your verbal request for an explanation of the item charged in the report of the Commission for Construction of the Congressional Library Building, in response to resolution of the Senate of January 4, 1888, for "salaries and pay of office employés, * * * secretary, accountant, disbursing agent, and messenger, $5,639.08," I would state that this item is for the services of the secretary of the commission since August 7, 1886; of the accountant since March 21, 1887; of the disbursing agent since August 23, 1887; of messenger since November 18, 1886, and percentage paid the disbursing clerk of the Department of the Interior for making disbursements under the act approved March 3, 1885. The rates of pay are as follows:

	Per annum.
Secretary	$1,800
Accountant	1,500
Disbursing agent	2,500

Messenger, $30 per month.

The disbursing clerk of the Interior Department was paid the sum of $253.23 for disbursing previous to September 1, 1887.

In regard to the list of persons designated in the "Blue Book" as employed in the construction of the Congressional Library building, this list was made under the provisions of the act of Congress of December 15, 1877, and is a list of persons so employed or borne on the rolls on the 1st day of July, 1887, both permanently and temporarily employed. Since that time nearly all the laborers and all the horses and carts and the wagons and teams have been discharged, so that at the present time there are but ten laborers, or persons designated as such, employed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair). The Senator from Indiana will suspend. It is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let me have ten minutes.

Mr. VEST. I hope the Senator will be permitted to proceed.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] is entitled to the floor on the unfinished business.

Mr. PLUMB. I will yield.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will not detain the Senate long.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senator from Indiana will proceed.

Mr. BLAIR. The time for taking the final vote on the educational bill, by unanimous consent, was fixed for Wednesday, at 3 o'clock. This delay was to accommodate Senators who are opposed to the bill, and I do not feel that I am at liberty to assent to the use of the time without the consent of those who wish to speak against the bill. This, however, is done with the consent of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am very much obliged to the Senator from New Hampshire and also to the Senator from Kansas.

Referring to this list—

the secretary of the commission continues—

Referring to this list, the blanks sent to this office were filled out, and under the title of "horses and carts" the names of the owners of the horses and carts, etc., which were then employed were written. The same was the case in regard to the owner of the wagon and team then employed. It is not known in this office how or for what purpose the words "in charge of" were inserted before the words "horses and carts," and "wagon and team," respectively. The horses and carts and the wagon and team were hired from the persons designated.

Thus the horses and carts were hired from some poor women, and it was made to appear that they were in charge of them; but they were only hired. They were simply hired, and the women, their owners, were paid.

Respectfully,

J. B. TRAINER,
Secretary of Commission.

Mr. J. L. SMITHMEYER,
Architect of the Congressional Library Building.

The sixteenth item is $23,200 for architect, assistant architect, computer, civil engineer, experts, draughtsmen, clerks, messengers, and modeler.

The pay-roll will show that the compensations given to these gentlemen are fair and reasonable. The architect vouches for the fact that they perform their duties and earn their pay. The modeler, or "sculptor," so called, as well as the rest of this technical force, is doing necessary work in advance of the construction of the building.

Mr. President, I have been connected with this work for the last eight years, and it is very near my heart. If I thought there was an irregularity or impropriety on the part of any one, I would be the first to cry aloud and spare not. I have thought it proper and respectful to the Senate and to the country to make this frank and thorough exposition of what is going on.

Suppose the Architect of this Capitol, or of the Department that is now just being finished, to which I have already alluded, had been called on for a statement of his affairs, and inspected at any period, we would have found the same kind of work being done, and no more faithfully or safely than it has been done here. It is not possible that this work should be in safer hands—a cabinet minister, a librarian known and respected, not merely by us here, but by the people of this entire country, and known and respected in the libraries of Europe; also an old and trusted official in the person of the Capitol Architect. Why, I should like to know, would the commission, as now composed, make delays, and fail to push this work forward?

Sir, I can say regarding the extraordinary charge that there is no honest purpose to push this work to a completion, that so far as I know, and I know well, this commission has worked steadily and persistently to forward every step of the work and has used every lawful means to secure contractors of energy and responsibility to forward it.

So far as the Librarian is concerned, what must be his desire? The completion of this building is a matter of personal relief to him. No man labors under greater embarrassment or has a severer task to perform than he has. To delay the work on the new Library entails on him additional labor in caring for the vast collection of books over which he now presides. He is constantly called upon to produce, and does produce, from that multifarious collection, not only books and information for Congress and the Departments, the Judiciary, and the general public, but also publications stored in evidence of copyright, musical compositions, engravings, periodicals demanded for inspection, and to settle legal questions in cases of copyright. The idea that Mr. Spofford, or indeed any other gentleman charged with this duty, should delay it is wholly inadmissible.

Now, in regard to another branch of controversy relative to the materials to be used, I wish to say simply this: Unless material, both stone and cement, responds to scientific tests it can not go in that building. If it did the men who allow such material to go there ought to be impeached and thrown from office. There are certain scientific tests to which every atom that goes into the construction of that magnificent building can and must be rigidly subjected, and its strength, its durability, ascertained beforehand. The marble or the granite can and must and will be tested as to its power to resist fire, what weight it will bear, what discoloration may come, and so with everything else, and if the architect of the Library is not competent for such work as that he ought not to remain an hour.

But who is Mr. Smithmeyer? He is one of the oldest architects of the American Association, and he is president of the Architects' Association of this city. He is likewise president of the Civil Engineers' Association of this city, a man of the highest capacity and of unquestioned integrity. In this connection—for I do not wish to detain the Senate longer—I shall send to the desk and ask to have read an article from a periodical entitled The American Architect and Building News, published in Boston, and recognized as the foremost authority on architecture in the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

In obedience to an order passed by the United States Senate January 4, a special report has been prepared upon the construction of the Congressional Library building, which is now printed, and offers some interesting details in regard to this great public work. Although the report does not go out of its way to refer to personal matters, it seems not unlikely that the occasion for its preparation is to be sought in the outrageous attacks made in the newspapers on the integrity of the architect in regard to the tests which he applied to the cement which was furnished by the contractor for making the concrete to be used in the foundation of the building. The fact appears to have been that the specifications required that the cement should pass the ordinary tests, showing a tensile strength of 300 pounds per square inch after one day in air and six days in water, and leaving not more than 10 per cent. residuum upon a sieve of 2,500 meshes to the square inch.

The samples furnished by one of the bidders fulfilled both these requirements and the contract was awarded to him. On commencing the work, however, the contractor sent to the building a lot of cement of a brand not included among those which he had submitted by sample for the original test. The architect promptly rejected this, as not being in accordance with the contract, which was, of course, based upon the samples accompanying the original tender. The commission in charge of the construction of the building, however, on being appealed to, instructed the architect to test the new cement, which had not previously been offered by any bidder, and to accept it if he found it capable of passing the tests required in the specifications. Seventy-two samples were, in pursuance of this direction, tested, only sixteen of which showed a tensile strength of 300 pounds, as required, while most of the others were far below the standard, the lowest being 78 pounds. This alone would necessitate the rejection of the cement as being inferior to the plain and reasonable demands of the specification, but Mr. Smithmeyer found also that it was very quick-setting, and this quality, always a dangerous one in Portland cement and particularly so in cement to be used for concrete, seemed to him as well as to several other experts to whom he submitted it, quite sufficient to condemn it for the purposes of the Library building, independent of other considerations.

On the second and final rejection of the cement of the new brand the contractor sent a quantity of the cement of one of the brands submitted by him with his bid, and perhaps the oldest and best known in this country of all the Portland cements. The watchful architect immediately took samples from the barrels delivered and tested them as before. Instead, however, of showing a tensile strength averaging 307 pounds to the square inch, as did the samples submitted with the bid, the samples from the barrels delivered on the work gave an average tensile strength of only 233 pounds, only four specimens out of two hundred and seventy tested by different experts reaching the strength demanded by the contract. Moreover, some of the contractor's cement proved more quick-setting than that which had been already rejected, and an engineer officer of the Army, who ought to be a good judge, wrote to the architect to say that in his opinion the cement was probably not what the brands on the barrels indicated it to be.

In private work the architect, under such circumstances, would simply order the contractor to remove the whole of the cement from the ground at once; but in Washington, where an immense amount of influence can be brought to bear upon public officers, this is not so easy, and the contractor, together with those who sold him the condemned cements, appeared by counsel before the commissioners, criticising the tests, and urging the acceptance of the cement without regard to the architect's opinion of it, while a paragraph appeared in the press dispatches all over the country to the effect that the architect of the Library building had been detected in a scheme for keeping out, by arbitrary and unreasonable tests, cements of excellent quality, in order to compel the use in the building of a particular brand, in the sale of which he had a personal interest.

Fortunately, the people of the United States have found in Mr. Smithmeyer an architect who not only understands the art which he professes, but suffers neither personal influence nor cruel calumny to turn him from the path of vigilant fidelity to the trust reposed in him, and, while he makes in his part of the report no complaints or accusations in regard to any person, and assumes no airs of injured professional dignity, all architects will cordially sympathize with him in his modest suggestion that considerations of generosity toward contractors ought not to justify the relaxation of requirements indispensable to sound construction, and that for this reason the judgment of the architect in matters within his province ought to be sustained, even if he should seem at times too strict in the construction of his specifications. In this particular case, it certainly can not be said that a standard of 300 pounds tensile strength after seven days is too strict, and, in view of the danger from the swelling of some quick-setting cements, the architect ought to have the privilege, which, indeed, the specification expressly reserves to him, of "subjecting the cement to such other tests as he may require," so that Mr. Smithmeyer can hardly be accused of having been too strict in his interpretation of the specification.

In one of the tests, which was made independently for the commissioners by General M. C. Meigs, a question of considerable technical importance was brought up. Although the cement sent to the building fell below the required tensile strength, General Meigs expressed the opinion in his report to the commissioners that it was "quite good enough for the foundations of the Library of Congress," and stronger than any cement known to him as having been used in the foundations of any United States building in Washington, and went on to say that "these concrete foundations are to be subjected to compressive strains only," and that "the tensile strength is used in the examination of the material, because the test is easier and cheaper, and not because the concrete is expected to be pulled, exposed to tensile strains."

Now, although this is unquestionably the case with concrete foundations in soil of uniform resistance, it would not be so where the concrete lay upon a subsoil of unequal consistency. We once knewa cellar floor laid with concrete under the direction of a clever architect, in a building the walls of which stood on piles driven through a soft made ground to a firm stratum. If the concrete were laid on the made ground the settlement which was constantly going on in this would carry down the portions of the floor not attached to the walls, causing cracks and inequalities of surface, and the architect, understanding this, solved the problem by making the concrete layer of sufficient thickness and of materials strong enough to form a bridge over the whole space between the walls capable of carrying all the weight that would be likely to come upon it, without any help from the ground beneath.

As in a less degree a concrete layer on ground which is soft in places and hard in others, may serve to relieve the soft spots by bridging on them, and thus carrying off the strain to the harder places around them, it would certainly appear that a considerable transverse strength was necessary in concrete under such conditions, which, as Mr. Smithmeyer's report says, are those which unavoidably exist under the Library building. As the transverse strain on a mass imperfectly supported below, and subjected to a vertical load is composed of a compressive strain in the upper portions, and a tensile strain in the lower part, and is limited by the capacity of the material for bearing the kind of strain to which it yields most readily, it is of great importance in such cases that concrete which presents an almost unlimited resistance to compression should have a maximum tensile strength, as on this its power of sustaining a transverse strain entirely depends, and it seems to us that Mr. Smithmeyer was, therefore, perfectly justified in specifying a reasonable tensile strength for the cement to be used, and that he was bound to reject cement which would have given him a concrete possessing only three-fourths of the strength which he believed necessary for giving perfect security against the strains which he considered likely to come upon it.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, that is all I desire to say or submit at this time.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the indulgence of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] who is entitled to the floor, and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], in charge of the educational bill, for about three minutes until I can ask the Senate to consider a little bill which has passed the Senate four times, the last time being about ten days ago, but the House of Representatives about the same time passed this bill and sent it to us, and it is now reported back and is Order of Business 278, being the bill (H. R. 19) for the relief of H. B. Wilson, administrator of the estate of William Tinder, deceased. It will not take three minutes. I ask the consent of the Senate to consider it at this time.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator to yield until the resolution offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] is disposed of. It will take but a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular business was laid before the Senate at 2 o'clock. Unanimous consent will be required to further consider the resolution.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Indiana offered a resolution and asked for its present consideration, and I think it had better be acted upon at this time, and I will myself take but a moment if the Senate will indulge me.

The resolution calls for a report made on the 1st day of February by Mr. Smithmeyer to the Library Commission, and asks that it may be transmitted to the Senate for the information of the Senate and of the commission, and it seems to me entirely proper and desirable that that resolution should be adopted at this time.

The question as to the extravagance of the expenditures made by this commission was certainly raised by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] on Thursday last, and has been very properly discussed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] to-day. The Senator from Indiana, however, has also introduced a question of the cement to be used for a foundation for the new Library building, and he discussed that question the other day, and has discussed it again to-day. This question was first raised by the report of the commission, which was presented to the Senate on the 9th of January and referred to the Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress and ordered to be printed. On a subsequent day, on the 24th of January, the contractor, Elias E. Barnes, presented a petition, which has been printed as Miscellaneous Document No. 40, which was referred to the same committee, in which he prays for an investigation of this question of cement. There has been no meeting of the committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, but this debate has been precipitated. As I have said, the chairman of the committee has pretty distinctly expressed his opinion by designating this cement as "rotten cement." I think, therefore, that under the circumstances it is expedient that there be an investigation made by the committee, the chairman of which is the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from New Hampshire will allow me a moment. The Senator is aware of the reason why there has been some delay in calling the committee together. There was some irregularity as to the number, and there was a hitch that caused delay which would have been corrected sooner but for the illness of the Speaker of the House of Representatives. There will be no further delay on that subject, and we shall soon get together.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand the reason given by the Senator, and I find no fault because a meeting of the committee has not been called, and I find no fault because the Senator from Indiana has deemed it important to express his views with reference to this cement, for certainly I would be the last person to desire that inferior cement should be used in the construction of this building. But inasmuch as the Senator has put on record the opinion of the editor of the American Architect, I think in justice to the contractor whose petition is now before the committee, there should also be given to the Senate the letter of Mr. Howard Fleming in reference to this cement, which I will ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reading of the letter? If not it will be read.

Mr. VOORHEES. Whose letter is it?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is from Mr. Howard Fleming. I have no desire to delay the Senate. If there is no objection it may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. VOORHEES. It may argue myself unknown to say that I do not know who Mr. Howard Fleming is. I should like to be advised of his relation to this subject.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think he has a knowledge of this cement, and I suppose quite as much knowledge as the editor of the Architect, whose opinion has been put in by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have no objection to having it read.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not desire to have it read if unanimous consent may be given for printing it without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the paper will be printed in connection with the Senator's remarks.

The Chair hears no objection.

The letter is as follows:

NEW YORK, February 4, 1888.

To the Editors of the American Architect:

DEAR SIRS: In your issue of this date you remark upon the report presented by Mr. J. L. Smithmeyer to the United States Senate on January 4, which gives his reasons for the rejection of the Portland cement for the concrete foundations of the Congressional Library building, and your editorial has the color of an indorsement of this action.

There are two sides to every controversy, and the contractor for the work has yet to be heard from.

Knowing something of the statu quo and assured that you act upon the principle, Fiat justitia ruat cœlum, I trust you will give this communication equal publicity to vindicate the reputation and integrity of those affected.

The first lot of cement purchased by the contractor was Black Cross Portland, as it had proved a safe cement for concrete and was indorsed by eminent engineers and contractors. The report made by the inexperienced person employed by Mr. Smithmeyer to test cement being incorrect, it was not considered, and tests were made by Capt. T. W. Symons, United States Engineer Corps, and A. G. Menocal, of the Washington navy-yard, which demonstrated that the cement exceeded the architect's specifications, namely, to stand a tensile strain of 300 pounds on the square inch at age of seven days, and leave not more than 10 per cent. residuum on a sieve of 2,500 meshes to the square inch. Captain Symons reported that the cement set in five minutes, and therefore it should be condemned.

Mr. Menocal reported that the cement set in twenty-five minutes, and passed no opinion. Investigation of the methods employed for testing the set of cement by Captain Symons proved that the gauger was not accustomed to test Portland, his time being more especially devoted to testing the slow-setting natural cements, of which large quantities are used in the District. After mixing up sufficient Black Cross to make a bar briquette and pressing it into the mold, it was shaken out upon absorptive paper, the entire operation consuming less than three minutes. The cement was then tapped with the finger, and when it failed to take an impression it was considered set. On this method of testing for set the cement is condemned by Mr. Smithmeyer.

An expert, or one familiar with cement, recognizes that to shake cement out on absorptive material draws out the moisture quicker than is intended, and a scale will form sufficient to prevent an impression being made by the finger-tip. Further, the warmth of the finger will tend to dry out the cement at that point. It was suggested that if the quick setting of the cement was due to faulty manufacture the tensile strength at longer date would give some indication of it, and therefore further briquettes were made up at the same time and broken at seven days and thirty-five days with the result of 356 pounds and 501 pounds, respectively, on the square inch, conclusively proving that the set registered was incorrect and that the cement was safe and sound. In the report submitted by the architect no mention is made of this fact, which is on record. The contractors not being permitted to use Black Cross, and another cement that the architect ordered them to obtain being also condemned, it became necessary to present the matter last November before the Library commission. The chairman, Secretary Lamar, decided that General M. C. Meigs should test and report on the cement, for which his practical knowledge well fitted him.

On December 2 General Meigs reported in the following words: "The Blackcross cement has a tensile strength of 459 pounds to the square inch at age of seven days, much more than the specifications require. In regard to rate of setting I find it as intimated on block 12, a quick-setting cement, stiffening in twenty-five minutes after beginning to temper it with water. This morning I tempered a batch of it, and after waiting some time took it downstairs to my office. After mixing it in the second story I forgot to look at it again till after a lapse of eighty-four minutes. It then took some pressure to make a distinct impression on it with a three-sixteenths inch brass wire, but it was easily written on with the point of a penknife. I am of the opinion that skillful workmen will be able to make a strong concrete of Black Cross cement."

The cement, therefore, did not fall below the required tensile strength, as the types unfortunately state in your editorial, and when it can be written upon with the point of a knife eighty-four minutes after mixing, it is not a quick-setting and dangerous cement.

A request to permit the placing of some concrete made with this cement according to specifications in situ and its action watched was refused by the architect, although accompanied with the offer that if the concrete was condemned it should be replaced with cement he selected. As cold weather was approaching, when no work could be done, the concrete would have several months of service trial, and the rejection of the offer was unreasonable.

When this cement is being used by the contractors for the Croton aqueduct (all of which is subjected to a rigid test by the engineers, as it is employed in situations exacting more than is required in the Congressional Library foundations), and not a single complaint has been made of the 25,000 barrels already delivered, it is incredible that it is the worthless material the architect imputes it to be, and there is foundation for the assertions which your article intimates have been circulated in press dispatches all over the country. The reputation of a well-known manufacturer and the honor of an importing merchant are not to be lightly impeached, even by the political influence that has been brought to bear in this case, which is derogatory to the profession that should be ornamented by the architect of the Congressional Library building.

Yours, truly, HOWARD FLEMING.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now I hope the resolution will be passed.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say in regard to the matter to which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] has just addressed himself, that I can not now respond to the careful statement he has presented, so as to do justice to the subject.

I understand him to maintain, as the argument of the commission, that there has been no extravagance, no unnecessary expenditure of public money in connection with the Library building up to this date. Upon that point, without having the details at hand, I take issue with him, and I think I shall be able to show to the Senate some time when I shall have had a chance to examine his statement that he is mistaken, and that not only has there been extravagance, but incompetence, and that if we are desirous of having a Library building, as I know he sincerely is, we shall have to make a clean out from beginning to end of the entire establishment now connected with that construction. That, at all events, is my belief, and I think the sooner it is done the better.

But I will not detain the Senate any further on this point now. It has been arranged that I should say what I have to say about the pending order, being the educational bill at this time.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5514) to amend section 4883 of the Revised Statutes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 2974) for the relief of John Snoddy;

A bill (S. 1754) for the relief of Henry H. Marmaduke, of Missouri; and

A bill (S. 1022) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands in Kansas.

WILLIAM TINDER.

Mr. HARRIS. Now I renew my request that Order of Business 278 be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 278, House bill 19, the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 19) for the relief of H. B. Wilson, administrator of the estate of William Tinder, deceased.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides for the payment to H. B. Wilson, administrator of the estate of William Tinder, deceased, of $5,000, in full satisfaction of the claims of the estate of Tinder for money paid by his estate upon a judgment of forfeiture upon a bond for the appearance of one Evans, who was charged with crime by indictment in the circuit court of the United States for the district of West Tennessee, and who was afterward captured by the administrator and returned to the custody of the court and convicted and punished for the crime with which he was charged.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADULTERATION OF FOOD.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary are directed to inquire and report—

1. Whether Congress has power to enact laws to prohibit within the States the adulteration of food.

2. Whether, if such power exists, it results from and is a part of the power of taxation, or whether it results from and is confined to the power to regulate commerce between the States or with foreign countries, or whether it is a distinctive power otherwise granted to Congress in the Constitution.

POWERS OF PACIFIC RAILWAY COMMITTEE.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the select committee, to which was referred the message of the President of the United States, transmitting the reports of the commissioners appointed by the President to examine into the affairs of the Pacific railways, appointed under resolution of the Senate of January 25, 1888, in pursuing their investigation, shall have power to send for persons and papers, to administer the necessary oaths, to employ a stenographer and such clerical and other assistance as it may deem necessary; and that said committee have authority to cause its proceedings and testimony taken to be printed from time to time, as it may see fit, exclusively for its use; and such expense as may result from said investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of said committee and by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. PLUMB.

Mr. PLUMB withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. REAGAN. If no other Senator desires to occupy the floor on the pending bill at this time, I ask that it be informally laid aside, so that I may submit some remarks upon the subject of the resolution offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside to enable him to request the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution offered by the Senator from Kansas on a former day.

Mr. BLAIR. If no one desires to speak against the bill, I have no objection; but if any one desires the floor to oppose the passage of the bill, I, of course, should object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none.

P. B. SINNOTT.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from Texas kindly yields to me that I may ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 570) for the relief P. B. Sinnott, late Indian agent at Grande Ronde agency, State of Oregon, be recommitted to the Committee on Claims, which meets to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Claims, if there be no objection. The Chair lays before the Senate sundry bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 360) for the relief of Smith R. Mershon was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 369) granting a pension to Mrs. Esther B. Hayford was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 4909) for the relief of the estate of C. N. Briggs, deceased, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

THE MAIL SERVICE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. PLUMB January 30, 1888; which was read, as follows:

Whereas there have been for many months serious complaints as to the inefficient character of the mail service, especially in the West and South, and the same continue, indicating that the trouble is of a permanent character:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be instructed to make thorough inquiry into the cause of such inefficient mail service, and report to the Senate their conclusions thereon, with suggestion as to remedy.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, the serious arraignment which has been made of the Post-Office Department, and of the management of the postal service, by several Senators, in the course of the discussion of the resolution under consideration, offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], surprised me, as I had not before heard of such complaints, and has caused me to look into the subject perhaps more closely than I otherwise should have done, in order that I might ascertain whether these charges and complaints were justified by facts or not. And I feel that it is alike due to the late Postmaster-General and his subordinates and to the public that I should present to the Senate some of the facts which have come to my knowledge by these inquiries. From these it will doubtless appear either that Senators have been misled by false clamor, or that, in consequence of the conspicuously improved service and economies of that Department, which is so well calculated to reflect credit on and secure popular favor to the present administration of the Government, it has been thought necessary, as a political move, to offset these beneficial effects by denouncing the management of the postal service as inefficient and unsatisfactory.

The number of these attacks and the fact that they are simultaneously made in both branches of Congress, and by Republican newspapers in chorus in different parts of the country, indicate that it is a partisan political move rather than an effort to secure better and cheaper service, and an effort to break the force of the contrast between the manner in which the service of that Department is now being conducted and the manner in which it has been conducted under preceding, Republican administrations.

For a better understanding of the subject I will call attention to some of the charges which have been so made, premising that most of the charges have been made on the irresponsible and unverified statements of newspapers, and all these with one exception Republican papers, not supposed to be specially friendly to the present Administration.

These charges are in effect that the service in the West and Southwest, and especially in Kansas and Nebraska, was being conducted in utter disregard of the rights of the people; that notwithstanding the great increase of population the stupid attempt on the part of the Administration to make a record for economy has cut down the clerical force necessary to properly distribute the mails at large offices and in the mail trains; that appeals to the Department at Washington for adequate help to take care of this important public service are unheeded; that the service was never so bad, nor so badly administered in the last eighteen years as at present; that the mail service of the country, and especially of the West, is utterly demoralized; that a railway postal clerk had refused to receive and carry a package of daily newspapers; that the new appointees are inexperienced and inefficient, etc., etc.

I propose to inquire whether these charges are true or false.

And first, I will take the case of the publishers of the Daily Gazette, of Kansas, whose complaint, presented by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], is that a postal railway clerk refused to receive packages of that paper direct from the office of publication.

I ask the Secretary to read first a communication from the chief clerk of the railway mail service, and then the indorsements at the bottom, giving the names and rank of the officers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE, OFFICE OF CHIEF CLERK,
Kansas City, Mo., January 24, 1888.

SIR: I am advised that on your trip leaving Kansas City, January 20, p. m., the entire edition of the Abilene Daily Gazette for dispatch on your train was refused by your crew, although the proper certificate from the postmaster at that place accompanied the papers. I desire a full explanation of the matter with the return of this letter.

Very respectfully,

G. W. HUNTER,
Chief Clerk.

L. W. TUMANS,
Railway Postal Clerk, Kansas City, Mo.

[Indorsement.]

KANSAS CITY, MO., January 27, 1888.

SIR: In General Order No. 411, issued by Superintendent R. M. Thomas, section 1 calls particular attention to a portion of section 980 of the Postal Laws and Regulations of 1887, which reads: "Postal clerks are prohibited from receiving newspapers and periodicals from publishers and news agents unless the same are accompanied by a certificate from the postmaster that the postage has been paid. The papers should be weighed either by the postmaster or a clerk employed in his office. If papers are brought to car even accompanied by a certificate from the postmaster, where clerks have any reason to doubt their having been weighed as stated they will at once report to this office. Under no circumstance should they be received without a certificate." On January 16 you issued an order calling attention to the section above quoted and requesting all clerks under your charge to make a prompt report to you of what post-offices along our respective lines papers were received direct from publishing house.

On my trip leaving Kansas City, Mo., January 16, I made inquiry of the messenger delivering this publication at the car as to where it was weighed. He replied at the Gazette office.

In making my report of this fact to you, I also attached the certificate of weight, also calling your attention to the fact that it was merely a certificate of the amount of weight, and not a certificate showing that the postage had been paid.

This was not complying with section 980 of the Postal Laws and Regulations, but in direct violation, and would refuse to accept this publication under the usual certificate, unless otherwise ordered.

Not receiving any order from you or Superintendent R. M. Thomas to accept them upon presentation of that certificate, I deemed it my duty to refuse them until the law was properly complied with, and therefore refused the publication on my trip west, January 20.

Very respectfully,

L. W. TUMANS,
Railway Postal Clerk.
K. C. ELLIS.

N. B.—Before refusing papers I asked messenger where they were weighed. He replied at Gazette office. I then asked him if the postage had been paid and he replied, No.

GEORGE W. HUNTER,
Chief Clerk Railway Mail Service.

Mr. REAGAN. I will read a portion of section 980 of the Postal Laws and Regulations, 1887, as follows:

Clerks are prohibited from receiving newspapers and periodicals from publishers and news agents unless the same are accompanied by a certificate from the postmaster that the postage has been paid.

That is the way these publications come directly from the office of publication. I now ask the Secretary to read the communication which I send to the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE, OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT,
St. Louis, Mo., January 31, 1888.

SIR: I inclose you herewith, for your information, some papers concerning the mailing of the Daily Gazette, published at Abilene, Kans., direct on postal cars in accordance with the provisions of section 980, Postal Laws and Regulations.

You will notice that on January 20, clerk in charge, L. W. Tumans, Kansas City and Denver railway post-office, refused to accept two sacks of this paper on account of the required certificate not being furnished. I have advised the postmaster at Abilene, by letter to-day, that the sample certificate inclosed is not a proper one, and that he should arrange a new form in accordance with the requirements of section 980, certifying that the postage has been prepaid. As to the clipping from the Gazette of January 20, and the accompanying correspondence, I do not think it necessary to offer any explanations or report in connection with the same more than to state that when the proper certificates are arranged for the postmaster at Abilene there will be no difficulty whatever about having the papers promptly received at the postal car.

Very respectfully,

R. M. THOMAS,
Superintendent.

Hon. T. E. NASH,
General Superintendent, Washington, D. C.

Mr. REAGAN. In a separate paragraph in the same editorial column of the Daily Gazette, from which the Senator from Kansas quoted, is a separate editorial paragraph, in which it is said, "The incompetent Republican route agents are making the mail service a farce." If this paper is a good witness against the Department it ought to be considered equally trustworthy as against Republican office-holders. The papers just read show that the complaint of that paper was the result of the failure of the publishers to pay the postage on their packages, and not because of any fault in the service. And to show the vigilance of the Department in correcting irregularities when complaints are made, I call attention to the fact that complaint in this case was made to the Department on the 22d of January; that an investigation was ordered on the 24th, and completed on the 31st of that month, the day on which the Senator from Kansas introduced his resolution for this investigation.

In reference to the complaint of the late Mr. Rounds, mentioned by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], I give the following statement from the Post-Office Department:

In relation to the letter written to Senator MANDERSON by the late S. P. Rounds, on June 16, 1887, Mr. Rounds made complaint to the general superintendent of railway mail service that his paper was not being properly distributed, and the matter was immediately investigated by an assistant superintendent of this service who has been connected with the Department for a great many years, who visited Omaha and carefully examined into the workings of that post-office and the mail routes in that neighborhood. In his report, dated July 6, he stated:

"Until a recent date, within five or six weeks, the errors made in the mailing department of the Omaha Republican were numerous, and it was not an infrequent thing for our clerks to find in the mails large numbers of single-wrapped packages of that paper without address. The young man employed by that company became wearied by the errors reported and requested Chief Clerk Griffin, of the railway mail service, to throw them into the waste-basket. A new clerk was employed by the company with no better success, and recently another change was made. * * * We have carefully revised the galleys of both daily and weekly, in the latter finding a few more than sixty errors, which have been corrected."

When this report came in, the general superintendent advised Mr. Taylor, the secretary and treasurer of that company, what had been done, and asked him to report the matter if there were any more complaints.

So it will be seen that the complaints rested distinctly and solely on the inefficiency of the mailing clerk of the Omaha paper which complained of the irregularity on the part of the Post-Office Department.

This statement adds that "no complaint has been made from the Capital, of Topeka, Kans., on which an investigation might have been based. Nor has any been received from the secretary and business manager of the Kansas City Journal."

So these complaints seem to have come to Congress, and not to the Post-Office Department, where they can be corrected.

In a great department like the Post-Office Department, with over 100,000 officers and employés, carrying the mails for 60,000,000 of people, occupying a territory of more than 3,000,000 square miles, carrying 5,834,690,875 parcels over 85,264,035 miles of mail routes traveled, excluding river and ocean mail service, during the last fiscal year, that there should be some cases of irregularity is but to admit that this service is performed by human agency and is not therefore perfect. But I shall present to you facts which it seem to me show that on the whole the postal service of this country is in better condition, carried on with greater regularity, and at relatively less cost now, than at any time heretofore. And I think it due to Mr. Vilas, the late Postmaster-General, to say that, with some knowledge of the history of that Department, I doubt if he has ever had an equal in clear conception of its uses, merits, defects, and management, unless I may except two of his predecessors, Amos Kendall and Judge McLean.

If we ever reach the time when there are no complaints against postmasters, school-teachers, and millers, I think we may then congratulate ourselves that the millennium has come.

The report of the Postmaster-General shows that on July 1, 1886, there were in operation 123,745.15 miles of railway carrying the mails; that this was increased to 130,958.53 miles on the 1st of July, 1887; that this was further increased, so that on the 31st of January, 1888, the mails were being carried over 136,207.72 miles of railroad.

There are nine divisions of the postal railway service, which I shall specify, because I shall have occasion to contrast the amount of service put upon each of these divisions by the Post-Office Department. They are:

1.

First division.—Comprising the New England States; George E. Dame, superintendent, Boston, Mass.

Second division.—Comprising New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and the Eastern Shore of Maryland; R. C. Jackson, superintendent, New York, N. Y.

Third division.—Comprising Maryland (excluding the Eastern Shore), Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, and the District of Columbia; C. W. Vickery, superintendent, Washington, D. C.

Fourth division.—Comprising South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana; B. M. Turner, superintendent, Atlanta, Ga.

Fifth division.—Comprising Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, and Tennessee; Joseph B. Gwin, superintendent, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Sixth division.—Comprising Wisconsin, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, upper peninsula of Michigan, Dakota, and Wyoming; James E. White, superintendent, Chicago, Ill.

Seventh division.—Comprising Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, Texas, Colorado, New Mexico, and Indian Territory; Ernest W. Warfield, superintendent, St. Louis, Mo.

Eighth division.—Comprising California, Nevada, Oregon, Alaska, Arizona, Idaho, Montana, Utah, and Washington; James L. Wilder, superintendent, San Francisco, Cal.

Ninth division.—Comprising the through mails via Buffalo, Suspension Bridge, Toledo, and Detroit, the lines of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad, and the lower peninsula of Michigan; W. G. Lovell, superintendent, Cleveland, Ohio.

Z. Moses, assistant superintendent, attached to the office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, Division of Registration.

Nebraska is in the sixth division and Kansas is in the seventh.

Of the increase of 7,213.38 miles of railway mail service during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, 2,481.64 miles were in the division which contains Nebraska, and 2,648 miles were in the division which includes Kansas. Of the increase of 7,213.38 miles of railway mail service for that year, the two divisions above named were allowed

5,129.64 miles, while the other seven divisions were increased but 2,083.74 miles, those two divisions getting more than five-sevenths of the whole increase.

The increase of the miles of railway mail service during the seven months which ended January 31, 1888, was 5,249.19 miles. Of this, 2,059.72 miles were in the Nebraska division and 2,135.36 miles were in the Kansas division, making 4,314.63 miles in these two divisions, while there was only an increase in this service of 934.56 miles in the other seven divisions.

It thus appears that the increase in the postal railway service in nineteen months, ending January 31, 1888, was 12,462.57 miles, of which 9,824.72 miles were in the two divisions which embrace Nebraska and Kansas, while there were but 2,637.85 miles of increase in the other seven divisions.

Now, for a better understanding of what these figures mean, it is proper to state that divisions 6 and 7 of the railway mail service embrace the following States, namely: Wisconsin, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, upper peninsula of Michigan, Dakota, Wyoming, Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, Texas, Colorado, New Mexico, and the Indian Territory. These lie entirely in the West, and show the very great preponderance of increase of that class of service in the West over the other sections of the country.

The percentage of increase of the railway mail service for the last nineteen months is 10.07.

Percentage of increase in mileage during last nineteen months, 10.07.

These facts I submit as a full and overwhelming answer to the charges of neglect by the Department to provide sufficient railway postal facilities for the West and Southwest. And we have heard of no complaints as to the insufficiency of the star-route service.

I also submit a table, marked 3, giving the States and Territories in which the largest increase in the railway mail service was put in operation during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for the seven months from July 1, 1887, to January 31, 1888. The total increase for the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1887, was 5,069.44 miles. Of this increase Kansas received 1,393.06 miles and Nebraska received 754.66 miles, each having a larger increase than any other State, the two together receiving more than two-fifths of the increase for those eleven States and the Indian Territory for that year. The increase of the railway postal service for these States and Territories for the seven months which ended January 31, 1888, was 6,021.61 miles. Of this increase Kansas received 1,350.66 miles and Nebraska 965.72 miles, the two together receiving 2,326.38 miles, being about two-fifths of the whole increase in these States for that period, showing also an increase of 4,474.10 miles of railway mail service in those two States in the nineteen months which ended January 31, 1888. While this increase shows the prosperity and rapid growth and development of those States, it also shows that the Post-Office Department was keeping the increase of postal facilities up with their splendid progress.

I also present tables 5 and 6. Table 5 shows the total length of mail routes in the States of Kansas and Nebraska; the length of the star routes; the length of the railway routes; the number of miles traveled on star routes; the number of miles traveled on railroad routes, and the total of miles traveled in both methods in those two States during the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1887.

Table 6 shows the amounts paid to railway postal clerks and mail messengers; the cost of transportation; the total cost of the service, and excess of postal expenditures of all kinds over postal receipts of all kinds, in those two States for the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1887. These two tables explain themselves.

Whatever of irregularities may have occurred in the service in these States, it is apparent the Department has endeavored to give them all needed facilities. And the same is true of the other Western and Southwestern States, and indeed of all the States. I am indebted to General Knott, Second Assistant Postmaster-General, for the following statement of the fast mails for the supply of Kansas and Nebraska and the West and Southwest:

In January, 1885, there was established on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, in connection with the fast mail from New York to Chicago, a fast mail from Chicago to the Union Pacific Transfer opposite Omaha. The additional cost incurred in consequence of the establishment of this fast mail from Chicago to Omaha is illustrated by a comparison of the figures of the cost of the service on that road between those two points before and after the fast mail was established. The pay per annum of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad between those two points, Chicago and Omaha, prior to the establishment of this fast mail was $176,968.69. A reweighing and a readjustment of the pay of this road took place immediately after the establishment of this fast mail, in pursuance of the arrangement between the Department and the road, and it resulted in an increase in the cost of railway mail transportation on that road of $195,370.91, the total cost being $372,339.60. In March, 1887, that road was weighed in regular order in the quadrennial weighing which took place in the section embracing that road, and the result of the adjustment of the pay thereon between those two points on such weighing was an increase in the pay of that road of $61,678, the total pay being fixed at $434,017.62, showing that the additional cost of that fast mail thus established and kept up by the Department under contract with the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad from the period of its establishment to the date of its last weighing was $257,048.93.

In the benefits of the extraordinary mail facilities thus obtained by this large expenditure for this fast mail Nebraska participates, and largely, although in the above estimate of the cost of the service in that State on June 30 last, in the report of the Auditor, no share of the cost of this extraordinary service is apportioned to that State.

THE INCREASE OF POSTAL FACILITIES SECURED TO KANSAS AND NEBRASKA BY THIS FAST MAIL.

The establishment of this fast mail from Chicago to Union Pacific Transfer, the causes which led to it, and the extraordinary additional mail facilities which it furnished to the States and Territories west of the Mississippi River was the subject of a communication addressed by Hon. William F. Vilas to the President of the Senate under date of March 8, 1886, inclosing a letter from this office to the Postmaster-General, which enters fully ints the question and exhibits in a very clear light the postal advantages accruing to Nebraska and Kansas and the States and Territories west of these States in consequence of the establishment of this line. Its advantages may be summarized in the statement that the mails for Kansas and Nebraska were expedited twenty-four hours, Kansas receiving the benefit of this expedition of the mails over the Kansas City, St. Joe and Council Bluffs Railroad from Union Pacific Transfer, and Nebraska by the Union Pacific Railroad and the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad in Nebraska and their connections. In further explanation of the details of this fast mail service and the mail facilities furnished by it to these populous communities I herewith append as a part of this letter a copy of Senate Executive Document No. 88, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, containing the communication referred to. The efforts then made by this office for the improvement of the service and the extension of increased mail facilities to the region of the country west of the Mississippi River, and in that document fully set forth, have been continued by this office with undiminished vigor and without any abatement to this day, as is abundantly demonstrated by the facts and figures above stated and hereinafter set forth.

FAST MAIL TO ST. LOUIS AND KANSAS CITY.

On March 12, 1887, Postmaster-General Vilas contracted with the Pennsylvania and the Missouri Pacific Railroad Companies for a fast mail from New York, via Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Columbus, and Indianapolis, to St. Louis and Kansas City. This fast line connects at Harrisburg with mails from Baltimore and Washington. The additional annual rate of cost of this fast mail is $199,395.20, not including the increased cost for additional railway mail clerks required to work the heavy mails carried on this line. With this fast mail line the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad makes close connection at Kansas City and gives an expedition of from twelve to twenty-four hours, equal to a full commercial day, to the mails throughout the States of Kansas, Colorado, and New Mexico. The mails for South and Southwest Missouri, Texas, and Indian Territory are also advanced from six to twelve hours by this mail. By the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad in Nebraska and the Chicago, Kansas and Nebraska Railroad the State of Nebraska shares fully in the benefits of the service thus expedited by this fast mail line. No part, however, of the additional cost for this important service is charged against either of these States in the statement of the Auditor above referred to.

This shows the active vigilance of the Department in extending the fast mail service to the West and Southwest. And the facts that I have presented ought, it seems to me, to protect that Department from the unfriendly criticisms which have been made against it.

The report of the Postmaster-General, pages 42 and 43, shows the annual increase of miles of railroad transportation for the last fiscal year to have been 5.6 per cent. over the preceding year, and that the annual increase of the cost of this service was only 4.22 per cent., thus showing that the increase of the service was relatively much greater than the increase of its cost.

In answer to the charge of parsimony on the part of the Department in not providing a sufficient number of railway postal clerks in the West and Southwest, I submit the following facts:

The number of railway postal clerks in the service on the 30th of June, 1886, was 4,573. The number in the service on the 30th of June, 1887, was 4,851. The number in service on the 31st of January, 1888, was 4,988. The increase of these clerks for the fiscal year 1886–'87 was 278, and the increase for seven months of the present fiscal year from July 1, 1887, to January 31, 1888, was 137. The aggregate increase for the nineteen months from July 1, 1886, to January 31, 1888, was 415. Of this number, division No. 6, which includes Nebraska, received 106; and the seventh division, which includes Kansas, received 122, these two divisions being allowed an increase for these nineteen months of 228 railway postal clerks, while the other seven divisions were altogether only allowed an increase of 187, more than one-half of the increase of railway postal clerks for the last nineteen months having been given to the two divisions of the West and Southwest, which include the States of Kansas and Nebraska.

The percentage of increase of railway postal clerks for the nineteen months from July 1, 1886, to January 31, 1888, was 9.08, which, as is seen, was very nearly the same rate as the increase of railway mail service for the same period.

This certainly indicates liberality rather than parsimony towards the West and Southwest, and especially towards Kansas and Nebraska.

It is charged that the deficiencies in the railway mail service are largely due to the want of experience and qualification of new appointees. These appointees are required to stand successfully an examination as to their qualifications and capacity for this service before they can be commissioned. For instance, 1,000 cards, representing as many post-offices, are drawn at random, and as each is drawn the candidate is asked what mail route the office named is on, and his being commissioned depends on his making correct answers to a sufficient number of such inquiries.

I submit a table marked D, which shows the average percentage in correctness in case examinations of permanent and probationary clerks for several years, from 1882 to 1887, inclusive, embracing three years under former administrations and three years under the present administration. From this table it will be seen that the percentage of correctness of permanent clerks for the years 1882, 1883, and 1884 under former administrations was, respectively, 77.05, 87.46 and 78.10; while the percentage of the same class of clerks for the years 1885, 1886, and 1887, under the present administration was, respectively, 82.23, 81.06, and 87.50. This shows a decided improvement in the qualifications of this class of clerks; and the examination of 1887, I am informed, shows the highest average of correctness which has ever been attained. This table shows a like improvement under the present administration in the average of correctness in the examination of the probationary clerks.

D.

Percentages in correctness of case examinations of permanent and probationary clerks.

Year ended June 30—	Permanent clerks.	Probationers.
1882	77.05	80.49
1883	87.46	80.37
1884	78.10	81.41
1885	82.23	83.11
1886	81.61	82.68
1887	87.50	85.34

This is the real and the best test of the qualifications of this class of clerks, and shows improvement instead of reduced efficiency in this branch of the service.

To secure greater efficiency in this branch of the service the Department has adopted a rule not to appoint persons to it who are over thirty-five years of age, except in the case of Union soldiers who are otherwise well qualified.

I also submit Tables E and F, showing case examinations of the ten clerks making the best examinations during the month of December, 1887, in each of the sixth and seventh divisions, embracing the railway postal clerks in the West and Southwest, from which it will be seen the standard of correctness is very high; and a reference to the dates of appointment of these clerks will reveal the fact that the new appointees, that is, those appointed in the years 1885, 1886, and 1887, show at least as high merit as those appointed under former administrations.

The honorable Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE], my colleague on the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, has told us that the complaints against the Post-Office Department are not confined to the West or to the railroad transportation. And he adds "that it is a notorious fact that the mails are slower, that they are not so well handled, that they are not so well distributed as formerly." He assumes that the greatest cause for this arises from the fact that the Department has attempted to change the clerical force too rapidly, and that samples of merchandise sent out reach their destination by express sooner than the invoices of them when sent by mail. No particular instances of this kind are stated so that investigation might follow, nor are we informed that complaints of this kind have been made to the Department, to enable it to correct any errors in this respect.

Mr. CHACE. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. CHACE. If the Department want to investigate it they can come right to me. It has occurred in my own business this very fall.

Mr. REAGAN. I suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that he go to the Department when he has just cause of complaint, and that the Department should not come to him.

Mr. CHACE. Allow me to suggest to the Senator from Texas that when this resolution was before the Senate gentlemen on his side proposed to put the fault on the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. REAGAN. I did not know that. I do not know that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has any responsibility about it.

Mr. CHACE. I imagine not.

Mr. REAGAN. The city of Providence, where the Senator claims these irregularities occurred, seems to be pretty well supplied with mail facilities. The mails from Boston to Providence leave Boston at 5.03 7.00, and 9.00 a. m. and at 12.00 m., 1.00, 3.00, 4.30, and 11.00 p. m, daily, giving that city eight mails a day from Boston. From Providence the mails go to Boston at 5.30, 9.00, 10.00, and 11.45 a. m., and at 1.00, 3.30, 5.30, and 11.45 p. m., giving eight mails from Providence to Boston daily. The mails from New York to Providence leave New York at 5.00 and 8.00 a. m. and at 1.00, 4.00, and 11.00 p. m., making five mails a day from New York to Providence. The mails leave Providence for New York at 12.25, 9.00, and 11.00 a. m. and at 2.03 and 5.10 p. m., showing five mails each way daily between Providence and New York.

From this it would seem Providence need not complain of inadequate postal facilities.

In reference to the Senator's complaint that the Department had changed its clerical force too rapidly, and that postal facilities were less reliable on account of the inexperience of new appointees, I have to say that the records of the Senate show that the appointment of Charles H. George as postmaster at Providence to succeed Henry W. Gardner, a Republican, was confirmed by the Senate on the 23d of January, 1888.

And on the subject of the appointment and removal of postmasters by the present Administration, I have to say that it is notorious that under the civil-service law and regulations the President has habitually refused to make removals from office on account of the political opinions of the incumbent, though in most instances, not in all, where vacancies have occurred, he has appointed Democrats.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator says that the President has declined to make removals on account of political reasons.

Mr. REAGAN. So I understand.

Mr. ALDRICH. The term of the gentleman whose name he has just read, Mr. Gardner, would not have expired until about a year after his removal. I should like to ask on what ground he was removed.

Mr. REAGAN. On that point I am not able to answer the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. There could be no other except political reasons in that case.

Mr. REAGAN. I am not able to answer.

Mr. CHACE. And if the Senator will permit me, he has just been attempting to prove that the post-office at Providence has been very well managed; and that being the case, if the office was well managed, what other reason could there be for the removal of the postmaster there except political reasons?

Mr. REAGAN. Well, what I have to say on that comes in at another point. There were removals made, and I shall show directly how many these were and for what causes, and that, I trust, will be satisfactory to Senators. I shall read it in a few moments.

Mr. CHACE. I wish the Senator would tell us what the reason was for the removal of the postmaster at Providence, when he has proved to his own satisfaction that the office has been well managed.

Mr. REAGAN. Of course the Senator does not expect me to know the causes for the removal and appointment of postmasters. The question is one that he must know I can not answer; but, as I stated before, I will show him what the causes were for removals that were made, as I understand and as the Department informs me, and I beg that Senators will allow me to proceed to that statement.

Mr. CHACE. If the Senator will excuse me, I understood him to allude to me personally.

Mr. REAGAN. I simply summarized the charges which the Senator made against the Department, and I am offering the evidence to show that the probability was that there was no real ground for these charges.

Mr. CHACE. Now, I trust, and in fact I know, that the Senator from Texas is so just that he will not make those statements in regard to myself without giving me an opportunity to correct them right here.

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator will have ample time when I am through. If then he finds that I have said anything I ought not to have said, he can correct me.

On March 4, 1885, there were 2,339 postmasters of the classes appointed by the President. Of these 5 were discontinued and 201 were relegated to the fourth class, leaving 2,133 postmasters of this class.

The following statement shows the comparative status of the incumbents of these offices at the end of the fiscal year 1887:

New appointments on expiration of commissions	876
New appointments on voluntary resignations	475
New appointments on deaths	65
New appointments on suspensions or removals	509
Reappointments on expirations of commissions	27
Appointments to offices becoming Presidential	170
Reappointments to offices becoming Presidential	28
Total	2,150
Offices unchanged since March 4, 1885	313

Out of this number there have been but 509 removals, while 313 of the original Republican employés remained in office at that date, and 1,621 were appointments made in consequence of the expirations of commissions, voluntary resignations, deaths, or reappointments, and to offices which have become Presidential since March 4, 1885. The report of the Postmaster-General shows that there were on the 1st of July last 52,821 postmasters of the fourth class. The total number of appointments in all these offices up to that date was 36,252. Of these 16,345 were made in consequence of resignations, 1,243 on account of deaths, and 6,599 on account of the establishment of new offices. Only 12,065 were made in consequence of removals, and 16,569 appointed by former administrations remain in office.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question, that I may understand his figures?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator either claim or believe that that large number of resignations that he speaks of, for which appointments were made, were voluntary, were not resignations demanded by the President?

Mr. REAGAN. I have no way to answer that but by the report of the Postmaster-General, in which he says they were voluntary. The Postmaster-General says in his report that they were voluntary resignations.

Mr. HOAR. An extraordinary instance of voluntary resignation!

Mr. REAGAN. I have no doubt the Postmaster-General has done a good many things that are extraordinary to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. He does a great many.

Mr. REAGAN. While many changes in these offices have occurred, but few of them comparatively have been removals for political reasons, and these few for active partisanship which it would have been improper to tolerate.

The report of the Postmaster-General, pages 42 and 43, shows the annual increase of miles of railroad transportation of the mails for the last fiscal year over the preceding year to have been 5.6 per cent., and that the annual increase of the cost of this service is only 4.2 per cent., thus showing an increase of service and a relative decrease of cost.

His report, page 45, shows that on the 30th of June, 1885, the number of star routes stood at 12,371, aggregating 232,222 miles in length, and requiring annual travel of 83,027,321 miles, at a cost of 6.52 cents per mile; and that on the first day of the current fiscal year the routes numbered 14,368, an increase of 1,997; their total length was 236,896 miles, an addition of 4,674 miles; their aggregate annual mileage of travel was 85,133,077, being 2,105,756 miles more of service, at the rate of cost of 5.921 cents per mile, a gain roundly of 6 mills to the mile of travel in decreased cost—an aggregate reduction in the cost of this branch of the service of $640,000, notwithstanding the great increase of the service.

This report also shows, page 46, that the rate of cost of the mail-messenger service at the close of the last year was $829,548.61, and that there had been an increase of 163 messengers over the previous year, and a decrease of $5,311.39 in the annual rate of pay. The total expenditure was $825,338.17, being $40,801.53 less than the cost for the year ending June 30, 1885.

On page 45 of this report it is shown that with the addition of a line of steam-ship service between Tampa and Havana, at a cost of $54,000, and an increase in steam-ship routes elsewhere, there was a net decrease in the cost of this service as compared with the year before of $13,229.82.

I will read on this subject from pages 34 and 35 of the report of the Postmaster-General:

POST-OFFICE SUPPLIES.

The improved methods of business in the division of post-office supplies have been before brought to your attention, but deserve renewed mention from observance of their results upon the last year's transactions. In 1886 it was shown that with an actual increase in supplies provided and issued of some 18 or 19 per cent. there was a decrease of cost of nearly 19 per cent. from the preceding year. Equally satisfactory results have followed upon the work of the past year in economy, and some further perfection of the business system has been secured. The increase in the quantity of supplies furnished has necessarily been great, in consequence of the enlarged business of the whole service and the greater number of offices which have come to be furnished under the legislation of recent years. Yet the entire cost of all supplies for the year, in quantity fully 30 per cent. more than in 1885, has been more than $20,000 less, and the amount of the appropriation, which was reduced below that of 1885, that remains unexpended is $65,859.23, besides a stock of goods on hand amounting at the close of the year to $35,120.05.

The volume of business may be judged from some of the principal items of issues: 60,486,900 blanks, 112,403 books, 193,091,700 facing-slips, 17,500 marking, rating, and canceling stamps, 778,152 pounds of twine, 21,747 reams of wrapping paper, 13,575 pounds of canceling ink, 506,200 slide labels, and a long list of other articles, shown in the report of the First Assistant Postmaster-General. The number of requisitions supplied was 287,055 as against 162,640 in 1885.

Pages 30 to 33 of the Postmaster-General's report show that with much enlargement of the free-delivery service there has been a decrease of the rate of cost below the increased rate of service, though, especially since the 1st of July last, there has been a very large addition to the number of free-delivery offices, whereby nearly twice as many offices are now served in this manner as in 1885. This resulted from the law passed last Congress extending free-delivery service to cities of smaller population and revenues.

In the matter of the appropriations from the Treasury for the support of the Post-Office Department, as will appear from the tables on pages 81 and 82 of the Postmaster-General's report, it will be seen that for the year 1885 the sum of the appropriations for items for the Department and for the salaries of the officers, clerks, etc., was $824,399.15, and the sum of the expenditures for those purposes for that year was $808,648.87, leaving a balance unexpended of $15,750.28. The appropriations for the same items of expense for the year which ended June 30, 1887, amounted to $832,611, while the expenditures for that year aggregated only $793,008.81, leaving a balance unexpended of $30,002.19; thus showing that while the appropriations for 1887 were greater than for 1885, the expenditures were $15,640.06 less. The real reduction, however, was much greater than this, as shown on page 83 of the Postmaster-General's report, because during the year 1887 the Department building had to be freshly painted, its gas-pipes and much of its plumbing renewed, and the requisite furniture supplied; and that year Marini's Hall had to be rented at a cost of $6,000.

In looking at these comparisons we should bear in mind that the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1885, was the last year of Republican administration, and that the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1887, was the second year of Democratic administration, and the foregoing figures illustrate the economies of these respective administrations; and that nowithstanding the constant and rapid expansion and increase of the service, while its efficiency was being increased, as I have shown in a former part of my remarks, its cost to the people has been steadily reduced in almost or quite every department of the service.

Besides increasing and extending the railway mail service, the star-route service, the steam-boat and the ocean service, corresponding with the growth and development of the country, the Postmaster-General has negotiated postal treaties with the Republic of Mexico and with the Dominion of Canada, by which mail matter may be transmitted from either country to the other on the payment of the postage of the country from which such matter is sent. This substantially extends our postal system so as to cover the continent of North America, and will be of great benefit and convenience to all the countries concerned. And inasmuch as packages of merchandise of 4 pounds and 6 ounces weight may be so sent without the delays and expense to which they have heretofore been liable at custom-houses, these treaties will be of great value to our merchants especially, as it so greatly facilitates trade in such mailable packages.

I have before me a newspaper, the Two Republics, published in the city of Mexico, in which appears the card of a purchasing agency, offering to purchase in either country for transmission to the other. Agencies like this, supplied with catalogues, price-lists, and samples, are no doubt destined to become important commercial agencies.

The Postmaster-General has also recently concluded postal treaties with Jamaica, Barbadoes, and the Bahamas for the transmission by mail to and from the countries named of articles of merchandise, and all mail matter, except letters, post cards, and written matter, in amounts not exceeding 11 pounds in weight, the packages to be not more than 2 feet long, and their greatest girth not to exceed 4 feet. Letter mail, post cards, and written matter to continue to be exchanged as now, under the Universal Postal Union. These treaties will be of great commercial value, and they will result in giving larger employment and compensation to the ships which carry our mails between the United States and those islands.

The making of these treaties attests the wisdom and active foresight of the Postmaster-General.

The facts which I have presented, together with the reforms of the service recommended in several particulars by the Postmaster-General in his annual report, attest the thoroughness of his understanding of the postal service and its needs, and justify, I think, what I said in the outset as to his high merits as an officer, and reflect great credit on his administration of that Department. Whatever complaints may have been made against the service of the Department during the present administration, the facts show that it has been faithfully, honestly, economically, and efficiently conducted, with no charges of peculation, embezzlement, star-route robberies, or fraud against it. It has been a clean, honest administration of that Department of which our people and country may well feel proud.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution will be considered agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK. Did I understand that the resolution to which the Senator from Texas has been addressing his remarks was agreed to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection.

Mr. PADDOCK. It had better lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will resume its place on the Calendar of resolutions at the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NEWARK, N. J.

Mr. McPHERSON. I desire to call up for consideration Order of Business 163, Senate bill 601.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the pending business may be still further laid aside that the Senate may now consider the bill referred to by him.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 601) for the extension and repair of the public building at Newark, N. J.

The bill was reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase or acquire by condemnation sufficient additional land adjoining the United States custom-house and post-office building, and cause such changes and improvements to be made in the building thereon, and to erect such addition thereto as, in his judgment, may be necessary to render the same suitable for the transaction of the public business; and for the purpose herein mentioned, the sum of $350,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill to authorize the purchase of additional ground in Newark, N. J., adjoining the custom-house and post-office building, and for the improvement of the building thereon, and the erection of additions thereto.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PORTLAND, OREGON.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that Senate bill 20, a public-building bill, which has passed the Senate twice, may be now considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 20) to provide for the construction of a public building at Portland, Oregon.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Oregon what has become of the public building that was at Portland? There was a public building there that I understood cost about $600,000. I do not know that my information is correct.

Mr. DOLPH. The entire building is required at present for the post-office and the courts. There is a large amount of rent being paid for public offices there. This bill has been reported twice, and passed the Senate in the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses. The custom-house itself must be taken out of the present building certainly within the next year. The United States collector of internal revenue has had to remove his office since the last report was made and the bill passed the Senate before. We are paying something like $10,000 annual rent now, and it will increase. Besides, the present building is not in a proper location for a custom-house.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not know anything about the necessities of the city of Portland in reference to this matter. I merely knew that there was a public building there, a very considerable public building, a few years ago, and it was used for a custom-house as well as for other public purposes. I believe we are going too far and spending too much money in erecting such extravagant buildings as are being put up throughout the country. There are a great many localities which need public buildings; small towns of four and five thousand inhabitants that would be glad to have some of this money that we are putting into such large buildings. I want public buildings; I think the people ought to be accommodated; but I do not think that such heavy amounts should be expended in one or two localities and other places deprived of public buildings.

As to the necessity for this building I am not informed, but as a general rule we are appropriating to the large cities too much money and letting smaller places, where the people pay taxes (for all contribute, though perhaps not to the same amount as in the larger cities), be deprived entirely of any accommodation for public buildings of any kind.

Mr. DOLPH. This appropriation will only afford a very plain building for necessary Government purposes.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN COLORADO.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 424, Order of Business 109.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the regular order be further laid aside for the consideration of the bill named?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 424) relating to lands in Colorado lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indians.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments; in line 6, after the word "previously," insert "and elsewhere," and after the word "acres," in line 7, insert "within said reservation;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That actual and bona fide settlers on lands subject to pre-emption under existing laws within the late Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indian reservation, in Colorado, who have previously and elsewhere taken land under the pre-emption laws, may take an additional 160 acres, within said reservation, by paying therefor $1.25 per acre, at any time after a bona fide residence on said land of two years, and within thirty-three months after filing declaratory statement therefor. Proof of actual residence and improvement of the land for not less than two years shall be made to the satisfaction of the register and the receiver, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRIET H. ROBINSON.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senate to lay aside the educational bill further to take up Order of Business 133, Senate bill No. 416.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 416) for the relief of Mrs. Harriet H. Robinson. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to ascertain the amount paid to the United States by William S. Robinson, late of the city of Mealden, Mass., as an income tax upon his salary, and to repay the amount so ascertained to Harriet H. Robinson, widow and executrix of the last will of William H. Robinson.

Mr. HOAR. Malden is the name of the place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It stands in the bill "Mealden."

Mr. HOAR. That can be corrected by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The "e" before "a" will be stricken out if there be no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. B. NORTON.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] if he desires.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of Calendar Order 47.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1071) for the relief of A. B. Norton.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The bill was read, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides for the payment to A. B. Norton, late postmaster at Dallas, Tex., of $1,853, being the amount paid by him involuntarily, under protest and moral duress, to the inspectors of the Post-Office Department, in the year 1877, on account of certain money-order remittances made by the postmasters at Cleburne and Granbury, Tex.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN SCHOOL AT CARSON CITY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield further?

Mr. DAWES. I wish the Senator would let us have a few moments.

Mr. HARRIS. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 231, being the bill (S. 1103) to provide for an Indian school at Carson City, Nev.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1103) to provide for an Indian school at Carson City, Nev.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear some report on that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the committee will be first read.

The first amendment reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs was in line 4, after the word "lands," to insert "not less than 200 acres;" so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept from the State of Nevada any lands, not less than 200 acres, which may be donated by that State to the United States for the purpose of establishing an Indian school, and also to receive from that State, or any corporation or person, any donation that may be made for the purposes of said school.

Mr. STEWART. The measure is recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear his recommendation.

Mr. STEWART. It will be shown you, and I will state my general knowledge of the matter.

We have never asked anything for the Washoe tribe of Indians at all. I have been of the opinion, and have often stated here, that we had better let them take care of themselves. The Piute tribe have had but very little, though they are quite numerous—I think about twelve or fifteen thousand dollars a year. There are now over 1,500 Indian children in and near Carson City that need education. They have grown up there; they are our neighbors. Much has been said by the Indian Department to me, and I have been rather censured for not desiring a large appropriation for the Indians in Nevada. Now, they have the children there, and it has become a necessity that they shall be educated.

There are about 1,500 that could be educated at this school, and there is no school convenient for them.

The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs understands the situation. This is to be an industrial school. The county in which I live has got the Legislature to authorize them to appropriate $10,000 for the purpose. The citizens have already bought some land, and the good people there are taking an interest in the education of these children.

I do not believe that lavish expenditures on grown-up Indians will amount to very much; but here we have children, 1,500 of them; and there is no means of educating them, and the citizens have taken the subject in hand, and feel very much interested in it. The money will certainly be of great use if we can get it for that purpose.

Mr. COCKRELL. How many Indians are there?

Mr. STEWART. I do not know now many Indians, but Professor Young last year undertook to ascertain as near as he could how many Indian children there were, and he came to the conclusion that in the western part of the State there were about 1,500 children; I do not know how many Indians. There are three tribes of Indians, and they are quite numerous. There are the Piutes, the Washoes, and the Shoshones in the State, besides some minor tribes.

Mr. DAWES. I have a letter here from the Department addressed to myself upon this subject; also a letter from the Department addressed to H. M. Yerington, Jewett W. Adams, and S. L. Lee, Indian school commission, Carson City, Nev., and a strong letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the Secretary of the Interior, all setting out the need of this establishment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear them. This looks like a strange proceeding to give 200 acres of land, worth 10 cents an acre, and then appropriate $50,000 for a school. There are only two Indian reservations in Nevada, according to the official map, one on the extreme western border of the State, and one, the Shoshone reservation, on the extreme northern border. There are plenty of other places where there are large bodies of Indians; and now to appropriate $50,000 for this school seems strange.

Mr. STEWART. It looks to me exactly right, and it seems to me strange that gentlemen should talk about the small reservations. We have not allowed our State to be occupied by reservations and given up for that purpose. We have not been asking for large Indian appropriations. I think my record on that question is pretty clear. I have been complained of in all the Departments because I would not propose to give enough to the Indians; but the time has arrived when they have these children growing up there, and something must be done with them. They are about the towns without being educated. A measure like this has been recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for several years, and our people have taken hold of it.

The Senator talks about 200 acres being worth 10 cents an acre. The land is quite valuable within about half a mile of Carson City. The people have taken hold of it in good earnest. Because we have not got large reservations, because we have not been extravagant in appropriations for the Indian service in Nevada, is no reason why you should not educate these children.

Mr. COCKRELL. How far is the Indian reservation from Carson?

Mr. STEWART. The reservations are each about 40 miles distant—one one way and the other the other; but the Washoe tribe of Indians is a good tribe. There are six or eight hundred in the tribe; two or three hundred children of that tribe live in Carson, and they never have had a dollar from the Government. Our people have employed them, and they have gotten along without a dollar's appropriation. There has been no dollar ever appropriated for these Indians, and they are doing very well.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then why demoralize them with this appropriation?

Mr. STEWART. I ask an appropriation for the children now; I would not ask it for adult Indians while we can employ them; but I ask it for these children, and I would not ask it unless it was necessary.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to hear these statements read.

Mr. BERRY. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have those papers spread in the RECORD, so that we shall have them before us to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be done, if there be no objection.

The papers are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, April 9, 1887.

GENTLEMEN: I am in receipt of your communication of the 31st of January last, inclosing copy of a recent enactment of the Nevada Legislature providing for the establishment of an Indian school in that State.

I am gratified to see that Nevada manifests such an interest in the education of her Indians. The generous offer of a farm of 160 acres and of $10,000 for building purposes merits prompt acceptance by the Government. But I regret to say that the last session of Congress instead of increasing slightly reduced appropriations for Indian education, so that it will be with difficulty that school work now in progress can be properly continued during the coming fiscal year.

Therefore I not would be justified in saying at this time that so soon as your buildings are completed the office will furnish and open an Indian school therein. But I can say, and will do so, that if you desire to put up the building and to transfer the same, with the land, to the Indian Office, the office will accept it and will open a school therein for Indians of Nevada whenever a Government appropriation therefor shall have been obtained.

Meantime, if you desire it, the office will send a special agent to examine the location offered and to report upon its fitness for the purpose intended. Also the office can send you copies of plans which have been adopted for its school buildings, from which you will be able to gain an idea of the kind of buildings needed, and what will be the capacity of a building which $10,000 will erect.

I hope that it may be possible to secure from the next session of Congress an appropriation for the support of this proposed Nevada school, and if it is made "immediately available" it may be possible to start the school within the next fiscal year.

Yours, respectfully,

A. B. UPSHAW, Acting Commissioner.

H. M. YERINGTON, JEWETT W. ADAMS, S. L. LEE,
Indian School Commission, Carson City, Nev.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 27, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the letter of Hon. H. L. DAWES, chairman of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, transmitting a copy of "a bill (S. 1103) to provide for an Indian school at Carson City, Nev." referred to this office for report, and in relation thereto I have to respectfully advise you that during the past year correspondence was had with several gentlemen on the subject of establishing a school for the Indians of Nevada, and they were informed that it would be impossible for the Indian Office, with the appropriation then available, to establish such a school.

Inclosed herewith you will find copy of a letter on this subject, addressed to the school commissioners at Carson City, Nev., on April 9, 1887, which gives the views of this office on the subject at that time.

The establishment of a large industrial training school for the Indians of Nevada is greatly needed, as they are almost without school accommodations. There is only one reservation boarding school and one day school at present in operation.

The majority of the Indians in that State are not on any reservation, and are homeless wanderers. If a good school were put in operation many of the young Indians could be induced to attend and receive a course of instruction which would tend to make them useful and self-supporting citizens of the State.

I have examined the inclosed bill and heartily agree with the object of it.

The letter of Hon. H. L. DAWES, with inclosure, is herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

J. D. C. ATKINS, Commissioner.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 30, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt by this Department on January 23, 1888, of your letter of the same date, inclosing bill (S. 1103) to provide for an Indian school at Carson City, Nev., with the request that it be examined and reported back with my views and recommendations thereon.

In response thereto I transmit herewith a communication under date of the 27th instant, with its inclosures, from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to whom the matter was referred for report, wherein he states that he heartily agrees with the object of the bill for the reason that the establishment of a large industrial training school for the Indians of Nevada is greatly needed, as they are almost without school accommodations.

I beg to add further, for the information of the committee, that the Indians for whose benefit the proposed school would be maintained, if established and provided for, are those upon and in the vicinity of the reservation in Nevada under the jurisdiction of the Nevada and the Western Shoshone agencies, numbering in all about 8,000 Indians, among whom there are probably 1,200 children; of these, educational facilities are provided for only 180 pupils, 75 in a boarding school and 105 in day schools.

In the last annual report from both of those agencies it is stated that the existing schools have been filled to their utmost capacity, and that additional school accommodations are required. From the Nevada agency eighteen of the more advanced pupils were sent to the industrial school at Grand Junction, Colo., which the agent reports had a demoralizing effect upon their parents, who mourn for them as lost, or as they would the dead, and also upon the remaining pupils and upon their parents, who fear that their children will be sent away when they arrive at the same proficiency.

Particularly pertinent to the proposition now under consideration are the following remarks of the agent of the Nevada agency, Nevada:

"I sincerely hope that success will crown the efforts of those who are taking an interest in having an appropriation made for the erection of a building and the establishment of an industrial training school in Carson City, or somewhere within the borders of this State, as I firmly believe it would prove the very best thing which could be done for the rising generation of aborigines of this State, and my opinion is fortified by the action of the last State Legislature in session, when it appropriated $10,000 to be expended for that purpose. The Indians are praying for such a school, where children can be taught within their reach. * * * There are enough Pah-Ute children of school age to fill a half dozen school-houses, provided there was some means devised for collecting them and compelling their attendance at school."

There appears, therefore, to be no question of the need for increased school facilities for the Indians on and near the reservations in Nevada, and the condition and necessities of these people are such as to warrant the belief that their educational and industrial needs will require the fostering care of the Government for some time to come.

The estimated cost for establishing industrial training schools for Indian educational purposes, erecting, furnishing, and equipping the necessary buildings, etc. (not including purchase of land), is found, from bids offered for and from cost of work on those already established, to be from $200 to $250 per pupil. The smaller the school the larger is the estimated cost per pupil. For $50,000 an industrial training school can probably be established at or in the vicinity of Carson City, Nev., that will accommodate 250 or more Indian pupils, unless cost of material and labor is very much higher there than in other localities. The cost of maintaining such a school will not be less than $175 per pupil per annum, the rate allowed for the schools at Chilocco, Ind. T., Salem, Oregon, Lawrence, Kans., and others (see 24 Stat., page 465).

The industrial training school at Salem, Oregon, with capacity for 200 pupils, is the only one yet established for the Indians on the Pacific coast. The Indians on that coast are mainly self-supporting, and the annual expenditures made for them are very small when compared with the large sums expended for many of the tribes and bands residing in the more easterly sections of the country.

As the successful cultivation of the soil in Nevada depends largely upon its proper irrigation, the Indian children residing therein should be trained to farm-work in a school where the farming is done on irrigated land.

I therefore think that it is very desirable that such a school should be established somewhere in the locality indicated in the bill under consideration.

The bill should, however, in my opinion, be so amended as to leave it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior whether any land or other donation made for the purpose of the school by the State of Nevada, or otherwise, shall be accepted and used therefor; so that the suitability of location or proposed advantages shall be within Departmental determination.

Very respectfully,

WM. F. VILAS, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before submitting the motion of the Senator from Arkansas, the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] moves that the Senate adjourn.

DISTRIBUTION OF REBELLION RECORDS.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. On the 20th of December last I introduced a resolution of inquiry addressed to the Secretary of War, asking him to furnish certain information to the House in relation to any proposed change in the form and character of the publication known as the Rebellion Record. Such proceedings were had upon that resolution as that as early as about the 12th of January, within my personal knowledge, it reached the office of the Secretary of War. Up to this time, now a whole month having elapsed, no response has been received and no answer given to the request.

I ought to say that the Committee on Military Affairs reported back the resolution, making certain unimportant changes in it, in which form it was unanimously adopted by the House. Now, sir, the questions which I propounded could not in the nature of things have taken at the hands of a fairly active clerk, who had any knowledge of the subject-matter of the resolution, more than a very brief time to have made a complete and perfect answer to the House. In the mean time, by a debate in the Senate, we are informed that the honorable Secretary of War has refused to permit members of that body to have access to the list of persons to whom the Rebellion Record is being sent under the law passed in the Forty-seventh Congress. It appears, however, by that discussion that there are a number of volumes of the Record complete, as it is (with the exception perhaps of the five earlier numbers), yet undisposed of; and there is pending before the Committee on Military Affairs of this House, I assume, a joint resolution looking to the future distribution of the numbers of the Record already published, and also looking to the question of the republication of so many of the volumes as are out of print. And in this connection I may say that there comes to us a great demand for full sets of this publication.

Now, sir, I have no knowledge of the reasons why the honorable Secretary of War has disregarded the resolution of this House, and I rise not to make any statement of fact or allegation as to the spirit or purpose of the Department in this, to my mind, unnecessary and unprecedented delay; but I rise to insist that this House of Representatives shall defend its own honor and protect its own character, by demanding of the Secretary of War that he respond to that resolution, and that he shall not treat a resolution of this body or its action as a meaningless thing—as something to be treated with indifference—a matter to be regarded as of no public consequence, but to be considered by him, to be turned over and studied with all the possible reasons and effects of his response before he gives to the House the information which the House demanded. I regard it as his duty to make prompt and full answers at once to all such resolutions of inquiry.

It is a very simple matter, Mr. Speaker. Here is the House of Representatives, the representatives of the people themselves, making this request; and I may be permitted to say that when the honorable chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, after having made certain suggestions in regard to amendments, presented that resolution to the House, it was agreed to unanimously, there not being a voice in the House opposed to its adoption. It went to the honorable Secretary of War in that shape more than thirty days ago as a demand upon him from the popular branch of the Government, and there is no response.

Now, Mr. Speaker, without any feeling in the matter, without any innuendoes, without any attempt or purpose to draw conclusions from the action of the Secretary of War, I simply stand here to insist that it is due to this body, due to the respect we have for ourselves, that we will not thus be trifled with, if we have been trifled with. There may be reasons that I do not understand; there may be circumstances of which I have no knowledge; but from the best information I can get I do not believe there is any reason, based upon the necessities surrounding this question, for this delay.

The SPEAKER. What motion does the gentleman make?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I offer for adoption the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to answer the questions contained in House resolution No. 54 at as early a day as is consistent with the condition of the business of his office.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BLAND. Is that motion debatable?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman from Ohio had made an inquiry at the War Department he would have found that the remarks he has made this morning, and the resolution he offers, are entirely unnecessary and uncalled for. The Secretary of War has been preparing his answer to the inquiry with as much diligence as he was able to give to it, and I am informed that the answer will come to his resolution in a very short time.

It is useless to adopt a resolution which is nothing more than the resolution already adopted, and I beg the gentleman from Ohio to retain his soul in patience for a short time, and I now assure him that he will receive full and explicit answers to those inquiries; and I can further say to him that I am warranted in saying to this House that the Secretary has no disposition whatever either to delay an answer to those inquiries or to conceal any fact pertaining to them, but intends to give full and explicit answers to all the inquiries made, and that that information will probably be before the House within a day or two. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Before that motion is submitted——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I withhold it for a moment, and yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no private channel of information from the War Department, and it would have been highly improper and undignified in me to have called upon the honorable Secretary of War to know why he did not discharge his duty.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say to him that the War Department is a public office, and the gentleman has the same access to it as any person in this country, and I have no doubt he would have been politely and courteously treated if he had called there.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have been always so treated in the office of the Secretary of War. But I did not deem it proper when the resolution of this House had been addressed to the Secretary of War that I should make a personal application to him to know when he was going to proceed to answer it or why he delayed it. Now, on the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, I am entirely content to let this matter lie on the table for a while. But I think my friend from Illinois when he sees the answer will not complain of me that I did not possess my soul in quite the degree of patience that he thinks I ought to have done, for I think he will see that the answer to the resolution ought to have been communicated within twenty-four hours after it was addressed to the Secretary. I therefore withdraw the resolution.

CAPITOL ELECTRIC LIGHTS.

Mr. DIBBLE. I rise to make a privileged report. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report back with a favorable recommendation the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution which, on motion of Mr. BINGHAM, on January 16, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Architect of the Capitol be, and is hereby, directed to report to this body whether any electric lights or electric-light plants have been introduced or permitted to be introduced into the Capitol building since the last preceding session of Congress; if so, by what authority and upon what terms and conditions. Also to submit for the consideration of Congress a plan having in view the complete lighting of the building by electric light, together with an approximate estimate of the cost of the same, and such other details necessary to a proper consideration of the subject.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule of the House, this day, immediately after the call of States and Territories, is set apart for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ADVERTISING OF LOTTERY TICKETS.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up the bill (H. R. 5933) to punish the advertising of lottery tickets in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

A MEMBER. Let it be reported.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall not be lawful within the District of Columbia for any person to advertise or publish an advertisement of any lottery scheme, or any other scheme or game of chance, or for the sale of any lottery ticket or tickets, or any interest therein, or the sale of any ticket or tickets in any other scheme or game of chance, or any interest therein, in any newspaper, circular, hand-bill, or poster, or in any other way.

SEC. 2. That any person violating any provision of the foregoing section shall be prosecuted therefor in the police court of said District, and if found guilty shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $500, or be imprisoned in the jail of said District for a period not exceeding six months, or both so fined and imprisoned, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. ROGERS. I would like to ask who is in charge of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ROGERS. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina who is in charge of this bill what construction he places upon the first section of the bill; in other words, I would like to know whether or not he construes the bill so as if a newspaper in the city of Charleston, S. C., should advertise a lottery scheme, and its publisher should then mail the same paper to the gentleman from South Carolina, he being a subscriber for the paper, whether the publisher would be amenable to the penalties of this bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Who would be subject?

Mr. ROGERS. The publisher of the newspaper.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not think so.

Mr. ROGERS. That was not the object of the committee?

Mr. HEMPHILL. So far as I know it was not. I am not prepared to say what was the object of the bill except so far as it is expressed in the bill itself.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I did not suppose when I read the bill——

Mr. HEMPHILL. I rise to a question of order. Who is entitled to the floor?

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman from Arkansas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina was entitled to the floor, if he had taken or claimed it, but he did not. The gentleman from Arkansas rose and addressed the gentleman from South Carolina. The Chair will not take this out of the time of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not wish to cut off reasonable debate. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas how much time he desires.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I was about to say that I did not suppose the gentleman from South Carolina would have his patience exhausted by any observations that I expect to make upon this bill. I expect to be very brief in what I have to say; and I do not propose myself to offer any factious opposition to the passage of the bill.

I simply desire at this time to emphasize my dissent as far as possible from any legislation of this character which involves the liberty of the press or the liberty of speech. I do not conceive that any gentleman can engage in a more important duty devolving upon him under the Constitution and laws of the land than that of undertaking to preserve not only the letter but the spirit of the Constitution.

The question which I put to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], whether or not under the provisions of the first section of this bill a newspaper which had published in the city of Charleston, S. C., a lottery advertisement and had been mailed by the publisher to a citizen of the District of Columbia would be subject to the penalties of this bill, was answered by him in the negative, and I have supposed, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on the District of Columbia would not undertake to pass legislation for the punishment of people living throughout the length and breadth of this country. And yet, sir, I submit the question to the House whether or not the construction placed upon this bill by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], speaking for his committee as far as he may speak in the way of construing a bill reported by it, is not an erroneous construction. Personally I have not a shadow of a doubt but that the construction placed upon the bill by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] is erroneous. Let us look at this bill briefly and analytically. I will read the provision, so as to bring out more clearly the point I am undertaking to discuss.

That it shall not be lawful within the District of Columbia for any person to advertise, or publish an advertisement, of any lottery scheme, or any other scheme or game of chance, or for the sale of any lottery ticket or tickets, or any interest therein, or the sale of any ticket or tickets in any other scheme or game of chance, or any interest therein, in any newspaper, circular, hand-bill, or poster, or in any other way.

Let me be a little more analytical:

That it shall not be lawful within the District of Columbia for any person to advertise any lottery scheme in any newspaper, circular, hand-bill, poster, or in any other way.

If, for instance, the Globe-Democrat, of St. Louis, or the Missouri Republican, or the New York Sun should advertise in its columns the existence of a lottery in Louisville, or up in Delaware or Vermont, where these things are allowable, if they are organized under the constitution and laws of those States, and should send the newspaper into the District of Columbia, I should like to know whether the editor or publisher would not come directly within the provisions of the first section of this bill?

I do not see how by any process of logic or reason any man can construe the bill in any other way than that the newspaper publishers of the entire country would be liable to be indicted and punished under the provisions of this act if they published lottery advertisments in their papers and then circulated those papers in the District of Columbia. True, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] states that that was not the purpose of the bill. If that is not the purpose of the bill, it should be so changed as to read somewhat after this manner: that it shall not be lawful within the District of Columbia for any person to advertise or publish an advertisment of any lottery scheme in any newspaper published in the District of Columbia. If that change were made, then the power which the Committee on the District of Columbia proposes shall be exercised in regard to legislation within the District would be properly exercised; but when it is extended beyond the District of Columbia, I maintain that it is improperly exercised.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is another question involved and lying underneath the question that I have been discussing.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I wish the gentleman would indulge me in a question before he leaves that point.

Mr. ROGERS. I will.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The object of the bill is evidently to prevent the publication of lottery advertisements in the District of Columbia. I have always understood the law to be that the publication is where the matter is made known. It does not depend simply upon where a paper may be printed; the newspaper is published where it is circulated. Now, if the offense is to be located simply in the territory within which the printing is done, does not the gentleman see that the law would be nugatory?

Mr. ROGERS. I think so.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. All a man would have to do would be to cross the Potomac River and establish his newspaper in Virginia and flood the District of Columbia with lottery advertisements. I want to say to the gentleman that I understand this bill to prohibit the circulation of lottery advertisements in the District of Columbia, even though the newspapers may be published in South Carolina or in Arkansas, and I think it ought to.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman from Arkansas permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROGERS. Let me take one gentleman at a time.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Just a single question.

Mr. ROGERS. Very well.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If the gentleman's amendment should prevail, would it not be an unjust discrimination against the newspapers published in Washington?

Mr. ROGERS. I think so. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] in the construction which he places upon the bill. I agree that the provisions of the bill apply to every paper published in the United States with the same force and effect that it applies to papers published in the District of Columbia, provided circulation of the papers published elsewhere extends to the District of Columbia. To that extent we agree, and I am supported by the gentleman from Indiana in the view which I take of the provisions of this bill, as against the view taken by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. At this stage of the discussion, before going to the other point which I have in mind, I want to emphasize one thing. Year by year from the foundation of the Government down to the present hour, the public sentiment of all the States of the American Union has set its face against lotteries. In thirty-five out of thirty-eight States of the Union these institutions, either by constitutional provision or by statutes passed in accordance with the constitutions of the States, have been discountenanced and inhibited. Thus, that great conservative and moral power, infinitely stronger than statutory law, has set its condemnation everywhere throughout this country, with the exception of three States, upon this business, as it has upon very many other customs and practices which obtained in the earlier history of the Republic. Instead, therefore, of this fact being an argument for the passage of legislation of this description, it is an argument against such legislation by Congress wherever and whenever it tends in its purposes or effects to interfere with the liberty of the press or the liberty of speech.

For one hundred years this republic has managed to move forward in strength and greatness, physical and moral, without any legislation at all involving a restriction upon this great power for the development of the country and the safety of the liberties of the people, the press of the country. But under the guidance of an influence that one can scarcely locate, individuals who, having no sins of their own, are most deeply concerned about the sins of other people, are willing to override the letter and spirit of the Constitution and to invade the liberty or speech and of the press, when the very thing which they are seeking to reach is being crushed to the earth by public sentiment throughout the whole land.

I now turn to the point which I particularly wished to discuss in this connection. I submit that not only in the District of Columbia and in the Territories but in the States of this Union every power lodged in the Federal Government by virtue of the Constitution must be exercised so as in no way to interfere with, disturb, or overturn the other powers conferred by that instrument.

Judge Story—and certainly Democrats do not care to go any farther than this disciple of Alexander Hamilton has gone—Judge Story announces this principle in section 1508 of the second volume of his Commentaries upon the Constitution. In discussing the treaty-making power the question arose whether it could override other provisions of the Constitution equally important and of equal validity. I will read that section in order that gentlemen may consider whether, at this late day, when the moral sentiment of the country is gradually crushing out in every State of this Union these demoralizing and debauching practices, they are willing to embark upon legislation which is to invade the liberty of speech and liberty of the press.

The power to make treaties is by the Constitution general; and, of course, it embraces all sorts of treaties—for peace or war, for commerce or territory, for alliance or succor, for indemnity, for injuries or payment of debts, for the recognition and enforcement of principles of public law, and for any other purpose which the policy or interest of the independent sovereigns may dictate in their intercourse with each other.

That is the view which Judge Story expresses in regard to the treaty-making power. He proceeds:

Though the power is general and unrestricted, it is not to be so construed as to destroy the fundamental laws of the State. A power given by the Constitution can not be construed to authorize a destruction of other powers given in the same instrument. It must be construed, therefore, in subordination to it, and can not supersede or interfere with any other of its fundamental powers.

We are here, then, acting under a provision of the Constitution which gives us sovereign power in our legislation over the District of Columbia; and I concede that we may pass such police regulations for the government of this District as the State Legislatures of this Union may lawfully pass for their respective commonwealths. But I hold that we, in the exercise of our power here over the District of Columbia, and the Legislatures of the several States, in the exercise of such powers as are reserved to them by this Constitution, are always bound by the principle declared by Judge Story; in other words, any constitutional power must, in its exercise, be construed in subordination to any other constitutional power which may exist, and can not supersede or interfere with any other fundamental provisions of the instrument.

Touching legislation of this description there is a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States which has been quoted as authority by both sides. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that so far as Ex parte Jackson, 96 U. S. Reports, touches this question, it is in direct support of the proposition I have already read from Judge Story; and to this decision of the Supreme Court I for one moment invite the attention of the House. It will be remembered that this decision does not necessarily cover the precise point presented here, and so far as it seems to bear upon it, the language of the court is in the nature of a dictum, being incidental purely to the question which was presented to the court for decision. Nevertheless, I refer to this decision in order to show, so far as the opinion may do, what were the views of the Supreme Court in considering this general question. The question presented was as to the power of the Postmaster-General or his subordinates to seize in the mails, without writ or warrant, certain matter the mailing of which had been inhibited by previous statute.

Mr. HERBERT. From what case does the gentleman propose to read?

Mr. ROGERS. Ex parte Jackson, 96 U. S. Reports.

The difficulty attending the subject arises not from the want of power in Congress to prescribe regulations as to what shall constitute mail matter, but from the necessity of enforcing them consistently with rights reserved to the people of far greater importance than the transportation of the mails.

Observe this remarkable language of the Supreme Court. What Department of this Government has duties rising in importance above the functions performed by the Post-Office Department? Yet we are told by the Supreme Court that there are other rights of far higher importance than the transportation of the mails.

In their enforcement a distinction is made between different kinds of mail matter—between what is intended to be kept free from inspection, such as letters and sealed packages subject to letter postage, and what is open to inspection, such as newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, and other printed matter, purposely left in condition to be examined. Letters and sealed packages of this kind in the mail are as fully guarded from examination and inspection, except as to their outward form and weight, as if retained by the parties forwarding them in their own domiciles.

And why? Because, say the court—

The constitutional guaranty of the right of the people to be secure in their papers against unreasonable searches and seizures extends to their papers, thus closed against inspection, wherever they may be.

Thus the Supreme Court hold in this decision that the power which is to be exercised in that provision of the Constitution which confers on Congress the power to create post-offices and post-roads has to be exercised as subordinate to and in harmony with the great principle which protects the mail matter of a citizen from unreasonable search and seizure.

Whilst in the mail they can only be opened and examined under like warrant, issued upon similar oath or affirmation, particularly describing the thing to be seized, as is required when papers are subjected to search in one's own household.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman is reading from a decision in regard to sealed instruments. Does he not regard that as obiter dictum as well as anything in relation to newspapers with lottery advertisements in them?

Mr. ROGERS. If my friend from Georgia had paid attention to the remarks I have been making he would have learned two things: first, I utterly disclaimed that that question was now before the House here; and, second, I was not reading the opinion to establish any such fact, but I was reading the opinion to show that wherever you undertake to exercise any power lodged in the Constitution, it must be exercised in conformity with and so as not to overturn or destroy any other power equally great and equally important and lodged in the same instrument.

No legal argument made, or authority, can be of any service to any gentleman who is not willing, or has not the time, or does not take the trouble to listen to the entire argument.

Mr. BLOUNT. I always listen with pleasure to the remarks of the intelligent gentleman from Arkansas, as we always learn something from him.

Mr. ROGERS. I find no fault with the gentleman from Georgia, but neither time nor physical strength will permit me to go back over the argument I have made in order to elucidate the point he now asks information upon. I acknowledge, of course, the graceful compliment the gentleman pays me.

I proceed, and the House will bear in mind I am undertaking to demonstrate, and only to demonstrate, that whatever power we may undertake to exercise under the Constitution must be exercised in subordination to, and not so as to overturn other provisions of the organic law. The Supreme Court say:

No law of Congress can place in the hands of officials connected with the postal service any authority to invade the secrecy of letters and such sealed packages in the mail; and all regulations adopted as to mail matter of this kind must be in subordination to the great principle embodied in the fourth amendment of the Constitution.

Let us see what that fourth amendment to the Constitution is. It is as follows:

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

And if this great power which is lodged in the Federal Constitution of establishing post-offices and post-roads is to be exercised in subordination to the fourth amendment of the Constitution, pray tell me, if you can, why it is not to be exercised in subordination to this other principle which tells us Congress shall make no law in respect to the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Suppose the Congress of the United States, under the constitutional power to make laws for the District of Columbia, should undertake to pass a law providing that no newspaper shall be published in the District of Columbia which advocates the Presbyterian Church as the only true church, and hence should be the established church of the country. I want to know if a provision of that kind would not be in violation of the first amendment of the Constitution, which prohibits Congress from making any law respecting the establishment of a religion.

So I maintain not only Judge Story in his Commentaries, but the Supreme Court of the United States, in so far as it has touched this subject in the case of Ex parte Jackson, both support the position that I have taken, that this bill is an infringement of the liberty of the press.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let no gentleman upon this floor flatter himself with the idea that he may dodge this provision of the Constitution; and I want to say here, and once for all, that everybody may understand my views in regard to this subject, that I am willing to go just as far as any man is willing to go, without violating the provisions of the Constitution, in the suppression of every species of gambling known to the law.

The State which I have the honor in part to represent upon this floor has, by the seal of its constitution, condemned this business within the limits of that State; and the Legislature of the State has followed that provision up by suitable legislation adapted to it. So that it will be understood once for all that my stand here is in defense of that Constitution which I have taken an oath not only to support but to defend. We are not called upon simply by the terms of our oaths to uphold the Constitution. We are required by the terms of that obligation to defend the provisions of the Constitution and to repel every assault which may be made upon it from any source and moved by whatsoever spirit that may animate it. It is upon that provision that I stand. It is in conformity with the obligations of that oath that I stand to-day, and shall ever stand while I have the honor to represent a district of this Government.

But, Mr. Speaker, I proceed now to the next step. I say, and I repeat, that gentlemen will not be able to dodge this provision of the Constitution. Why? Because the Supreme Court in this very same case, Ex parte Jackson, in discussing the question in the elaborate manner in which it is discussed, make use of this language:

Nor can any regulations be enforced against the transportation of printed matter in the mails, which is open to examination, so as to interfere in any manner with the freedom of the press—

I repeat—

So as to interfere in any manner with the freedom of the press.

I put the query now to any gentleman here if, in the exercise of that power conferred by the Constitution for the establishment of post-offices and post-roads, and upon which has been built up our wonderous and magnificent postal system—if in the exercise of that power no legislation can take place that is to interfere with the freedom of the press, why will you go, under another provision of the Constitution, which confers legislative power upon the District of Columbia, and in the exercise of that power undertake to interfere with the liberty or the circulation of the press?

What power is found in that provision of the Constitution that gives us legislative authority over the District of Columbia that is more sovereign than the power which is conveyed to the Government under the post-office and post-roads clause of the Constitution? Each and every provision is equally sovereign, and they must be exercised one so as to be consistent with the other; and when they are inconsistent you may be sure that there is a clash of powers under the Constitution because of an encroachment either under the one clause or the other.

But the Supreme Court continue and say:

Liberty of circulation is as essential to that freedom as liberty of publication. Indeed, without the circulation the publication would be of little value.

Mr. Speaker, this question, like many others, has been before Congress for some years. I know that many gentlemen have made up their minds as to how they will vote upon the question. I do not expect to be able to overturn their views or alter their conclusions. If these commentaries upon the Constitution and this decision of the Supreme Court do not convince this House upon the question, then Moses and the prophets would not succeed in convincing them. But I ask the Democratic side of this Chamber that they do not wipe out that middle aisle. I ask them never to go beyond, in the construction of the Constitution, the limits fixed by the commentaries of that great disciple of Alexander Hamilton, Judge Story, as he lays it down. I ask them not to go beyond the expression of opinion as set down in this decision of the Supreme Court of the United States to which I have referred in the case of Ex parte Jackson. But if they are determined to do it, I ask them not to do it upon some question where no great principle is involved at all commensurate with the remedy you seek to apply.

Wait until some great impending public calamity shall rise up and demand the timbers of the Constitution to be strained to save the country and its liberties; but do not in this faulty, useless, unnecessary way put upon the statute-books legislation violating its whole spirit, as construed by the ablest commentators, and as I have shown by this decision of the highest court of the land, but leave the subject to the religious and the moral teachings of the people for the accomplishment of the results which you seek, and without disturbing the landmarks beyond which our ancestry thought it unwise to go.

I reserve the residue of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has twenty minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The object of the District Committee is to get through as much legislation to-day as possible; therefore, while I have listened with interest to the remarks of the gentleman from Arkansas, I regret that the time of the House has been consumed in this discussion.

According to the position taken by the gentleman from Arkansas, whenever the people of this country reach a certain point of morality and are going on to make themselves better, the best thing the lawmakers can do is not to embody their sentiment in law to be enforced against the bad people, but to leave public sentiment to do the best it can. The gentleman says that because thirty-five States of the Union have passed laws prohibiting the sale and advertisement of lottery tickets, therefore the best thing to do for those who have charge of the District of Columbia is to let it take care of itself and go to the bad if it wants to, instead of embodying that sentiment in a law for the benefit of the District.

This is the first time, I suppose, that it has ever been proclaimed upon the floor of this House that the best sentiment of the people of the country is not to be put into a law for fear it may aid them in working out what they are trying to accomplish.

The next point the gentleman makes is that he fears this law will infringe on the constitutional rights in the newspapers of this country to publish these things. I do not think it is likely there will be agreement among the lawyers of this House upon that point. We know the legal profession largely predominates in this House; and the chances are that every lawyer has his own opinion about this as about all other laws, and that he will not agree with anybody else as to its construction.

But I will state that this bill has been thoroughly argued before the District Committee by two of the most eminent firms in this District; men whose legal talents give them a practice and a compensation which are not equaled by many of the profession in the United States. They have acknowledged before the committee that there is no constitutional question involved in the subject one way or the other. Both of the lawyers representing those distinguished firms stated in the beginning of their argument that there was no question about the power of Congress to pass this law, and that is the argument which I give in answer to my friend from Arkansas.

There are several gentlemen who desire to be heard upon this question, and I shall not myself occupy more of the time of the House at present.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman from South Carolina permit me a question?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Certainly.

Mr. BLAND. I see no provision here allowing appeal. Is there any general statute covering that subject? This seems to be a new offense created by this act to be tried in the police court, and there is no provision for an appeal to a higher court.

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is a law already in the District allowing appeals from the police court to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, so that a provision for an appeal in this bill would be unnecessary.

Mr. BLAND. You think that the general statute would cover that?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think it would.

Mr. CRAIN. May I ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CRAIN. Is not the practical effect of this bill, if it becomes a law, to prevent the circulation in the District of Columbia of newspapers published elsewhere that have lottery advertisements in them?

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] takes that view. Other lawyers, with as much ability, have argued on the other side and have claimed that the bill is a great injustice to the newspapers of the District of Columbia, because it will not apply to the newspapers published outside of the District.

Mr. CRAIN. I speak with reference to the provision of the bill:

That it shall not be lawful within the District of Columbia for any person to advertise or publish an advertisement of any lottery scheme, or any other scheme or game of chance, or for the sale of any lottery ticket or tickets, or any interest therein, or the sale of any ticket or tickets in any other scheme or game of chance, or any interest therein, in any newspaper, circular, hand-bill, or poster, or in any other way.

That seems to apply whether the newspaper is published here in the first instance or is printed elsewhere and sent here for sale.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I say that is a question about which lawyers differ.

Mr. CRAIN. I want your opinion.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not know that my opinion is worth much more than that of many other people; but my opinion is that it applies to newspapers published in the District, and I do not think it applies to papers published outside of the District.

I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GLASS].

Mr. GLASS. I will leave the discussion of the constitutional question involved in this bill to others, and address my remarks to a different phase of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, happily for our country, its manhood and womanhood, the vicious system of lotteries is rapidly passing away. The sentiment by which such institutions were sustained in almost every State in the Union is broken down, and they only maintain a precarious existence at this time in two or three States. Many of the best people of the land have, at times, justified or tolerated them on the plea of replenishing depleted treasuries of States; but they have more frequently masqueraded as benevolent institutions, designed to dispense noble charities to the deserving needy. And in the latter disguise they have endeavored to maintain a decent show of respectability in the presence of a Christian civilization, and yet are a blot upon our moral and political sun. Their stronghold is on our Southern border, beneath sunny skies, similar to those under which it had its birth. These institutions had their origin in Italy during the expiring days of the dark ages, a period fruitful in invention, discovery, and the dawn of letters; spreading thence across the continent and again to Great Britain, whence our Anglo-Saxon ancestors handed them down to us.

In our early history many good men and wise statesmen advocated the system; but State after State has legislated it out of existence, some putting an inhibition in the organic law, and others by legislative enactment. Extreme measures in some cases have been resorted to in order to entirely suppress it; and will Representatives on this floor be behind those of the States in wiping out this dark spot upon the body politic? Exclusive jurisdiction over the subject-matter of this bill attaches to Congress; and as Congress can not invade the sovereignty of the few States where these institutions still exist, it should at least exercise all of its constitutional powers to exclude advertisements of their schemes from the District of Columbia, and protect the people hereof from the vicious and corrupting influences of the system.

I know it will be insisted that the provisions of the bill will be an abridgment of the "freedom of the press;" but, Mr. Speaker, it will not abridge any "freedom of the press" to do right or to publish whatever may promote the good of mankind. It is not designed to take away any proper or legitimate right of the press, but only to restrain and prohibit all license to perpetrate a wrong by enticing the young and unsuspecting into habits that will lead them into ruin, as has heretofore been done in many instances. Some of the blackest deeds in the catalogue of crimes have been committed under the plea of liberty. On the way to the guillotine Madame Roland, exclaimed, "O, Liberty! Liberty! what crimes are committed in thy name."

The evils of lotteries fall heaviest upon the young—the laboring men and women, and the departmental clerks of both sexes in this District. The purchase of lottery tickets with many becomes a passion, as does other species of gambling, and destroys the love of habits of thrift and industry. The hope of acquiring sudden fortune destroys the taste for regular occupation, and inevitable ruin, moral and financial, often overtakes such individual. Many otherwise faithful employés and officials who have lost their places, and not infrequently their character, have been able to trace the cause to the corrupting influence of lottery advertisements that had fallen into their hands. These poisonous missives spare no persons or places. They invade the workshop, the household, the school-room, and even the temple of God, but their baneful effects fall chiefly upon those who are compelled to struggle for a livelihood.

I have been informed that many of the Government employés residing in this city are frequent patrons of such wicked schemes and spend much of their salary in this way; hence this city is a favorite place for their advertisements. You can scarcely examine a daily in this city but you will see them conspicuously displayed. If we can not destroy the anaconda, let us at least exert our constitutional authority to prevent it twining its shiny coils around the people of this District. Then, by excluding such advertisements from the mails and refusing to pay postal-orders to persons or firms known to be engaged in this business, their power for evil may be circumscribed within the States of their existence. Their power for evil is very great; they retain numerous and able counsel, and a generous patronage of the public press does not fail to bring apologists, if not defenders. They have their henchmen all over the land, who are ever ready to assail with criticism whoever on this floor may dare to essay the protection of the people from their insidious wiles and snares.

Let this bill pass and we shall have made a beginning by which this moral, political, and financial curse can ultimately be extirpated from the land. I say political, because it has become a potent political factor in at least one State, and aims a blow at whoever may attempt its overthrow.

The evils of the lottery system had become so great in Great Britain in 1819 that the attention of Parliament was called to it, and in 1823 Parliament entirely prohibited lotteries and made it illegal to sell the tickets of any foreign projects of this character. "Between the years 1816 and 1828 the French Government derived from lotteries an annual income of 14,000,000 francs. A few years ago the government suppressed them, and in January of the next year 525,000 francs more were found to be in the savings-banks of Paris alone than in the same month of the preceding year"—showing conclusively the good effects of their abolition on the poorer classes.

The enlightened moral sentiment of the country demands the passage of such a bill, and I hope it will pass.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I yield now to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON].

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago, when I moved to postpone the further consideration of this bill until to-day, I said distinctly to my friend from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] and to the House that I did not propose to throw any obstacle in the way of its passage other than possibly to give briefly my views of the provisions of the bill and to state the course which I intend to pursue with reference to it. I desire in the outset of my remarks to say this: I am not here, sir, as the champion of lottery schemes or gambling in any form or shape.

I do not profess to be very much better than a great many men with whom I associate. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I claim for myself to be exempt absolutely from any affiliation or association with any lottery or other gambling concern. But, while this is true, sir, I desire to say another thing, in order that my position may be clearly and distinctly understood, not only by this House, but by those I represent upon this floor. I am one of those who do not believe that purity in mankind, that morality in communities, can be enforced or that men's souls can be sent to heaven by compulsory legislation. While I recognize the fact and believe as religiously as any man on this floor that all the moral agencies invoked to better the moral condition of society in the way of associations for the moral improvement of mankind are right and, in so far as they go, good in their kind, I do not believe that the men of this country will be regenerated by those influences alone.

I believe, sir, that the best foundation, and the only one upon which society and good government can safely rest, is a community whose moral tone and moral impressions are received and formed by the fireside from the lips of a Christian mother and by virtue of the example of an honest, honorable, conscientious father. I believe that the elements of Christian truth which are revealed through the religious channels by which they are conveyed to us are, after all, the true foundation stones upon which alone society and good government can rest.

Mr. FUNSTON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. COMPTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FUNSTON. What can a Christian mother or a Christian father do with her or his children in respect to such matters so long as these dens are left open and permitted by the laws of the land?

Mr. COMPTON. Teach their children, sir, that these things are against the revealed word of truth as it comes to us from the lips of Him who knew no sin. Teach them by precept and by example that these things are wrong in practice, and that they lead to perdition and destruction.

Now, Mr. Speaker, while I hold these views, I protest here to-day that the moral aspect of this question is not the one which most concerns you and me as Representatives upon this floor. Sir, there are other questions involved here broader and deeper, affecting us as legislators, and which, in my humble opinion, should control our judgments in casting our votes upon this bill. I am not going to get myself between the two fires of legal artillery which are playing here. Not being myself a lawyer, I know that if I did I would be ground to powder. I leave the constitutional question involved to the double-barreled constitutional argument fired by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] which struck the two bills, the one which has come from the Post-Office Committee and the one which has come from the Committee on the District of Columbia, in their vital parts at one and the same fire.

But, Mr. Speaker, are there no such things as rights? Is there no such thing as justice to the papers published in the District of Columbia? Where is the right, where is the justice of prohibiting the publication of these lottery advertisements in the newspapers of the District of Columbia, when you open the doors through the mails for the introduction of papers containing such advertisements from my friend's State, or from my State, or from any other State?

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman permit a question right there?

Mr. COMPTON. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. As I read the bill it does not allow what the gentleman says it does. If it does allow it, then I agree with him that it is wrong.

Mr. COMPTON. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that the bill does not undertake to prevent the circulation within the District of Columbia of papers published outside the District and containing these advertisements; and now, to him, as a lawyer, I put this question: Does he believe for one moment that that law would stand longer than it would take an intelligent court to destroy it?

Mr. CANNON. I have not a doubt of it at all. I have no doubt that the publication of lottery advertisements in the District of Columbia can be prohibited by legislation by Congress, just as it is prohibited in Illinois by the State Legislature, and has been for thirty years.

Mr. COMPTON. Let us examine this question a little further. The gentleman says he believes the power resides in Congress to prohibit the advertisement in the District of Columbia of lottery schemes. I know that this power is exercised in the several States; but let me ask the gentleman a question pertinent to the matter we are now considering. What is the Louisiana lottery? It is an institution authorized, organized, and created by the organic law of a sovereign State of this Union. It is a legal institution in so far as the State of Louisiana can make it so, as completely as any institution chartered by any State in this broad land. Now, my friend from Illinois knows that in so far as we can exercise this power in reference to the Louisiana lottery we can equally exercise it with reference to any banking institution chartered in the State of Louisiana or elsewhere. Now, I wish to ask my friend this question: If we can say to this lottery company, a chartered institution, bearing the stamp and impress of the authority of a State law—nay, of the constitution of one of the States of this Union—"Your advertisement shall not be published in any newspaper issued in the District of Columbia," why can we not say to some banking corporation authorized in the State of Louisiana, or, if you choose, in the District of Columbia, "You shall not receive the moneys of this lottery company as deposits in your vaults?"

Mr. CANNON. I believe that in the exercise of the police power Congress or the State Legislatures, in their respective jurisdictions, can unquestionably, in accordance with the judicial decisions, pass legislation of this character. Such legislation has been passed by various States, and has been sustained, I believe, by the courts from every standpoint. The gentleman says, "If this can be done, where will you draw the line?"

Mr. COMPTON. That is the question.

Mr. CANNON. We can pass this legislation now; and when it is necessary to "draw the line," I will then answer the gentleman's inquiry. Legislation of this character is an unquestionable exercise of the police power.

Mr. COMPTON. Where does the gentleman's own State draw the line—against newspapers published outside?

Mr. CANNON. "Against papers published outside!" Why, it prohibits the publication of any advertisement of any lottery under severe penalties.

Mr. COMPTON. By any Illinois paper?

Mr. CANNON. By any paper.

Mr. COMPTON. Does the legislation apply to papers published outside of the State?

Mr. CANNON. It does not make any difference where the paper is printed; the law applies to the publication or circulation.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will now yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE]. How much time does he desire?

Mr. HOGG. Before the gentleman from Indiana proceeds I wish to put a question to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL]. Would not any person selling in the District of Columbia papers published outside the District, and containing lottery advertisements, be amenable to the punishment contemplated by this bill?

Mr. HEMPHILL. As I have stated several times, that is a matter about which lawyers differ. The whole argument before the committee was upon the assumption that the bill was not to be so construed. Lawyers were paid by their respective clients—one by the Louisiana lottery, and the other by the newspapers of this District—to state all reasonable objections to the bill; and that was not one of them.

Mr. CRAIN. If that is not the construction of the bill it makes an unjust discrimination.

Mr. HEMPHILL. That is a matter for every man to decide according to his own judgment. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE].

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, if I am correct in my interpretation of this bill, it will operate as a prohibition of lottery advertisements within the District of Columbia; and it will be a matter of no consequence where the advertisement or notice may have been originally printed. It is as much a publication to distribute within this District the papers of Maryland, Virginia, or New York, as if the type from which those papers were printed had been originally set up within the District. And while I assume that this bill does thus prohibit the publication of these advertisements, I want it distinctly understood that, adopting this interpretation, I indorse the measure fully and without reserve. The law would be absolutely nugatory if it did not so provide. All that would be necessary in order to evade it would be to have your advertisement inserted in a paper published in Baltimore, Alexandria, or some convenient point in the State of Pennsylvania, and having thus been printed it might be thrown broadcast in the District of Columbia; and in that way the evil which Congress proposes to remedy would go unchecked. I want gentlemen who differ with us in this matter to understand that the object of the bill is to prohibit the making public by print of lottery advertisements in the District of Columbia. And this brings me to a consideration of the question which gentlemen have seen proper to discuss in this connection.

I must confess my astonishment at some of the positions which gentlemen have taken here. I listened to the very learned and very eloquent argument of the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas [Mr.

ROGERS], in which he demonstrated to my mind quite conclusively that neither Congress nor the States can by legislation trench upon the constitutional liberty of the press. But are there no limits to the exercise of that liberty? In the Constitution is enshrined the liberty of speech, but does that protect every tongue in every conceivable utterance? There is in the same provision of the Constitution an assertion of the liberty of petition. Does that mean that the Congress of the United States is bound to receive every petition of whatever character which may be sent to this body? Suppose it is indecent in language; suppose it asks something that is obnoxious to the moral sense. May we not, without violating the Constitution, exclude such a petition from our petition-box and all reference to it from our Journals? Does the gentleman intend to say that because in general terms the Constitution provides that the liberty of the press shall be preserved, therefore the press may publish whatever it pleases? Oh, I know gentlemen do not intend to be so understood.

Mr. COMPTON. Allow me——

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. One moment. I was listening anxiously to hear the gentleman from Arkansas define to the lawyers and other gentlemen of this body in what consists the liberty of the press. He would perhaps have been required to have gone back through the years of the English-speaking race to find the origin of that idea in the Constitution of the United States—back to that day when kings assumed a censorship of the press and the right to determine in advance the manner in which the press should give utterance to public opinion on some subject concerning the administration of the government. Did it ever extend to advertisements, and was that the character of literature the liberty of the press was intended to protect? Will the gentleman answer? I undertake to say its purpose was to secure the fullest liberty of the decent expression of opinion on any subject which might concern the public; and I would be as far from restraining that liberty of the press as either of the distinguished gentlemen who have spoken in advocacy of the freedom of the press to advertise lotteries.

Let me answer the question at once. Gentlemen on the other side concede not only the policy, but the propriety, of prohibiting this gambling in the District of Columbia. They say it is within the police powers of the District, and we have the right to do it; that it is the demand of the moral sentiment of the age; that we are only keeping abreast of the advancing civilization of the age when we put legislation of this character upon the statute-book. They concede we may make lotteries unlawful and yet deny the right of Congress to prohibit the publication of invitations to commit the crime. That, gentlemen—pardon me, if I say it—seems to me a monstrous doctrine indeed. You declare the business a crime, but do not concede the power of Congress to declare it a crime. You go beyond that, and say it is proper. You should declare, at the same time, the newspapers have some kind of immunity by which they may invite every man, woman, and child in the District to commit it, and you can not prohibit it unless, forsooth, you violate the freedom of a Washington newspaper. I have said all I want to say on this subject.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now yield, for five minutes, to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN].

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen who have spoken in favor of this bill assume, or take for granted, that every lottery is necessarily a crime. Now, right there I take issue with them. I do not believe that a lottery which is authorized by the organic law of a State of this Union belongs to the category of crimes. I do not believe every scheme of chance or lottery which is indulged in at a bazaar given for the benefit of the Grand Army of the Republic, or at a fair which may be held for the benefit of a church or school, is necessarily a crime, because, forsooth, moralists belonging to the school of morality of which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] is such a distinguished member so hold.

A lottery, according to Webster, is a distribution of prizes by lot or by chance. Therefore a simple publication by a newspaper of a fair for the benefit of the poor, or for the benefit of the schools attached to a church, or for any other purpose, would be punished under this bill in the courts of the District.

Independently of this proposition it seems from the discussion of this question by the gentleman from Indiana, and the chairman of this committee, that there is a difference of opinion in reference to the object of this bill. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] insists this bill does not apply to newspapers which are printed elsewhere and circulated in the District. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE], on the other hand, maintains, and I think rightly, that it not only applies to the papers published here, but to newspapers printed elsewhere and circulated here. If there be doubt on the proposition it ought not to go upon the statute-book of this country. If Congress confesses through the committee, or from the lips of the gentleman from Indiana, that its legal interpretation is involved in doubt, then it ought not to be incorporated into the law of the land. Why frame a bill which is confessedly, according to its advocates, liable to such different construction? If the gentleman from South Carolina is correct, then the bill unjustly discriminates against the papers of this District. If the gentleman from Indiana be correct, then the bill interferes with the circulation of outside papers in the District.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRAIN. I ask for five minutes more time.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman, but I can not do so.

Mr. CRAIN. Then I will take the privilege of finishing my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I am no lawyer; but it seems to me, as a man who pretends to have a modicum of common sense, that there is too much law in this bill. In trying to correct an admitted evil you are opening the doors to a greater evil.

This bill appears to contain some of the ashes of the old alien and sedition laws. Those laws, sir, not only interfered with the liberties of the press, but they did, as this law will probably do, interfere with personal liberty. Nor is this the first time that the ashes of the alien and sedition laws have been stirred by Congress. They were stirred under the administration of General Grant, when the United States Senate passed a bill to abridge the freedom of the press. Under the provisions of that bill the editor of the most obscure newspaper in the most obscure corner of the most obscure State of the Union could have been dragged to the District of Columbia and subjected to fine and imprisonment, or both, by its petty local tribunals.

There is the same seed, sir, in this bill. It not only tramples upon the freedom of the press and upon the freedom of the person, but it tramples upon the rights of the States. Under the laws of the State of Louisiana lotteries are legal. The editor of a Louisiana newspaper can lawfully print a lottery advertisement there, but his paper would be tabooed in the District of Columbia under the provisions of this act. If he afterwards appears in the District of Columbia his person can be seized and he can be subjected to fine and imprisonment. There is no question about it. The bill is clear and specific. It says:

Or published.

Under law a newspaper is held to be published wherever it is circulated. The paper published outside, but circulated in the District of Columbia, is thus published here.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit me to call attention to the law of his own State? He refers to Louisiana. I believe the gentleman is from New York. Now, if the gentleman will examine the law of the State of New York he will find that a newspaper published in another State is subject to the same conditions proposed here exactly.

Mr. CUMMINGS. If the States are able to correct an alleged evil, what has the Federal Government got to do with it?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I did not know that the States could legislate for the District of Columbia.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I did not say that they did, sir. To continue: If you have a right to prescribe what shall be printed in the advertising columns of a newspaper, you certainly have the right to exercise censorship over its editorial and news columns.

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I have but five minutes; otherwise I should be very glad to yield to the gentleman.

Congress is then, under this bill, to indirectly exercise editorial supervision over the entire press of the country. Who is to be the editor-in-chief? Is it to be the distinguished gentleman at the other end of the Avenue? Who is to be the city editor? Is it to be the Speaker of the House of Representatives? Who are to be the reporters? Are they to be the chairmen of committees? Where is your editorial supervision going to end? This bill opens the door for it. Where and when will it be closed if once opened?

Now, you mean well—you say you mean well—you say that you do not mean to interfere with the freedom of the press. Your object is different. The question is not what is your object, but what is to be the effect of your efforts? When you play with the freedom of the press you play with fire. Blow out this match and avoid a conflagration. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEMPHILL. By an understanding with my friend who controls the time on the other side, he will now consume the remainder of the time in opposition to the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, the first question raised in opposition to this bill is founded upon the Constitution. The clause of the Constitution is perhaps familiar to you all:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press, etc.

The first inquiry in order to a proper understanding and application of this proposed law, in my judgment is, what is the liberty of the press? Is it the expression of the opinions of the editor, and stop there; or does it include the publication of advertisements as well? My opinion is that the liberty of the press extends only to the editorial views of the paper. The advertisements in the paper are no more the expressions of the editor than a hand-bill published by the advertiser and posted upon the corners of the streets. That is his act—the act of the advertiser, the man who publishes his business. The injurious effect on the paper of this bill, should it become a law, consists only in depriving it of a remunerative business. Hence, I do not believe that this bill is obnoxious to the objection that it is an invasion of the liberty of the press.

The bill, however, is a very harsh one. It seems to me that it is wholly an unnecessary measure, and as it is drawn it will create a very unjust discrimination against the newspapers of this District. I have no doubt, sir, that it applies alone to the newspapers published within the District of Columbia. It reads:

That it shall not be lawful within the District of Columbia for any person to advertise or publish an advertisement of any lottery scheme, or any other scheme or game of chance, or for the sale of any lottery ticket or tickets, or any interest therein, or the sale of any ticket or tickets in any other scheme or game of chance, or any interest therein, in any newspaper, circular, hand-bill, or poster, or in any other way.

There are two things which this bill denounces. One thing is to advertise or publish an advertisment of any lottery or game of chance in any newspaper or otherwise; and the other is the sale of any lottery ticket or ticket in a game of chance; and it applies only to the District of Columbia. It can not be extended so as to apply to the doing of either of those things outside of the District.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. OATES. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman, as a lawyer, interpret the word "publish" as not applying to newspapers other than those in the District?

Mr. OATES. Evidently the bill has in view the prohibition of publishing what is known as an advertisement in a newspaper, or issuing any circular, hand-bill, or poster, within the District and not outside of it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If it is printed out of the District and published here, is it not published in the District?

Mr. OATES. The gentleman undertakes to give the word "publish" its largest sense, which is never allowable in the construction of a penal statute.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I give it the legal sense, and it has never been differently construed by any court.

Mr. OATES. The gentleman from Indiana will permit me to say that he would not do himself any credit if he rose before any court and asserted that he could by a latitudinous construction of a penal statute include anything not embraced in its letter.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OATES. I should like a minute or two more. I do not approve of the Louisiana lottery, but it is a lawful State institution. Newspapers from that State and elsewhere could, were this bill a law, be circulated ad libitum within this District, and the courts would not, could not punish the publishers.

Mr. ROGERS. I can not yield further, as I have promised the time at my disposal.

Mr. OATES. I merely wanted to say in conclusion that I am opposed to the policy of this bill. Lotteries and gambling ought to be and are prohibited by law within this District. The laws already in force are a sufficient protection. You can not legislate religion and morality into the people. If all the churches were to expel all of their members who take chances in the Louisiana lottery I apprehend that they would lose a much larger percentage of valuable members than they would willingly part with. I think that lottery should be abolished, but it is a State institution and Congress has no power to do it. The State of Louisiana alone can do that.

Mr. ROGERS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY].

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I am obliged to the gentleman from Arkansas, but do not know that I will consume even the time he has allotted me.

Whenever the House of Representatives comes to adopt any measure on any subject it seems to me that as their action has the force of law they should be careful as to what construction shall be put upon the language of their act. As I read this bill, sir, it seems to me likely to fill the criminal courts of this District with prosecutions from other States and other portions of the territory of the United States.

Without coming down critically to find out what is the exact meaning of the word "publish," it seems to me that under the construction of this law if a lottery scheme be published in a newspaper of the State of Louisiana, and if I, as an individual, have in view the object of getting those publications before the people of the District of Columbia, all I have to do is to buy a thousand of those newspapers, circulate them through the mails, and spread them broadcast over the District of Columbia, and the intelligence desired to be communicated is spread throughout the whole District. That is one of the operations of this law in my judgment. It has been commonly said by gentlemen who are members of the House that this is a bill to establish a censorship of the press. I believe the liberty of the press as the liberty of speech is guarded and guarantied by a law with which the Congress of the United States, the whole legislative department of the Government united with the executive, can not tamper.

Now, sir, if they will establish a system of censorship of the press that would prevent a newspaper reporter from lying about individuals, whether they be public men or whether they be private individuals, if it were possible under the Constitution to enact such a law, I for one would cheerfully vote for it, because I have never yet seen anything as offensive to the sense of public morality in any advertisement of any lottery or other scheme as I have seen in the expressed opinions of newspaper reporters published as facts. If this House could pass an act the enforcement of which would compel the representatives of newspapers, both editors and reporters, to confine themselves to a statement of fact instead of publishing individual opinions of theirs as facts, I believe the enactment of such a law would redound to the good and the welfare of all this people.

But, sir, one grave fault of this bill is that it proposes to discriminate against newspapers published in a certain and a very small portion of the territory of the United States. I believe that any legislation that discriminates against any class or any individual, unless it be careful in its terms, may be hurtful not only to the individuals concerned in that particular legislation, but such precedents would be dangerous in reference to the legislation of the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROGERS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LATHAM].

Mr. LATHAM. I should not have a single word to say with regard to the merits of this bill but for the reason that I am so unfortunate as to differ in opinion with the gentleman from South Carolina who is chairman of the District Committee. I differ with him both in his construction of the meaning of the words of the bill and as to what the committee understood when they reported it here to the favorable consideration of this House. I certainly understood personally, and I thought the other members of the committee understood, that the purview of this bill would not only reach the newspapers published in the District of Columbia, but would apply equally to every paper published in the United States that was circulated within the limits of this District.

If the chairman of the committee, however, is correct in his views, it is apparent to the House that this bill has been favorably reported under a misapprehension of the law, and ought to be recommitted to the committee for its further action. I say "a misapprehension of the law" because, with the exception of the distinguished chairman of the committee, no gentleman upon this floor has taken the position that the bill does not apply generally to newspapers published throughout the Union. Now, sir, if it does so apply, it will have the same result that laws of this character which have been passed in the several States have had. There are laws in at least twenty of the States of this Union of an exactly similar character to this, denouncing as great if not greater penalties for their infraction, yet I ask any gentleman upon this floor whether he has ever known of a single prosecution and conviction under those laws? And if the offenders were prosecuted, who would have to suffer? You might pick up here the editors of three or four papers published in the city of Washington and you might punish them, but you could not punish a citizen of South Carolina or of any other State who violated your law, because he would not be here to be arrested and tried.

You might pick up the barefooted boy who runs through the snows of winter to sell his newspapers and put him in prison for disseminating papers containing these advertisements, published in South Carolina, in Kentucky, or in any other State, but the men who published the papers would not be amenable to your laws.

Mr. CRAIN. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. He is a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I will ask him to state what was the construction placed by the committee upon this bill.

Mr. LATHAM. I can state the construction which I placed upon the bill, and which I understood the members sitting near me to place upon it. I asked the question whether the bill would apply to all papers circulating in the District of Columbia, and I understood the opinion to be that it would so apply.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I am opposed to lotteries. If by my voice and vote to-day I could stamp out of existence the Louisiana lottery or any other lottery, legal or not legal, I would cheerfully cast my vote to do it. But, sir, this is an entirely different question. This institution is established by the fundamental law of a sovereign State; it is as much a legal institution as the First National Bank; we can not destroy it. Its malign influence extends all over this country, and will continue to do so until its charter has expired by lapse of time. You can not by any instrumentality that human ingenuity can devise legislate morality into the human race.

Mr. CRAIN. Will the gentleman tell us why the Territories were not included in this bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LATHAM] has expired. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr.

BROWNE] was anxious for me to define to him the liberty of the press. It is very much easier to define what is not the liberty of the press than to define what is, but Judge Cooley in his work on Constitutional Limitations, after a long discussion of this subject, has undertaken to sum it up, and I give my friend from Indiana the benefit of that distinguished authority:

The constitutional liberty of speech and of the press, as we understand it, implies a right to freely utter and publish whatever the citizen may please, and to be protected against any responsibility for so doing, except so far as such publications, from their blasphemy, obscenity, or scandalous character may be a public offense, or as, by their falsehood or malice, they may injuriously affect the standing, reputation, or pecuniary interest of individuals. Or, to state the same in somewhat different words, we understand liberty of speech and of the press to imply not only liberty to publish, but complete immunity from legal censure for the publication, so long as it is not harmful in its character when tested by such standards as the law affords. For those standards we must look to the common-law rules which were in force when the constitutional guaranties were established and with reference to which they have been adopted.

And in the case of Stone vs. Mississippi the supreme court of that State said:

They are not in the legal acceptance of the term mala in se, but, as we have just seen, may properly be made mala prohibita.

So that when the Constitution was adopted there was no such thing as the crime of dealing in lotteries of any description, but, on the contrary, the Father of our Country took his part in lotteries in this District. I will give the gentleman another thought in that connection, which comes from a distinguished Frenchman who traveled in this country many years ago. De Tocqueville said:

But in countries in which the sovereignty of the people ostensibly prevails the censorship of the press is not only dangerous but absurd. * * * The sovereignty of the people and the liberty of the press may therefore be looked upon as correlative institutions, just as the censorship of the press and universal suffrage are two things that are irreconcilably opposed, and which can not long be retained among the institutions of the same people.

Mr. MCADOO. I wish to ask the gentleman whether there are not laws similar to this in most of the States of the Union?

Mr. ROGERS. In thirty-five States there are laws in relation to lotteries, and also, I am told, in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MCADOO. And is it not a fact that in nearly all the States there are publications about lotteries?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; but I have been unable to find a single adjudication touching the constitutionality of these laws.

Mr. MCADOO. And does not the Constitution of the United States bear the same relation to the States that it bears to the District of Columbia?

Mr. ROGERS. That is my understanding, of course.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question. He says that so far as he knows the question has never been raised as to the constitutionality of laws of this description. If raised at all it would be raised by the lottery companies, would it not?

Mr. ROGERS. Not necessarily. I should think not. I suppose it would be raised by publishers of newspapers.

Mr. BLOUNT. But it has never been raised at all?

Mr. ROGERS. I am not aware that there has been any adjudication upon the constitutionality of prohibiting publications of this description in the press.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman regard that fact as an acquiescence on the part of the newspapers and the lottery companies in the constitutionality of this character of legislation?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir; exactly the reverse, because I dare say there is not a single State of the Union in which the newspapers do not publish these things in some form or other.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I promised to yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER]. As I do not see him in his seat, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT].

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, this bill, it seems to me, applies only to papers published in the District of Columbia. The language is peculiar:

It shall not be lawful for any person to advertise—

What does that mean? It applies to the person who causes an advertisement to be inserted—or publish an advertisement in any newspaper, circular, hand-bill, or poster.

What does that mean? That applies to the person who prints and utters. If it were intended to apply to persons who may circulate newspapers containing advertisements of this description, the word "by" would have been used, instead of the word "in." The prohibition would have been against publishing an advertisement by any newspaper, circular, hand-bill, or poster. That language would cover the circulation. But the words of the bill mean simply that no publication of the kind described can be made within the District of Columbia. The bill therefore makes a useless discrimination against newspapers published in the District, leaving full power to newspapers published outside to be circulated here. Such legislation can do no possible good.

Mr. ROGERS. As I before stated, I promised to yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER], who was not then in his seat. As he is now present, I ask that the House, by unanimous consent, allow him two minutes.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that it is, or seems to be, the tendency of this Republic to adopt more and more the methods of monarchical Europe. To one who, like myself, left his native land to find a home where he could breathe the air of liberty and not be hampered at every step by the paternal, maternal, and goody-goody care of the government, it is certainly a painful reflection to find that we are rapidly approaching in this country the state of affairs from which we fled.

I do not advocate lotteries; I am not an advocate of gambling in any form. I think I am as moral as any of the gentlemen who believe it their special mission from Heaven to be the legislative watch-dogs of our public morals. This would be the initiative step of a censorship of the press. I am opposed to it because I believe it to be un-American, unrepublican, and in this case certainly uncalled for.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, this is a case, not at all uncommon, in which every man who undertakes to oppose this bill thinks it necessary to express his determination to fight all lottery schemes whenever he gets the chance. But here is a case in which every man who is opposed to lotteries, opposed to gambling, opposed to inducing the people to violate the law, has an opportunity to put himself upon record in favor of a law looking to those ends.

There are a good many gentlemen here who say that they will not vote for this bill because it applies to papers outside of the District as well as in it. There are a good many other gentlemen here who say they will not vote for it because it applies only to papers published in this District. The fact is there are some men entirely too hypercritical about bills coming before this House.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] has read from the opinion of Judge Cooley, summing up what he considers to be a violation of the liberty of the press; and he says it is no violation of the liberty of the press to suppress the publication of those things which are harmful in their character. Now, it is conceded by every man who has addressed the House on this subject, by those who oppose this bill as well as those who favor it, that the lottery schemes of this country are harmful in their character. That they are so considered by the sentiment of the people at large is established by the fact that thirty-five out of the thirty-eight States of this Union have passed laws upon this subject.

Mr. ROGERS. I trust the gentleman will allow me a moment. I know he does not wish to make any statement, either of law or fact, which is not absolutely correct. Therefore, I call his attention to the fact that Judge Cooley, in a sentence immediately following the sentence just referred to, states that the matter must be determined by reference to crimes which were recognized as such by law at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. Now, will the gentleman tell us whether at that time it was any crime to run a lottery?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I was not in existence at that time, and am not acquainted with all the laws which were then in existence. But the fact that lotteries were indulged in by the Father of our Country and other noted people of that day is not sufficient to show that there were not laws then upon the statute-book in opposition to lotteries.

Mr. BLOUNT. There were not any railroads then, either.

Mr. HEMPHILL. No; there were no railroads, no telegraphs, and very few newspapers; and to my mind it is ridiculous to say that crimes which now shock the sentiment of the community and are corrupting the morals of the people can not be dealt with because they were not legislated against a hundred years ago.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I see some gentlemen object to voting for this bill because it applies only to newspapers published in this city. But they must remember there is a sentiment in this country endeavoring to put down the advertising of these lottery tickets in every State in this Union, and it would be unkind to the people of this country for us to stand back in reference to this matter any longer.

It is important we should dispose of this measure, and therefore I shall demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CRAIN. Why does not the bill include the Territories of the United States?

Mr. HEMPHILL. One reason is because the gentleman who introduced it drew the bill up in reference to the laws of the District of Columbia. The other is because the committee having in charge this bill has nothing to do with the Territories of the United States. If my friend from Texas will introduce a bill and refer it to the Committee on Territories I will help him to secure its passage.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. There is such a bill pending before this Congress.

Mr. CRAIN. Why not incorporate its provisions in the pending bill?

Mr. HEMPHILL. It will come in at the proper time.

Mr. CRAIN. I move this bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as there seems to be a doubt about its intendment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move to lay the motion to refer upon the table.

Mr. CRAIN. I demand the yeas and nays on my motion.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. ROGERS. Is not the vote on the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; the bill has been ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and the question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CRAIN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 64.

So the yeas and nays were ordered, one-fifth of those present voting in the affirmative.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 119, nays 113, not voting 91; as follows:

VESSELS IN DISTRESS IN CANADIAN WATERS.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred a resolution asking information in regard to American wrecking vessels in Canadian waters, report the same back with the recommendation that it be adopted.

The resolution and papers referred to the committee are as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 3, 1888.

Whereas it is alleged that the Canadian authorities for years have refused and now refuse to allow American wrecking vessels and machinery to assist American vessels while in distress in Canadian canals and waters; and it is alleged further that Canadian wrecking vessels and machinery have been and now are allowed to come into American waters and assist any vessels there in distress—some of the facts in regard to these allegations will appear by the attached letters, which are made a part hereof:

"OSWEGO, N. Y., February 1, 1888.

"DEAR SIR: On or about the 30th day of September, 1881, I, being controlling owner of steam-barge Thompson Kingsford, was notified that she was ashore at Wellington, Ontario, and immediate assistance was needed. I informed our wrecker, Mr. Allen, who expressed himself ready to start at once provided the Canadian authorities would give him permission to work in their waters. I therefore applied by wire to the minister of marine at Ottawa, and after a long delay was informed that the assistance needed could be procured at Kingston, and the application was denied. I thought the treatment was severe, especially as my tugs were all ready to go, and we could have got the barge out of danger in twenty-four hours. As it was, during the delay, or rather by the delay in waiting for an answer, she was subjected to a severe gale, causing great damage and eventually costing us about $1,200 more than it would if we could have done the work ourselves.

"Again, on or about the 19th day of August, 1882, the same barge was sunk in the bay of Quinte by collision, and I again made application to go to her relief with my own appliances, and was again refused.

"To sum the matter up, the Canadian government have persistently refused to allow us to use our tugs or wrecking appliances in their waters under any and all circumstances.

"JOHN K. POST.

"Hon. N. W. NUTTING,
"Washington, D. C., House of Representatives."

"OSWEGO, N. Y., February 1, 1888.

"DEAR SIR: At the suggestion of Mr. Allen, I make the following statement: On or about the 3d day of November, 1882, the schooner Camanche, of which I was controlling owner, was sunk in the Welland Canal, near Port Colborne. Although Buffalo was but 20 miles, and assistance could have been procured in six hours, we were told that American assistance would not be permitted, although at that moment the steam-pumps were loaded and ready to come. The result was we had to wait for assistance from Amherstburg, nearly 300 miles distant, and causing a delay of three days. Owing to the delay, the vessel's cargo swelled and sprung her entire deck up, and almost ruined the vessel.

"The treatment by the Canadians in this case was very unfair, and not at all as we treat them.

"ALBERT QUONCE.

"Hon. N. W. NUTTING, Washington, D. C."

Therefore,

Resolved, That the Treasury Department of the United States is hereby requested, if not inconsistent with the public good, to transmit to this House with all convenient speed any and all correspondence, orders, and information in its custody in regard to the refusal of the Canadian authorities to allow American wrecking vessels and machinery to assist American vessels while in distress in Canadian waters, and as to whether Canadian wrecking vessels and machinery have been and are permitted to operate in American waters.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I ask the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. OATES. Is this resolution now before the House for consideration?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a privileged resolution.

Mr. OATES. From what committee?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CHIPMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 2578) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near the city of Lexington, Mo.;

A bill (S. 1754) for the relief of Henry H. Marmaduke, of Missouri; and

A bill (S. 1022) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands in Kansas.

SERVICE OF LEGAL PROCESS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 3290) to amend section 685 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia and put it upon its passage.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section numbered 685 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 685. The summons shall be served like other writs of summons at least seven days before the appearance of the party complained of; but in case such party has left the District of Columbia, or can not be found, said summons may be served by delivering a written or printed, or partly written and partly printed, copy thereof to the tenant, or leaving the same with some person above the age of twelve years residing on or in possession of the premises; and in case no one is in actual possession of said premises or residing thereon, then by posting a copy of said summons on the premises where it may be conveniently read."

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

After the word "tenant," in the eleventh line, insert the words "or to the agent or attorney of the defendant, if he be known."

Also in the twelfth line, after the word "person," insert the words "of suitable discretion."

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would like to say that this bill simply proposes to provide the means for summoning defendants who have absented themselves from the District. It is a mere matter of conforming the law upon this subject to the general laws prevailing elsewhere.

If there be no desire to debate the bill, I ask the previous question upon the amendments and the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the amendments were agreed to, the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POOLS ON RACES, ETC.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now call up the bill (H. R. 4964) to prevent any person or persons in the cities of Washington and Georgetown from making books and pools on the result of trotting or running races, or boat races.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons, or association of persons, in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, to bet, gamble, or make books and pools on the result of any trotting race or running race of horses, or boat race, or race of any kind, or on any election or contest of any kind.

SEC. 2. That any person or persons, or association of persons, violating the provisions of this act shall be fined not exceeding $500 nor less than $100, or be imprisoned not more than ninety nor less than thirty days, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

In section 2, line 3, strike out the words "one hundred dollars" and insert "twenty-five dollars," and in the fourth line strike out the words "nor less than thirty."

Mr. COMPTON. I wish to offer a further amendment to the bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask the previous question upon the amendments proposed by the committee, after which the gentleman may offer his amendment.

Mr. BIGGS. I would like to have these amendments again read. I ask for information, as I am not satisfied with the bill altogether.

The amendments were again reported.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the amendments of the committee were agreed to.

Mr. COMPTON. I desire to add an amendment at the end of the first section in these words:

Or games of base ball.

So as to prohibit pool-selling upon these games as well as upon the other points covered by the bill.

Mr. BREWER. The section as it stands covers this question which my friend from Maryland seeks to raise now. It uses the words:

Or contest of any kind.

Therefore the amendment is entirely useless.

Mr. COMPTON. I offer that amendment, and think it should be appended to the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now demand the previous question upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS ROCK CREEK.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 1184) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek, at the Woodley Lane road, in the District of Columbia. The bill makes an appropriation, but I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RICHARDSON). The Chair is informed the bill is on the House Calendar. It will be considered in the House unless the point is made.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Let the substitute be read.

The following substitute, reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, was read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert as follows:

That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed across Rock Creek, on the Woodley Lane road, in the District of Columbia, a substantial stone or iron bridge, with necessary approaches; and the sum of $35,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which said sum shall be available immediately upon the passage of this act, for the construction of said bridge and approaches, and for such investigation and surveys and such contingencies as the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall deem necessary, the same to be maintained as a free bridge for travel.

SEC. 2. That the sum which shall be expended under the provisions of this act shall be treated and regarded as part of the general expenses of the District of Columbia, and the United States shall be credited with the amount which it may pay under this act upon the 50 per centum of the expenses of the District of Columbia, as provided in the act of June 11, 1878, entitled "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia."

SEC. 3. That the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall, as soon as practicable, cause a survey of said creek to be made to determine the length, width, and height of said bridge and the approaches thereto, and shall cause plans and specifications to be prepared for such bridge and such approaches; and when the same are completed said board shall advertise for sealed proposals for the construction of such bridge and such approaches, which advertisement shall be inserted for at least one week in one or more daily papers in such cities as the said board of commissioners shall designate, and shall let such contract to the lowest responsible bidder, as provided by law: Provided, That the aggregate cost for the construction of such bridge and the approaches thereto, including the incidental expenses connected therewith, shall not exceed the amount herein appropriated.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If there is no information or explanation desired, I will move the previous question.

Mr. ADAMS. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. BREWER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1184) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek at the so-called Woodley Lane road, in the District of Columbia, respectfully report:

That they have had the same under consideration and have come to the conclusion that such bridge is necessary, and that the same should be constructed. They therefore report said bill back to the House, with certain amendments in the nature of a substitute, and recommend that the amendments be concurred in, and that the bill when so amended do pass.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is that the whole of the report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The whole of the report has been read.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then, will the gentleman in charge of the bill give the House some verbal explanation to show what is the necessity why a bridge should be constructed at that point, and why it will be more useful there than at other points? I would like also to hear something about the probable increase of the value of property in that neighborhood by reason of the construction of this bridge.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will answer the gentleman's questions. Does he desire to submit any further question?

Mr. TAULBEE. Not until those are answered.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will state that this bill was introduced amongst the first of the bills which were presented for our consideration; that it went in its regular course to the committee, and was reported upon favorably by a subcommittee. Subsequently, after the subcommittee had given such information as was desired, further action by the committee was postponed until an examination of the premises should satisfy individual members of the committee as to the propriety of making this expenditure.

All the members of the committee except one went to this place and saw it for themselves. Every one of them that saw it came back satisfied that this was a necessary and proper expenditure of the public money. Another reason that satisfied them was that this is the only bridge from P street up to a place called Klingle's Ford, a distance of 3 or 4 miles, and the committee thought it was the proper place to have a suitable bridge for the people who wanted to go out of the city and those who wanted to come in. Those are some of the reasons which influenced the committee.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am not well acquainted with the geography of that portion of the District, but I wish to inquire further whether this proposed bridge is on the line of the proposed extension of Massachusetts avenue.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It is not.

Mr. TAULBEE. How far from it?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I suppose about a mile. It is on an entirely different road which has nothing to do with Massachusetts avenue.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Does this bill appropriate money for the construction of the bridge?

Mr. HEMPHILL. It does.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. How much?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Thirty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Has any ground been donated for it?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir. The people out there who have property have donated, according to the statement furnished by the city department, grounds about the bridge and leading to it, valued at $189,000, for public streets.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Who are to be accommodated by this bridge?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Of course everybody who lives out on that side of the city will be accommodated by it, and the people who live on the other side of the creek will be accommodated by it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Are not the speculators more likely to be accommodated by it than anybody else?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will answer the gentleman in this way, that when the matter came up before the committee and we heard some reports of that kind—that the speculators were to be benefited by it—before the committee acted upon it we postponed, as I have said, its consideration until the members could go to the spot and make a personal investigation; and those who went, and they were all the members of the committee except one, were satisfied that it was a proper and necessary expenditure for the public good.

Now, whether any speculators are going to make money out of it is a matter which depends very much on the future. I suppose these gentlemen my friend from Iowa alludes to are the people who live along the route and others interested in the improvements of that part of the city; and, as I have said, they give to the city for public streets and for improvements along the avenues and streets in that neighborhood property which is estimated to be worth $189,000. In addition to that these same gentlemen, or some others, I do not myself personally know who they are, have spent there altogether $208,000 in grading streets which they have donated to the public, and so far as I am concerned, my judgment is that this is a proper expenditure; and if these gentlemen are willing to spend $400,000 towards the improvement of that portion of the city, I think the Government can afford to give them $35,000 for the construction of the bridge, even if other people are not accommodated by it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I desire to ask one other question. Are there any petitions for the passage of this bill?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes; there is a petition by everybody, I believe, along the route who would be immediately interested in the matter of the streets in that part of the city. And in addition to that there is a petition signed by a large number of people who live out in the adjoining territory included in the District of Columbia, but not embraced within the city limits, who would not be in any way affected or influenced by this except as a matter of convenience, as they would be affected by any improvement which contributes to the general welfare.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. One question further.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will answer any questions the gentleman may ask.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Are those petitions signed by parties living in that vicinity—people who have homes there?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Some of them are. These last that I have mentioned live out in Montgomery County, Maryland. They are people who have a good deal of business with the city of Washington, who have to visit the markets and other places in the city. Of course they are interested in getting in and out easily, and there is no proper road for them to travel to and fro between their homes and the city unless they go down to the P street bridge (which my friend will understand is the bridge which the Metropolitan Railroad crosses on its way to Georgetown), or go up to another place some 3 or 4 miles distant, where also there is a bridge. It is proper to state that there is an ordinary wooden bridge now at the place where it is proposed to build this, but I do not think that any gentleman who examines it will say that it is a proper structure for any civilized community where people have to pass to and fro.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Is this bill recommended unanimously by the committee?

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is no minority report. My understanding is that there is one member of the committee who did not assent to the recommendation. He reserved the right to dissent.

Mr. BREWER. But that gentleman did not go out to make an examination of the locality?

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, he did not go.

Mr. WILKINS. I wish to ask a question for information. Is this what is known as the Woodley Lane bridge?

Mr. HEMPHILL. It is.

Mr. WILKINS. I understood the gentleman from South Carolina to say that it was the bridge for the extension of Massachusetts avenue.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, no. It is a different thing entirely. It has nothing to do with the extension of Massachusetts avenue.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Are there any remonstrances against the passage of this bill?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes. There is a remonstrance in the way of a resolution adopted by the citizens' committee. They passed a resolution in which they said that this was a waste of public money, and one of the speakers upon that occasion said there was a "job" in it. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BREWER], the member of our committee who had reported the bill, immediately prepared a letter and sent it to the chairman of the citizens' committee, saying in substance, "If you gentlemen have any objection to urge to this bill, we ask you to come before the committee and present it." They did not come at the time they were invited; they said they were not ready yet. We postponed the matter until this morning, when the gentleman who offered the resolution in the citizens' committee and two or three other gentlemen appeared and made objections to the bill. They objected to such an expenditure of the public money. The gentleman who offered the resolution lives on this side of the city and wants improvements made here, and I asked him the question, "What is really the point in this case? Is it not that the money is being spent in one portion of the city when you think it ought to be spent in another?" He replied, "That is it." It is a question as to where this money shall be spent. That is the sum and substance of the objections when they are boiled down.

Mr. TAULBEE. When I listened to the reading of this bill I suppose I must have been misled with reference to the locality of the proposed bridge, as would be inferred from the question which I asked the gentleman in charge of the bill. From the reading I got the impression that the bridge was proposed to be built in that part of the District of Columbia where it is notorious that almost the entire territory is in the hands of speculators, who are attempting to increase the value of property there in order that they may make their speculations successful; but when it is announced by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] that the persons who live in the vicinity of this proposed bridge and who own the property around there have made such generous and enormous contributions to the city of Washington and the District of Columbia, I feel half-way inclined to withdraw my objection. I would, however, insist, as this is perhaps the most favorable opportunity I shall have, that the committee having these District matters in charge should take into consideration the necessities of that portion of the city lying within the very shadow of this Capitol. Doubtless it is known to members of this House that within four or five squares of the national Capitol itself the streets remain unpaved. Railroad depots are found in the vicinity of this building, and if the expenditure of public money is to be made for the improvement of the city of Washington, I insist that, instead of making streets and building bridges 3 or 4 miles away from the Capitol, some attention ought to be paid to its immediate vicinity.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state to him that the Committee on the District of Columbia does not have control of the expenditure of money for the paving of streets, the laying of sewers, or anything of that kind. That is controlled by the general Committee on Appropriations; and while I concur in the view which the gentleman expresses with respect to public improvements, I will state to the gentleman that the Committee on the District of Columbia has shown all proper attention to the needs of this eastern portion of the city, which may have been somewhat neglected in the past. Last year we made an appropriation of more than $100,000 to build a bridge across the Eastern Branch for the benefit of the people in this portion of the city and of those who live on the other side of the river. There is also pending a proposition to charter a railroad for the benefit of the people in that section. We have endeavored, as far as possible, to give these people a fair showing and to provide better means of travel and traffic between the outlying country and the city.

Mr. TAULBEE. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on the District of Columbia does not have the appropriation of money for the improvement of the streets; but, if I understand the rules of this House, I think that committee does have such charge and such authority as would enable it to lay proper restrictions upon the commissioners or the District, who exercise the prerogative of distributing the money and designating the streets that are to be improved.

Mr. HEMPHILL. No; the appropriation bill provides for that.

Mr. TAULBEE. If any man will examine the appropriation bill he will find that the commissioners have almost carte-blanche for the designation of the streets that are to be improved.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's view and mine are not so very divergent after all, and if he will introduce a proper bill on this subject our committee will give it full and fair consideration, and will be very glad to give him a hearing.

Mr. TAULBEE. I have not felt called upon to introduce bills on this subject, because my assignments on the committees of this House have directed my attention and labors in a different direction, and I would not assume to know so much about these District matters as I should hope to know if I were a member of the gentleman's committee. I will vote with that committee. I have been with the gentleman all along; I have gone with him through Austerlitz to Waterloo, and I expect to be with him to the end, but I want these questions answered, because I think they are pertinent.

And I want to say right here that I look with great suspicion upon a measure bearing the features that this bill bears, especially if this proposed improvement is located in that part of the District where there have been such strenuous efforts recently to "boom" real estate. But with the statement made by the gentleman from South Carolina as to these enormous contributions, which, I dare say, are in money or real estate——

Mr. HEMPHILL. Both.

Mr. TAULBEE. For the improvement of that part of the city, I think we ought as members to do something in that direction. But before coming to a fixed and definite conclusion on that matter, I would like to ask what part of these contributions has been made in money and what part by the donation of streets along the line of which the donors own real estate.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will state to the gentleman that the money amounted to $208,559.13.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That is what they spent on their property.

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, it is what they spent upon the streets themselves in preparing for this improvement.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It is what was spent upon their property on both sides of the proposed line.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, I do not know about that.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I do.

Mr. TAULBEE. I want to say that if the "contributions" referred to by the gentleman from South Carolina consist of improvements that have been going on upon the property of these "syndicates," grading the streets and laying off their property in town lots; if that is what the gentleman means by "contributions," it bears quite a different complexion from what I had understood. I had supposed these contributions were expended upon streets of the city where people live. I could infer nothing else from the answers which the gentleman gave to questions of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON]. If the nature of these contributions has been what is now stated, I do not think the contributions have been very direct.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would like to say——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RICHARDSON). The Chair has recognized the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not think I have yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understood.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I stated to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] that I still claimed the floor.

Mr. TAULBEE. I did not understand that I occupied the floor in my own right, but only by the courtesy of the gentleman.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman from West Virginia desires to speak, I will yield to him. How much time does he desire?

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Not over five minutes.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I yield to the gentlma n.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I have not risen to oppose this bill, because I do not know enough about the facts connected with this proposed improvement to justify me in arguing against it upon this floor. So far as my ignorance of the matter is concerned I can only say that having been intimately connected during the last two Congresses with the business matters of the District of Columbia, and having during that time, as I supposed, had brought to my attention almost all the improvements that were really called for by any public necessity, I did not until this Congress, and until the report of this committee, hear anything about the project now before the House.

Without any personal knowledge, however, as to the necessity for the construction of this bridge, I do know this one fact, that the citizens' committee of one hundred, a representative committee organized by the people of this District to represent and care for the interests of all sections of the District, an organization which is about the only advisory body in the District from which we can get any information as to the views and wishes of the people who pay the taxes—I do know the fact that this committee has unanimously adopted a resolution opposing the present construction of this bridge. That committee, I am also informed, desires further time in which to be heard before the Committee on the District of Columbia in opposition to this bridge. I am also informed that the chairman of the subcommittee on the District, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BREWER], I believe, has received from Mr. Fendall, the chairman of the citizens' committee of one hundred, a letter expressing his opposition to the construction of the bridge at the present time.

Now, in view of all these facts; in view of the fact which has also been stated by one or two gentlemen here, that this bridge is to be located in a portion of the District not yet thickly settled, where there can be no pressing demand for the immediate building of the bridge because of any considerable population; in view of the fact that this organized body of citizens has unanimously opposed it at the present time, I have simply risen to suggest to my friend from South Carolina and to the gentlemen of his committee, in whose judgment I have great confidence, so that I would ordinarily follow them blindly, that this matter be allowed to go over until the next District of Columbia day, in order, first, that the citizens' committee of one hundred may have full opportunity to present before the Committee on the District of Columbia the grounds of their opposition to this measure, and in order also that members like myself may have opportunity meanwhile to form an independent judgment as to the necessity of the present construction of this bridge.

Mr. TAULBEE. And at least find out where it is.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I think the committee has given these gentlemen who are opposed to this measure every opportunity to be heard which they can reasonably ask. But, of course, this committee has had other things to do besides listening to the people of the District of Columbia. It is one of the peculiarities of the people here, and it may be they are not singular in this respect, and there are other people who have the same peculiarity, but there is not a proposition which has been presented to us to expend money in any part of this District but others come to the committee and oppose it, and insist the money should be spent, not where the committee propose, but in some other direction. I think that is the result of the experience of members very generally who have served upon this Committee on the District of Columbia.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that we gave this matter our personal examination, and came to the conclusion it was a proper measure. The commissioners of the District are of the same opinion. We have received petitions from persons who are interested and persons who are not interested in the property of the District. So far as we have been able to discover, there is no objection stated to the proposition, except on the part of people who live in other parts of the District and who think the money should be spent in their section. Perhaps that is natural, although it is necessarily selfish.

I wish now to yield some time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BREWER] who submitted this report from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. TAULBEE. Before the gentleman takes his seat I wish to ask him a question—whether this committee of one hundred represented the northwest part of this city as well as other portions of the District?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will only say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not know where these gentlemen came from, but I have understood that they came from every portion of the District. At the meeting to which I have already made reference, sixty out of the one hundred were present, and they acted upon the resolution without any discussion, and without reference to any committee for the purpose of investigating the matter and without any report upon it. According to the newspaper account of the proceedings of the meeting it was put through without any report. We know how things of that sort are done, as legislation refquently goes through the House without anybody in particular being responsible for it. After that meeting we heard all who had taken part in opposition to this measure, and every man who was opposed to it alleged as the only ground for his opposition, that he wished the money might be expended somewhere else than where the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the commissioners of the District, thought it should be expended.

Mr. TAULBEE. Do the commissioners recommend the passage of this bill?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, they do recommend this bill. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BREWER].

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Speaker, being a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and having been instructed by that committee to report this bill favorably to the House, I feel it to be incumbent upon me to present my reason for favoring its passage.

I am somewhat surprised at the remark made by the honorable gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON], who says he was a member of this committee, I think at the last session of Congress, and that among the various improvements suggested in this District he never heard this one proposed. If that is so, it only shows his inattention to the recommendations contained in the report of the commissioners of the District.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I did not say that I was a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia at the last session, but that I was a member of the Committee on Appropriations, having charge of the District matters.

Mr. BREWER. I understood the gentleman to say that he was a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia at the last session.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. No; not at the last session, but I was a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia in the Forty-eighth Congress.

Mr. BREWER. Now, in the report of the commissioners of the District for 1886, they specially recommended the construction of this bridge, and they repeated that recommendation in their last annual report.

I am somewhat surprised gentlemen are so willing and so anxious to criticise the judgment as well as the work of the District Committee. Some of us know with what trial, with what labor, with what perseverance the honorable Speaker of this House labored four long weeks to find amongst the members of this House of Representatives thirteen gentlemen to whom could be intrusted the affairs of this District; and he succeeded in finding twelve. It was thought, at that time, the great difficulty was to make up the Committee on Ways and Means, but I think the House has generally come to the conclusion it requires no very able body of men to frame a tariff bill if they can do it in secret session. [Laughter.] Everybody knew who was to be at the head of the Committee on Appropriations, and so in due time the honorable Speaker appointed those who were to constitute the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill was presented, I know not by whom, to the Committee on the District of Columbia. It was referred to a subcommittee of which I was a member. We went and inspected the location of this proposed bridge. We made our report to the committee. The whole committee inspected the location of the bridge, and they came to the conclusion that it was right and proper to recommend its construction.

The course of Rock Creek where this bridge is proposed to be constructed is at the bottom of a deep declivity. There are high banks on each side. There is a bridge there now, but it is near the water, and those who travel that road are compelled to go up and down these high embankments. It is one of the leading roads through the northwestern portion of the District leading into the State of Maryland. Every single member of the committee who inspected the location came to the conclusion, immediately almost after inspection, as a business matter, in the interest of the District, and in the interest of the public, it was necessary that it should be constructed farther from the water so as to do away with the steepness of the banks of the creek and make the travel over the bridge easier and more convenient.

Now it is doubtless true, sir, that there are men who own lands out beyond that creek which they have bought and hold with the expectation of improving in value, so that when they are divided into lots and put upon the market they will make money by the improvement. That may be all very true; and doubtless these lands will be increased in value by this proposed bridge.

But, in coming to the conclusion the committee did, we regarded it as wholly unnecessary and irrelevant to consider what these men might have done heretofore or what will be the results upon their property in the future. We were concerned only with the question of what was the public interest. It is, as all admit, desirable for the public interest and convenience that this bridge shall be constructed, and that consideration was what influenced the committee.

Now let us see what will be the effect of its construction. Are we to be prevented from making improvements of a public character in the District of Columbia because perchance it might enhance the value of some man's property who bought it for speculative purposes in times gone by, and lose sight of the fact that such needed improvement is demanded by the public necessities? Our attention has been called to the report or resolutions of the committee of citizens, the committee of one hundred, as it is called, of this District.

Ten years ago, when I was here in this House, we were asked to pass an appropriation bill for the purpose of constructing a public building in the District of Columbia, and I apprehend that since that time during every Congress the same question has been under consideration in the House. Why has that bill not been passed? Everybody knows that it was necessary; but it was not passed for the simple reason that the citizens' committee of one hundred could not agree upon a site; the District people themselves were divided on the question, and hence the appropriation was never made. Why? Because the moment you talked of putting up this building every man wanted it next to his own door for the benefit of his private property; and it is so in every improvement we attempt to appropriate money for at this time, and will be so, I am satisfied gentlemen will find, during the remainder of this session of Congress. But, Mr. Speaker, the committee could not stop to consider these things. Shall we say that we are not going to construct a bridge or open a street because at the end of the street or on the other side of the bridge somebody, a syndicate, if you please, has got hold of some of the land and is going to cut it up and sell it out in town lots, and the public expenditure which Congress makes is going to enhance its value? If we adopt that rule we shall make no improvements this year or hereafter.

I have had some experience in municipal affairs. I know that no improvement ever was made in one direction that there were not objections in the other. As a business enterprise, supposing that there be a syndicate holding lands on the other side of Rock Creek to-day, it is now taxed as country property, at a rate one-third or more less than city property; but if this bridge is built the assessed value of the property beyond the creek will be enhanced, or rather the rate will be increased to such an extent that the city will derive more than double as much revenue from taxes as at present. Suppose there is such a tract of land there and it is cut up into lots and sold out and buildings are constructed upon these lots, the tax rule is then applied there that is applied here in the city, and, of course, the assessment and the rate of taxation will be raised accordingly. I think, therefore, as a business man, examining this question with that end in view, that by the construction of this bridge the increased value of property on the other side of Rock Creek, the enhanced value when we come to assess the property for purposes of taxation, will be so great that it will more than pay the cost of the construction of the bridge inside of three years.

I ask consent to append to my remarks some letters bearing upon this subject.

There was no objection.

The letters are as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington, D. C., February 9, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: I see by the morning papers of yesterday that at a meeting of the citizens' committee of which you were chairman, held on the evening previous, among other things discussed and considered was that of the proposed bridge over Rock Creek, on the Woodley Lane road, so called, and that at such meeting resolutions were passed in opposition to the construction of such bridge. It was stated, according to the reported proceedings in the press, that there was a "job of the first water" connected with such proposed bridge matter. The bill in question for such bridge having, under the direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, been favorably reported to the House by myself, I should deem it a very great favor if you or your committee or any other citizen in the District of Columbia would communicate to the chairman of said committee or myself personally any information which you or they may possess tending in any manner to show that there is a "job" of any kind connected with the proposed construction of the bridge in question. Before said bill was reported to the House the location of the proposed bridge was visited and carefully inspected by nearly every member of the committee on District affairs, and the construction of such bridge was deemed necessary and in the interest of the public generally. There will be a meeting of the Committee on the District of Columbia to-morrow, Friday, at 11 o'clock, and I will guaranty that any member of your committee shall be heard touching the matter in question, if the same shall be desired.

I have the honor of remaining, very truly, yours,

M. S. BREWER, Member of District Committee.

REGINALD FENDALL, Esq.,
Chairman Citizens' Committee, Washington, D. C.

CITIZENS' REPRESENTATIVE COMMITTEE OF ONE HUNDRED,
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C., February 10, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Your esteemed favor of yesterday, having reference to the proposed construction of a new bridge over Rock Creek, on the Woodley Lane road, and the action of the citizens' committee of one hundred, was received last night.

In reply I have to state that I was called away from the meeting of the committee before the close of its session on Tuesday night, and the proceedings referred to by you took place in my absence.

It is impossible to communicate with the citizens' committee in time to arrange for a hearing before your committee this morning.

The citizens' committee will hold its next meeting on Tuesday evening, the 14th instant, when I will present your communication. I am sure they will be pleased to accept your courteous invitation, and, if it is agreeable to your committee, make arrangements to appear before them on Friday, the 17th instant.

I will thank you to inform me if this suggestion meets with your approval.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

REGINALD FENDALL,
President Citizens' Representative Committee of One Hundred.

Hon. MARK S. BREWER,
Member of District Committee, House of Representatives.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 10, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of the above date is just received, and the same has been considered by the whole committee. I am directed by the committee to inform you that the subcommittee which has the subject-matter in charge will meet on Monday morning next, at half past 10 o'clock, at the rooms of the Committee on the District of Columbia, for the purpose of hearing any and all persons who may desire to be heard in opposition to the construction of the proposed bridge over Rock Creek. We beg that you will notify Mr. Dodge and such other persons as may feel an interest in the subject-matter. It is not convenient for the committee to postpone the consideration of the matter to a later day.

I am very truly yours,

M. S. BREWER, of District Committee.

REGINALD FENDALL, Esq.

CITIZENS' REPRESENTATIVE COMMITTEE OF ONE HUNDRED,
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C., February 11, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of yesterday, informing me that your subcommittee will meet on Monday next at 10.30 o'clock, and requesting me to notify Mr. Dodge and such others as may feel an interest in the pending bill for the construction of a bridge over Rock Creek on Woodley Lane road.

The citizens' representative committee of one hundred is composed of delegates chosen by local citizens' associations, which cover the entire District of Columbia. It was intended (and is) to be thoroughly representative and impartial in its constitution.

One of the rules of the committee forbids any of its officers or members to appear before any committee of Congress, except when specially authorized and directed to do so by order of the whole committee. I have therefore to regret that I am unable to comply with your request to have the committee officially represented before you on Monday next, as the committee of one hundred has given no such authority in this case, and it is impossible for our committee to hold a meeting before Tuesday evening next.

I find from the record that the preamble and resolution having reference to an appropriation for the construction of said bridge was offered by a delegate from the northwest section of the city, was quite fully debated, and then passed without a dissenting voice.

It must therefore stand as an expression of the deliberate judgment of the committee, unless reconsidered and modified by that body.

As this matter has attracted some public attention, I shall feel it to be my duty on Tuesday next to present your correspondence to the committee of one hundred, with the recommendation that they take steps to have a report prepared which shall fully set forth the reasons for their action in the premises.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

REGINALD FENDALL,
President Citizens' Representative Committee of One Hundred.

Hon. MARK S. BREWER,
House of Representatives.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL].

Mr. ROWELL. This improvement, in the judgment of the members of the committee who examined it, is one which is imperatively demanded. This is one of the improvements recommended in 1886 and again recommended this year.

It probably will benefit the section of country beyond where it is to be located. If it did not confer some benfit it is an improvement that ought not to be made. If you spend the public money where nobody will be benefited by the expenditure you spend the public money uselessly.

Now, between the P street bridge and Klingle's Ford this is the only crossing of Rock Creek. It shortens the distance for people coming in from the Maryland side, that portion of the country adjacent to the city, some 2 miles. If you give them a decent road and a decent crossing, which is demanded by every consideration of economy, they gain this advantage. It is also demanded by considerations of the improvement of public property; and I do not hesitate to declare that the construction of this bridge will add to the taxable value of property beyond that point sufficient to pay back into the Treasury the whole cost of it within a very few years.

It is simply a question of getting the grade of a road that people can travel over.

Another consideration is that the people beyond it themselves are now demanding it. It is said that a citizens' committee resolved a few nights ago against it. Now, it is true that the president of the meeting had left, and in violation of the rules of the committee a motion was made by a certain gentleman to oppose this bridge, and by another gentleman a single remark was made upon the subject in opposition to it. These two gentlemen were before the subcommittee to-day and had ample opportunity to explain what they meant. They simply meant that if we did not have money enough on hand to build school-houses and improve the streets inside of the city, therefore we ought not to spend money outside.

Another member of the citizens' committee, an influential member, living in East Washington, came before the subcommittee and denounced the action of the citizens' committee as pulling back in the traces, as opposed to public improvements, and declared if that was to be the action of the citizens' committee he would wash his hands of it and withdraw. That is the situation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEMPHILL. Unless some further discussion is desired, I will now call for the previous question.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I should like to make a few observations.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa to take the floor in his own right.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Am I entitled to take the floor in my own right?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] is entitled to the remainder of his time.

Mr. HEMPHILL. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has twenty minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. HEMPHILL. How much time does the gentleman from Iowa desire?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. About eight or ten minutes.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I yield the gentleman from Iowa eight minutes.

Mr. MCADOO. Before the gentleman from Iowa proceeds I wish to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question. Is it proposed to build a railroad to this bridge?

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is a railroad which will cross over the bridge on its return trip, if built.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I do not rise to oppose the bill on its merits. Still I am not prepared to vote for it; and if driven to vote upon it now I will oppose its passage by any method that is legitimate. I think the request of the gentleman from West Virginia should be complied with to give us till next District day an opportunity to investigate and look into this question.

I know enough through my relations with the District by being a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having charge of District appropriations—I know enough in that way about real-estate jobs in that part of the city to make me feel no hesitation in saying that I am full of the idea that there is a great deal more in this than has yet been developed.

I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] that improvements should be made in the District of Columbia. There is needed to-day the expenditure of millions of dollars by way of improvements, and I have not been backward, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, in giving the District needed money. But I have stood here on this floor demanding that the substantial interests now planted in this city and District shall first be considered before Congress becomes the instrument of a real-estate ring. There may be no such ring back of this movement. I make no charge of that kind now. But I unite with my friend from West Virginia in asking for reasonable time to give the citizens and to give this House an opportunity to thoroughly investigate this question.

There are large tracts of country outside of the boundary that need money—very much money. The District Commissioners have come before us in this Congress asking for more money for improvements than they have ever asked for before; improvements in rich, thickly populated parts of the city and District outside of the city. Before, then, reaching out towards this region which has been marked, tracked and retracked by the keen eye of the speculator, I think this House should be in possession of full knowledge of the facts instead of voting through this bill at this time.

Those of us who are not prepared to-day to vote for this measure because we know something of these operations, only ask for time to give the question a full and fair investigation, and that the people shall be fully and fairly heard. We ask that the consideration of the bill shall be deferred for only a month, until another District day, when you will have a whole day to control it. Why should this bill be driven through now by whip and spur simply because a few interrogation points have arisen in regard to it? The light can do no harm, if this be something that can stand the light. I hope it may be of that character. But until satisfied it is so, I for one can not give approval to the bill. I have great fears in regard to its purposes, and I am absolutely clear that those $35,000 can be planted to better advantage in other parts of the city and District than in putting a bridge across Rock Creek. That is all I desire to say at this time.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think it is unfair to the committee——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman from South Carolina permit me just another word?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I do not want the gentleman from South Carolina, or any member of this committee, to think I impugn their motives or reflect on them in any way. But, like the gentleman himself, and like his colleagues, I have been, without my own desire, thrown into the investigation of these District matters; have been brought in contact with them; have been taken out in carriages to these vicinities, and have seen that region of country; and it is because of my knowledge of it that I seek to throw this warning before the House in conjunction with the gentleman from West Virginia, who was chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations in regard to the District bill in the last Congress; and I do not want the gentleman now to think that I am casting any reflection on him. I simply make a request that seems to me a reasonable one, when I ask him to let the bill stand over till next District day, when we will have had time to investigate it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] said he did not know why this should be driven through under whip and spur. I would like to know who is trying to drive it through under whip and spur? It was among the first of the bills introduced in the House, and gentlemen have had from the date of its introduction up to the 13th of February to examine and consider it. The bill was reported by a subcommittee, and a week was allowed for the general committee to examine the subject and the premises if they saw fit. They made their investigation and made their report, and then, after that, we gave the citizens' committee of one hundred a full hearing this morning, and I assert here that the representative of that committee, who made the principal speech, stated himself that the real question was whether the money should be spent in this portion of the city or somewhere else.

Now, it is very unfair to our committee and to every man who desires to support this bill to say that we are attempting to put it through under whip and spur. So far as I am concerned the bill comes up in the regular way; it comes up after three or four other bills have been considered, when it might have been brought up the first bill to-day if we had seen fit. It is here like any other bill upon this Calendar, and the question is whether or no the House will stand by what their committee have reported unanimously, except a reservation by one of the members of the right to object if he should see fit, and that member, by the way, is not present to-day. It is for the House to determine whether they will reject a measure which has been reported almost unanimously by the District Committee, which has received the recommendation of the District commissioners, and against which no valid objection has been urged.

As to the suggestion that this bridge will benefit somebody, that is true. The Aqueduct bridge, for which we appropriated $125,000, will benefit somebody. So will every other public improvement that is made. The question here is simply whether the policy shall be carried out of providing some convenient means of communication between the city and the surrounding country. So far as I am concerned I have no hesitation in saying that this is a proper and legitimate expenditure of public money, and that is the sentiment of the committee. It is for the House to determine whether they will authorize the expenditure now or will postpone it until another time. So far as I am concerned they have it in their own hands.

Mr. MCADOO. A few minutes ago I called the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] to the fact that it was contemplated to build a railroad which would cross this proposed bridge.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. McADOO. Will the gentleman kindly inform the House what arrangements will be made with the railroad company for the use of the bridge? Will they be required to pay for it, and under whose supervision and control will they be allowed to use the bridge?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Under the charter as proposed this railroad will be taxed 4 per cent. upon its gross earnings toward meeting its share of the expenses of the District; and in addition to that there is a provision that under no circumstances shall their dividends exceed 10 per cent., and if they do, then the commissioners are to have the right to reduce the rate of fare.

Mr. McADOO. Under what law will the road be authorized to cross the bridge?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Under the charter.

Mr. McADOO. So you get the bridge before the railroad?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, sir, it is not we that get it. We have nothing to do with it, and I think it is very unfair to insinuate that the committee has any interest in this matter.

Mr. McADOO. I do not for one moment make such an insinuation. I have the highest respect for the committee and for its chairman.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I have no interest in it whatever, and the House can kick out both the bridge and the railroad bills so far as I am personally concerned; but it is a very strange thing that people who live here can not ask to have a railroad built or a bridge constructed without some gentleman supposing that there is a "ring" or a "job" connected with it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The gentleman knows that there is some ground for those suspicions.

Mr. HEMPHILL. So far as I know there is not.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Then you have not watched District affairs very closely.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, I have watched them with a good deal of care for two years past. I say, of course, that if this bridge is built somebody will undoubtedly make some money out of it, and so if any stone is laid anywhere somebody is quite certain to profit by it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I think there is no body of men anywhere who are so much pressed and pursued under plausible pretexts to get legislation in the interest of speculators as the members of this House. Of course it is never urged on that plea.

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is no doubt that there are a good many people in this country who want to have the public money expended for their benefit, and, the committee of one hundred being composed of people of this District, it is fair to suppose that the members of that committee are influenced by substantially the same motives that influence the people who are outside of that body. They want money spent in the eastern portion of the city. They complain that in the past they have not had a fair share of the public money that has been expended, and perhaps they have not; but that is no reason why a measure of public necessity should be slighted or rejected.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Admitting that this proposed bridge is a good thing and a public benefit, did the committee consider the question whether the money is as much needed for that as it is for other purposes in other parts of the city? Has that comparative investigation been made?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, sir, we heard arguments by gentlemen who represented the different conflicting views, and we came to the conclusion that this was a proper thing to ask the House to do. As I believe the House is ready to vote, I call for the previous question.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit just one question more?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Since the Committee on the District of Columbia has only been able to finish its investigations this morning, and the bill is sought to be passed to-day, can the gentleman blame members for desiring a little more time to look at it?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not want gentlemen to understand that I blame them. I am simply here to put through the business of the House. If members think they ought to have more time, of course they are entirely at liberty to vote that way. My only concern is to get through the public business. I call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Does the Chair understand that I asked the previous question on the bill and pending amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina calls for the previous question on agreeing to the amendment, and on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is a motion to recommit in order at this time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. After the bill has been ordered to be engrossed and read a third time the motion to recommit will be in order.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment proposed by the Committee on the District of Columbia was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time by its title.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I now make my motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina demands the previous question on the passage of the bill, pending which the gentleman from Iowa moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The question being taken on the motion to recommit, there were—ayes 19, noes 99.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

The House again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 17, noes 148.

So the motion to recommit was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the demand for the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, is it now in order to demand the reading of the engrossed bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlemen from Iowa has the right to have the engrossed bill read, if he insists upon it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I do.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I wish to ask for information whether the previous question has not been ordered on the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has been.

Mr. MILLS. That will carry this bill over as unfinished business if the House should now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That carries the bill over as unfinished business.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Is it not too late to demand the reading of the engrossed bill?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It is too late for the gentleman to make that point.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The engrossed bill has been read, I believe.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. No, it has not.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Then it was not read because the reading was not demanded, and it is now too late to call for it, as the question is on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa made the point, the Chair sustained it, and no exception was taken. In the opinion of the Chair, the gentleman from South Carolina is now too late in raising the question.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman from Iowa was too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa made his point in time.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I desire to inquire whether, if we now adjourn, the bill will come up to-morrow or on the next District day?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That question had better be determined hereafter.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, presuming that this bill will come up as unfinished business to-morrow, I merely desire to suggest——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] is occupying the floor, as the Chair understands, upon a parliamentary question.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Of course, I do not desire to obtrude my opinion upon the Chair on a question of order, but I presume this bill will come up to-morrow as unfinished business if we adjourn now. If the gentleman from Iowa chooses to insist upon an adjournment when we are just about to pass a bill which he knows must inevitably pass, and which should pass in justice to the people living in that portion of the District to which it relates——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I rise to a point of order. The lecture of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to me is not a parliamentary inquiry. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question of order of the gentleman from South Carolina is pending. The gentleman from Pennsylvania addressed the Chair, and the Chair desired to hear what the gentleman had to say on that point.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I do not wish to discuss the question of order.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. If the gentleman does not wish to discuss the question of order then he is out of order, and I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa has not the floor to make that motion.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says he does not wish to discuss the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will proceed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. In reply to the gentleman from Iowa, I wish to say that by the vote already taken this House has expressed itself to be decidedly in favor of the passage of the pending bill. The bill is fairly before the House, and it has been fairly argued.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The gentleman from Pennsylvania rises to discuss the question of order, and instead of doing so proceeds to give me a lecture, which, in my judgment, is not in order. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Does not this bill come up as the unfinished business to-morrow?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the present occupant of the chair, the previous question having been ordered, the bill does come up as the unfinished business to-morrow morning, after the reading of the Journal. At that time the Speaker of the House will occupy the chair, and can decide whether it comes up then in order or goes over as the unfinished business of the next District day.

Mr. DINGLEY. As this is District day does not the unfinished business of to-day go over under the rule to the next District day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is under the impression, as the previous question has been ordered, the bill comes up to-morrow after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The Chair does not decide that question, but leaves it to the Speaker to decide.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has been the practice of the House, as gentlemen will remember, when the previous question has been ordered on a bill on Friday, that bill would come up upon the Monday following or the next day, after the reading of the Journal. The Chair holds this bill will come up to-morrow, and, as he has already stated, the Speaker will occupy the chair in the morning and can decide the matter for himself.

Mr. CANNON. I do not understand the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, it has.

Mr. CANNON. On the final passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question has been ordered on the passage of the bill.

Mr. COMPTON. Do I understand the Chair has decided that the gentleman has the right to call for the reading of the engrossed bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has so decided.

Mr. COMPTON. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is too late.

Mr. HEMPHILL. As to the point of order, the Chair ruled against me before I had an opportunity to be heard; but as it has been decided that this bill will come up as the first business after the reading of the Journal to-morrow, I think the proper thing now to do is for the House to adjourn, and I therefore submit that motion.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, was granted leave of absence for to-day and until the return of the Special Committee on Labor Troubles in Pennsylvania.

LAURA L. WALLEN.

On motion of Mr. BLISS, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House, without leaving copies, of the memorial of Laura L. Wallen.

EMPLOYÉS AT PRESIDENTIAL POST-OFFICES.

Mr. FUNSTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7213) to designate, classify, fix the salaries, and regulate the appointment and employment of officers, clerks, and employés at Presidential post-offices; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

THREE-DOLLAR GOLD PIECES.

Mr. BLAND, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7214) to prohibit coinage of three-dollar gold pieces; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

SAULT STE. MARIE VILLAGE.

Mr. CUTCHEON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7215) to confirm certain lands to the village of Sault Ste. Marie; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, namely:

A bill (S. 279) making appropriations for the purchase of ground and the erection thereon in the city of Washington of a building to be used as a hall of records; and

A bill (S. 1938) making an additional appropriation for the relief of the poor of the District of Columbia.

Also, that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 19) for the relief of H. B. Wilson, administrator of the estate of William Tinder, deceased.

Mr. HEMPHILL's motion was agreed to; and then (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution reported from the Committee on Appropriations yesterday.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3290) to amend section 685 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 4964) to prevent any person or persons in the cities of Washington and Georgetown from making books and pools on the result of trotting or running races or boat races.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 1346) to authorize the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 5514) to amend section 4883 of the Revised Statutes to enable the Assistant Secretary of the Interior to sign patents; and

Joint resolution (S. R. 50) appointing Andrew D. White a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of an individual pension bill.

Mr. STEWART. I ask my friend from Minnesota to allow us to pass the bill which was under consideration yesterday evening. It is the unfinished business, and the Senate is ready to take a vote on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota moves——

Mr. STEWART. I hope that I can get a vote this morning on the bill which was pending yesterday. I think all objections to it have been removed.

Mr. DAVIS. Does the Senator think it will lead to any discussion?

Mr. STEWART. I think not. I do not wish to say anything more. The documents have been printed in the RECORD, and I am willing to rest it on the recommendations of the Interior Department.

Mr. PLUMB. Has the order of morning business been concluded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been concluded.

Mr. PLUMB. I suggest that all these bills should go over until the morning business is through.

Mr. STEWART. Certainly; I am willing to give way to morning business.

THE MAIL SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order of morning business is the consideration of resolutions coming over from a previous day. The first resolution in order will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. PLUMB January 30, 1888, as follows:

Whereas there have been for many months serious complaints as to the inefficient character of the mail service, especially in the West and South, and the same continue, indicating that the trouble is of a permanent character:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be instructed to make thorough inquiry into the cause of such inefficient mail service, and report to the Senate their conclusions thereon, with suggestion as to remedy.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words upon this resolution before it is finally acted on by the Senate.

I read the remarks of the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], delivered yesterday, with considerable interest, but I failed to see anything in response to the charge that is made of inefficient mail service. The argument presented, which is undoubtedly the defense of the Department itself to the charge, is simply that the Western people have built so many railroads, and have generally spread themselves over such a large territorial area, that the Department has not been able to keep up with them, coupled with the suggestion that whatever of inefficiency there may be in the service is due to the retention of Republican clerks.

So far as I know, there has been no restraint upon the Department in regard to the removal of those clerks. No Republican, I think, has asked to have them retained; but it looks very much like pleading the baby act for the Postmaster-General to come in and say that he can not carry on the service because of the few Republican clerks remaining under his control, and whom he can dismiss any day. Of the fact that the service is bad, and I was going to say wholly bad, but at all events inexcusably bad, and bad beyond any previous record, there is no doubt.

I have very carefully avoided putting into the RECORD anything that was said of a partisan character in regard to this matter. In sending up to be read slips from newspapers I have carefully eliminated all possible which had any partisan tinge whatever, including only that which contained a bald narration of the facts connected with the mail service in the West. I should like to add a little to the record, and directly in the line of the defense set up by the Senator from Texas. In a particular case, that of a Democratic newspaper in Kansas which made complaint of the service, the Senator from Texas alleges that it was due to a failure on the part of the publisher of the paper to get the required certificate from the postmaster. That is simply an incident in the general complaint; it is not the substance of it at all. I will ask to have read from the same paper, the Abilene Gazette, another specification; it being, as I have said before, a Democratic paper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The article will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Junction City is 25 miles from Abilene. The trains leave here at noon and arrive there at 1 o'clock. The fifty subscribers of the Gazette at Junction City received three days' papers at once, and yet they wonder why we are old before our time. They think it strange that we kick. Call it indiscretion if you want to, but even Job would murmur if he ever had such an experience as this.

The Gazette reaches Junction City, 25 miles from here, by way of Kansas City. Now, this seems strange, but it is a fact. The route agents prefer to do this way, and while it is some little inconvenience to the public and to us, still we will stand it.

After all, the old-fashioned mail system was pretty fair. It had its conveniences, and you knew just when a letter or a paper would reach its destination when it was once mailed.

The Topeka Commonwealth has not been received at Abilene for four days. We will receive a bundle perhaps in a few days. They will come via Denver by fast freight.

Mr. PLUMB. I now ask to have read a letter written by a subscriber to the Atchison Daily Champion, and published in that paper a few days since.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WHITE CITY, KANS., February 6, 1888.

GENTLEMEN: Is there no remedy for the irregularity of the mails? I commenced to take the Daily Champion some three months since, because I like it better than any other State or Kansas City daily, and have taken it some twelve years; but I am almost discouraged. My papers come to me from two to four days old; for instance, I got my paper dated February 2 this morning, February 6, just four days in transit. The Department had better put on the old overland stage, drawn by faithful mules; would then get it in two days at least. We have two railroads, the Chicago, Kansas and Nebraska and Missouri Pacific, and get mail four times daily.

T.

ATCHISON DAILY CHAMPION.

Mr. PLUMB. I will state that the point at which that letter was written is about 75 miles distant by rail in a direct line from the place where the paper is published. It took, as the writer says, four days for the paper to get that distance of 75 miles, and there are four trains a day.

I now ask that there be read an extract from the Atchison Daily Champion on the same subject, commencing with the marked part.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

It is an undeniable fact that never in the history of the country has the Post-Office Department been so inefficient as under the present administration. There has been one unbroken series of delays and inexcusable blunders in the transmission of the mails, and in the different post-offices of most of the States, especially Kansas, gross and almost criminal carelessness has been the rule for the past two years. Newspapers, letters, and packages, plainly addressed, have either been delivered to the wrong parties, or remailed to other points, or piled up in the offices where they were deposited and not delivered at all. In some cases the fault of all this is with the Department at Washington, the authorities not providing clerical help; in other and most cases the fault is in the local offices, where ignorant and incompetent help is employed.

Not only have the mails been badly managed, and the business of the country been embarrassed in consequence, but the rulings of the Department, in nearly every instance where postal questions have been submitted, have been distinguished for their stupidity and want of a broad and intelligent appreciation of the needs and rights of the public.

A case in point is that recent order requiring all letters mailed on a train to be put off at the first office to be canceled by the postmaster, the postal clerks not being allowed to cancel stamps, which subjects business men to unnecessary inconvenience and loss of time, and an indication that the Department is not disposed to accommmodate the public when it can be done as well as not and without additional expense. The same style of doing business characterizes every other order that has been issued by the Department for the last two years. It all shows that the Post-Office Department is now in incompetent hands, and that it and all the other departments of our Government have outgrown the limited capacity of the Democratic party.

Mr. PLUMB. I now ask that there be a paragraph read from the Orange City Free Press of date of February 4, 1888.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WORSE AND MORE OF IT.

Friday morning all newspaper mail from the east destined to this office was carried on west or eaten up by the route agent. No mail of any description was received from the west. If this thing keeps on people will be obliged to transmit their mail by private carriers. Let us hear from the Abilene Gazette again. The Gazette, by the way, has not been received at this post-office now for three days.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask now that an extract from the Topeka Capital, commencing with the marked part, be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Let us consider for a moment what would be the result if the proposed investigation should be made as asked for by Mr. PLUMB in the Senate and Mr. PERKINS in the House. The Post-Office Committee, after thorough inquiry, would find that the heads of the Postal Department were engaged in a censurable effort to serve the public with postal arrangements entirely inadequate, utterly refusing to recognize the fact that the entire West was being flooded with a vast increase of mail matter without corresponding increase of force to handle the same. The said committee would moreover find that these Department heads had full knowledge that this was the cause of the whole trouble, and that it was entirely in their power to accomplish a speedy remedy if their purblind meanness was not too deeply rooted.

From among the thousand cases of willful neglect to serve the people properly the committee might take the condition of the Kansas City and Pueblo run on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé with which to illustrate their report. This run received at Kansas City on the 1st day of July, 1886, 11,653 pounds of mail matter; to handle which, as well as other pouches taken on en route, the run employed a force of 40 men. On the 1st day of August, 1887, the same run received at Kansas City 23,000 pounds and the force has been augmented by 8 new men. In other words, 48 men were expected to handle 23,000 pounds of mail, while one year before 40 men had all they could do to properly handle 11,653 pounds, or an increase of over 100 per cent. in labor and of one-sixth per cent. in laborers. And even this small addition was not given till the old force had struggled with the work till they fainted at the rack.

Moreover, the committee would find that as a result of the rapid filling up of Kansas, and the States and Territories west of her, that the mail received on this run has increased since August 1, 1887, at a greater rate than at any time in the past, till now it is absolutely impossible for the present force to extricate from the pile of pouches under which they are buried every day.

R. M. Thomas, superintendent of the railway mail service in the seventh division, in a desperate effort to expedite matters, divided this run at Dodge City, ordering the east end to work Kansas and New Mexico, Arizona, and what is known as No. 3, leaving Colorado and Utah for the west end.

With four men to a car the east end is not able, at present, four days out of the week through with Kansas alone, and all the rest is left for the west end to handle when there is only two men to the car, making it necessary to throw off New Mexico and Colorado at La Junta most of the time. Very often the east end can not work No. 3, then the west end has it to do first, so that frequently over 100 pouches of Colorado mail is left to be worked during a run of 65 miles, a greater part of which, of course, is thrown off at Pueblo unopened. A large portion of this is daily papers. The transfer clerk does the best he can with it, and sometimes gets it started back within forty-eight hours. The committee would find that the remedy for the evils on this run was very simple.

Let it be restored to its former condition when the men ran through, thus saving three or four hours which is now lost in tying out racks and rehanging and in receipting for twenty or thirty pouches of registered mail; put four men to a crew and two helpers from Kansas City to Newton, making fourteen new men in all, and any mail could be handled to the entire satisfaction of the public.

Chief Clerk Hunter, at Kansas City, and Superintendent Thomas, at St. Louis, know well enough what the trouble is, and have, no doubt, asked for sufficient force, but it has not and will not be given them. These gentlemen also know that the old men are being so overworked that they are becoming discontented and a large number of them are making arrangements to leave the service. New men can not stand it to take their places, so that the situation seems to be growing more deplorable every day.

If the committee should be of a particularly prying turn of mind it might find, hidden away somewhere, a private circular which a certain head of a Department thought necessary to issue to the postal clerks, instructing them not to talk with any one excepting the head of their own Department in regard to any trouble in the mail service whatsoever, or to ventilate any "supposed" grievances on account of overwork or otherwise, to a newspaper man or any one else, and that any knowledge of a violation of the order would be followed by immediate dismissal from the service. Thus deliberately they write themselves egregious asses and complaisantly wave their ears over that solemn truth.

Mr. PLUMB. I also send up a slip from the Emporia Daily Republican, which I ask to have read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Soldiers' Tribune, of Lyons, Kans., joins the plaint against the inefficiency of the present mail service. Says the Tribune: "The Emporia Republican and Newton Republican frequently come straggling in from the west, tired, weary, and as much the worse of the wear as though they had been on a health-seeking tour to Colorado or New Mexico."

Mr. PLUMB. I send up another extract, from the Topeka Daily Capital, which I ask may be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

HOW LONG, O LORD?

How long must the people of Kansas endure the present infamous and outrageous mail service?

Every day complaints come to this office from subscribers of the Capital in Kansas, asking if something can not be done to remedy the existing evil. We have called attention to this miserable service repeatedly, our Congressmen have presented the complaints of Kansas people to the Democratic House only to be ignored and ridiculed. Every effort possible has been made to correct the miserable manner in which the mail matter is handled, and yet no relief comes.

Yesterday one of our subscribers at McPherson wrote us that the Capital never reached that place on the day of publication, and that two or three days' mail would be dumped in there at one time. There can be no excuse for this delay. The Capital is mailed in the Topeka post-office each morning, and it should leave on the 1 o'clock train in the afternoon for McPherson, and reach that place by 4 or 5 o'clock.

The rotten mail service in Kansas and the entire West is enough to damn the present Democratic Administration. It has shown itself wholly incompetent to handle this most important department of the public service, and when the time comes there will be a rising up among the outraged people of the West against this Administration that will relegate it to a deserved oblivion.

Speed that day.

Mr. PLUMB. Now I ask that there be read a letter from the manager of the Kansas City Journal, which covers a point mentioned in the speech of the Senator from Texas yesterday about the fast mail.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

KANSAS CITY, MO., February 1, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Thanks for your efforts in behalf of a public wearied with hopeless waiting for an improvement of methods and reform in the administration of that Department of the Government which comes into the daily business and social life of every intelligent citizen of the West.

I wish, without lengthening my story, to give a phase which can not be charged up to inefficient subordinates. Upon a railroad to Smith Centre, Kans., which has been in full operation three months, there is no mail service. Upon the authority of a post-office official, I state that on the Chicago, Kansas and Nebraska (Rock Island system in Kansas and Nebraska) nothing beyond a pouch service is yet in operation and this not until long after the road had been in business.

The Chicago, Milwaukee and Kansas City Railroad, after long delay in bridging the Missouri River at this place, put on their freight trains last November and passenger trains about the 1st of December. There is no mail service on that road yet, and our papers for Excelsior Springs, about 35 miles from here, are sent out on a freight train. The opening of such lines must be known months before such opening actually transpires, yet no move is made to use them as postal routes until after in operation. Usually three to four months' time elapses then before the Department begins to make an expense, and saves so much to enter up as political capital. The service when begun, badly as it is manage', is not more disreputable than the beggarly management at headquarters. "Like master like man" finds its exemplification in the postal service of the United States. A "barren ideality," the fast train upon whose movements thirteen roads wait here at Kansas City, detains the sending of two-thirds of all mail going from this vicinity into Kansas from two to four hours.

The local force at Kansas City, and every city of the Missouri Valley, is seriously inadequate; to serve a "penny wise and pound foolish" economy.

Yours, respectfully,

J. A. MANN.

Hon. P. B. PLUMB,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to put in an extract from a letter which I received yesterday while the Senator from Texas was speaking?

Mr. PLUMB. I will.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to show that this complaint is not confined to the West. Indeed, scarcely a day passes that I do not receive from my constituents writing me on other subjects complaints of the inefficiency of the mail service in Connecticut. This letter is from the Henry Bill Publishing Company of Norwich, and I read that portion of it which relates to the mail service; it is dated February 11, 1888:

NORWICH, CONN., February 11, 1888.

DEAR SIR: We are very much annoyed and troubled by the apparent disorganization of the whole postal system of this country, caused, as we believe, by the removal of experienced postal-route agents and others and putting inefficient men in their places. Our entire mail matter is very much delayed. We do not receive letters from any part of the country as quickly by twenty-four hours as we used to, and from many parts it is delayed for days. Besides this, large numbers of letters that we send out are never received by the parties to whom they are sent, and the same with letters sent to us.

We are the largest patrons of the post-office in this city, sending out about one-ninth of all mail matter that goes from here, and our business extends over the entire country, and has to be transacted almost entirely through the mails, and the delays and other things that we have spoken of are very serious losses to us. A letter sent to us from Palmer, Mass., a distance of less than 60 miles, did not reach us for more than a week after it was sent, and this is a sample of a large number of similar cases that we could mention. But our greatest trouble is in so much mail matter being lost, and we think the trouble is that the mail-route agents, being inefficient and not able to do the work that the thoroughly skilled and efficient route agents have been doing, are tempted to destroy the matter, as they can not distribute it.

I presume that it is useless for us to make this complaint, but think it best to let you know how we are bothered.

Hon. ORVILLE H. PLATT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas seems to think the Department is entitled to some credit for the large amou: of railway mail service put on in Kansas and Nebraska during the last year. That would be a good deal like the Administration taking credit for the early and the later rain. The people of those States built the railroads and thereby provided a means of transporting the mails, and they never until the incoming of this Administration had any inquiry made as to the propriety or necessity of putting mail service on railway trains. The mail service followed the completion of the railroads just as quick as a schedule could be provided; but now great delay occurs. There has not been a single case in which service was put upon a new railway in Kansas in the past two years until after the lapse of very considerable time after the Department had been advised of the construction of the railroad and all necessary facts in order that the service might be put on. The Department has sometimes questioned the propriety of building so many railroads and suggested the people out there were going too fast.

I have no doubt it has been a great surprise to the Administration that there have been built during the past two years in the State of Kansas alone about 3,000 miles of new railroad. This country is bigger than the Administration knew anything about when it came into power. It had no idea of its extent, of the business the people were doing, and of the requirements of that business. It had a vague idea, I suppose, that there was something more than when the Democratic party gave up the control of the Government in 1861; but three years ought to be time enough to get a fair idea of the situation and its needs. No matter how much postal service has been put on railways, if it falls short of providing for the entire construction it is a failure of duty, and if the Department waits thirty, sixty, or ninety days, and sometimes six months, as it has done, before putting on any of it, that is another dereliction of duty, and a very conspicuous one at that. That is going on all the while. In fact, there seems to be a disposition to economize by resisting the inevitable as long as possible, and then, as I said, setting up the querulous plea that the people were building more railroads than they ought to have done, and that there is no obligation on the Department to make use of that instrumentality to supply the mails.

But, Mr. President, this is not in any sense a partisan question. It is at all events so much more a question respecting the business interests of the people of the entire country, in connection with that Department which comes nearer to them than any other Department of the Government, that I do not care to introduce merely party questions into its discussion.

What our people want is a prompt, faithful mail service. I do not say they will be especially thankful to anybody for giving it to them, because they have not been in the habit of regarding such service as a favor, but as a duty on the part of the Department to render and a right on their part to have it, and that is the condition of things I want to see restored, where the Post-Office Department shall render the proper service to the people of the country because it is their duty to do it and because the people have a right to have it. This inquiry is not to be side-tracked or the force of it broken by saying that much has been done unless it can be shown that all has been done which has been necessary; and the condition of the service conclusively proves that all has not been done which should have been done.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, the allegations made against the Post-Office Department in the discussion of this resolution this morning indicate that the complaints are sent to Congress and not to the Department, and sent for political effect and not to procure an improvement of the service; and the speech of the Senator from Kansas conforms to that view.

In reference to the alleged neglect of the Department to correct abuses, I have the statement of the late Postmaster-General, Mr. Vilas, of the present Postmaster-General, of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, who has charge of transportation, and of the General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, that immediately upon receipt of any complaint of irregularity in the service investigation is ordered and the corrective applied; and I have no doubt if the gentlemen who wrote to Senators here, instead of bringing their complaints into the political arena, had sent their complaints to the Post-Office Department, where they ought to send them, they could secure the necessary correction.

The Senator from Kansas has caused to be read another article from the Abilene Gazette. I answered the complaint from that paper yesterday, by showing that it rested on the fact that it attempted under section 980, I believe it is, of the Postal Laws and Regulations to mail packages of papers directed from its office without paying the postage as required by law. It is a convenience extended to publishers to send their papers in bags direct to the mail cars with a certificate to the postmaster that the postage has been paid. The proprietors of this paper endeavored to send out packages of their paper without the certificate that the postage had been paid, and the postal clerk, under the postal laws and the instructions of the Department, refused to receive them. Now the Senator quotes another article from that paper, not to meet the answer which I made, for it does not meet it, but another complaint about something that happened on some other railroad.

The complaint by the late Mr. Rounds was relied on, and I answered that by showing that the fault lay in the mailing clerk of his office and in what is called the "galley" from which the papers are mailed, that clerk neglecting on many packages in single wrappers to put the name of the post-office at all, which, of course, prevented the delivery of such papers. On examining the galleys of that office, it appeared that there were more than sixty errors in distribution, and these errors were due to the newspaper office, and that office changed its mailing clerk three times to avoid these errors.

I also showed that complaint was made to the Department on the 22d day of January, and a few days afterwards an investigation was ordered, on the 24th, I believe, and that on the 31st, the day the Senator from Kansas introduced his resolution, the final report of the investigation was made, showing that the fault rested with the newspaper and not with the Department, and the Senator from Kansas now reads another communication from that office, as he says, to answer the exposure that I made yesterday, but relating to a different subject-matter, which, of course, I am not able now to answer.

Now, I wish to add, Mr. President, that with the assurance I have that the Department promptly orders investigation whenever complaints of irregularities of service are made, I can do no more than say this, and I suppose we all agree that the heads of these bureaus and the heads of these Departments do not deliberately state what is not true.

The Senator from Kansas referred to the fact that new railroads have been built on which mails have not been put. As it is alleged to be the fault of the Department in not putting service on and not giving clerks to superintend the mails, I may be excused, I hope, if I read from what I said yesterday on this point; and I desire to call the attention of Senators to this statement, the details of which come from the Department:

Of the increase of 7,213.38 miles of railway mail service during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, 2,481.64 miles were in the division which contains Nebraska, and 2,648 miles were in the division which includes Kansas. Of the increase of 7,213.38 miles of railway mail service for that year, the two divisions above named were allowed 5,129.64 miles, while the other seven divisions were increased but 2,083.74 miles, those two divisions getting more than five-sevenths of the whole increase.

The increase of the miles of railway mail service during the seven months which ended January 31, 1888, was 5,249.19 miles. Of this, 2,059.72 miles were in the Nebraska division and 2,135.36 miles were in the Kansas division, making 4,314.63 miles in these two divisions, while there was only an increase in this service of 934.56 miles in the other seven divisions.

It thus appears that the increase in the postal railway service in nineteen months, ending January 31, 1888, was 12,462.57 miles, of which 9,824.72 miles were in the two divisions which embrace Nebraska and Kansas, while there were but 2,637.85 miles of increase in the other seven divisions.

Then, after giving a statement of the eleven States in which the largest railroad increase occurred last year, I said further:

I also submit a table, marked 3, giving the States and Territories in which the largest increase in the railway mail service was put in operation during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for the seven months from July 1, 1887, to January 31, 1888. The total increase for the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1887, was 5,069.44 miles. Of this increase Kansas received 1,393.06 miles and Nebraska received 754.66 miles, each having a larger increase than any other State, the two together receiving more than two-fifths of the increase for those eleven States and the Indian Territory for that year. The increase of the railway postal service for these States and Territories for the seven months which ended January 31, 1888, was 6,021.61 miles. Of this increase Kansas received 1,350.66 miles and Nebraska 965.72 miles, the two together receiving 2,326.38 miles, being about two-fifths of the whole increase in these States for that period, showing also an increase of 4,474.10 miles of railway mail service in those two States in the nineteen months which ended January 31, 1888. While this increase shows the prosperity and rapid growth and development of those States, it also shows that the Post-Office Department was keeping the increase of postal facilities up with their splendid progress.

Now, the Senator says that large additional amounts of railroad have been built upon which no mail service has been put; and that under former administrations the people never had to request the service to be put on new railroads, but it was voluntarily put on as soon as the railroads were built. This shows that the Senator has not with his usual care investigated this particular subject. The mails are not put upon any railroad until the railroad company has certified the length in miles built, the number of post-offices on its line, the distance between post-offices, and some other facts which I do not now call to memory. When these facts are certified, the Department of course puts the mails on.

On that subject I was informed by the Department that there was now additional railroad mileage in Kansas and possibly in Nebraska, but certainly in Kansas, in regard to which the Department was awaiting this certificate and had called for it as to the length of line built, the number of post-offices, the distance between post-offices, and the other enumerated requirements, and I was told a few days ago and on yesterday that the Department expected to make arrangements for putting service on a large additional number of miles of railroad there, and I think the Senator will find that to be the fact.

I was advised that it was their policy, as it was the policy of the Government, to supply the people with the mail wherever railroad facilities were afforded for that purpose, and that they do so I have no doubt. And what I have just stated shows that the Department has been going forward with the growth of those States and the rapid increase of railroad service; and besides that I desire to show what has been done in the way of increasing railway postal clerks for those two States, and to show that the remarkable increase of the number of postal clerks there has equaled, if it has not exceeded, the increase in the putting on of railway mail service.

The number of railway postal clerks in the service on the 30th of June, 1886, was 4,573. The number in the service on the 30th of June, 1887, was 4,851. The number in service on the 31st of January, 1888, was 4,988. The increase of these clerks for the fiscal year 1886-'87 was 278, and the increase for seven months of the present fiscal year, from July 1, 1887, to January 31, 1888, was 137. The aggregate increase for the nineteen months from July 1, 1886, to January 31, 1888, was 415. Of this number, division No. 6, which includes Nebraska, received 106; and the seventh division, which includes Kansas, received 122, these two divisions being allowed an increase for these nineteen months of 288 railway postal clerks, while the other seven divisions were altogether only allowed an increase of 187, more than one-half of the increase of railway postal clerks for the last nineteen months having been given to the two divisions of the West and Southwest, which include the States of Kansas and Nebraska.

In addition to that, I showed yesterday, and it stands in the RECORD to-day, the tests which have been applied to insure efficiency in the railway mail service, and showed that the tests required exhibited superior skill and understanding to what had existed heretofore by comparison by the figures from the Department.

Now, Mr. President, as to the allegation that this country is too large for the present administration of the Post-Office Department, a fair and just reference to the reports of the Postmaster-General shows, as I alleged yesterday, that we have perhaps never had his superior in that Department of the late Postmaster-General in the clear comprehension of its duties, its necessities, and what ought to be done with it. His last report makes a full development of the progress in every department of the service, and shows in detail what that progress has been. It displays a full comprehension of its needs and a full recognition by the Department of the duty of complying with the needs of the service in all its branches.

So, I take it that the statement that the Department and the Administration are not large enough for this country is meant for the groundlings; it is not meant for Senators. It is meant for home consumption and for the hustings, and not meant for the grave deliberations of this body. I would challenge a comparison of the reports of the head of that Department and the heads of its divisions during the past three years with the reports at any former period in the history of the Government as showing a full and clear comprehension of its duties, and a full performance of them.

Mr. President, I am more confirmed than I was yesterday in my belief as to the object of this attack. In a service, as I said yesterday, employing 100,000 officers and employés, with millions of miles of transportation, with billions of packages transported in the mails during the year, I admit that there may have been some irregularities in doing this great business, and when I admit this I only admit that this great Department is carried on by human agencies, and that human nature is not perfect; but I have proved that it is as well carried on as heretofore. What I mean to say is that I am more confirmed to-day than I was yesterday in the belief that the success of the management of the Post-Office Department under the present administration, the success of the service, the success in its economy, make so striking a contrast with the administration of that Department under Republican predecessors, that perhaps it is found desirable to break the force of that success and the favorable opinion of the people growing out of it by assaults upon the Department upon information from unfair, interested newspaper reports, and appeals made to political authority instead of being addressed to the Department in a plain business way to secure the correction of grievances complained of.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, only a word or two in reply to the Senator from Texas.

No single thing that has been put into the RECORD on my motion was sent to me except the letter of Mr. Mann. The newspaper articles I clipped from papers which come to me in the usual way. They only embrace a tithe of what I see in the papers that I receive from my State. I have, I presume, fifty letters—letters from California, letters from Wisconsin, letters from Michigan, letters from all portions of the country—on this subject, making similar complaints, and I believe that they record what is the exact truth, because there is no motive to misrepresent, and the statements are confirmed from widely different sources, and I have some personal knowledge of the demoralized condition of the service.

I did not mean to be understood as saying that the Department under Republican administrations had put service on railroads without any request whatever. I did mean to say, and think I did say, that they did not require the petitions of the patrons of the offices along the line, but that they only required the certificates from the railroads of the distances and so on, just as the Senator from Texas has put it. This administration, however, has not put on the service as soon as it received information of this character. At one time there were 1,300 miles of railroad in Kansas on which there was not a single particle of service, and it was not until after attention was called to that disgraceful condition of things by a debate in the Senate, in the course of which the Senator's own colleague stated that the service in Texas was the worst it ever had been, that the service was put on.

When the Department was prompted in that public way, 900 miles of railroad mail service were put on at once in the State of Kansas. I have no doubt now that since public attention has been called to this great dereliction the Department has stirred itself to put on service and to make improvements.

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator will allow me to say to him that the information called out shows that long before the resolution was introduced the Department had taken steps to put service on the railroads on which it was not, in Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. I am not talking about steps; I am talking about service. They may have taken steps for eight months, as in other cases; they were all the time taking steps, but steps which did not result in anything. If I were disposed to be at all critical, I might say perhaps that steps were taken for the purpose of avoiding the arrival at a conclusion favorable to putting on the service.

I admit that the report of the Postmaster-General is a very fine document; but when I think of the document and think of the condition of the service, I am reminded of a house in good order, but entirely without food for its occupants. The book-keeping in the Department is admirable, and if that is the purpose for which the Department is kept up, of course nothing is left to be asked; but while the reports are good the service is bad, which is the main thing. We have got a fine housekeeper, a fine book-keeper, the finest department in a literary way the country has ever had, according to the Senator from Texas, but we have got the poorest administration—the most inefficient service.

I confess I was hurt a little when the Senator insinuated that perhaps I had been stirring things up from partisan motives. He has never done anything of that kind, nor has his side of the Chamber ever abused a Republican administration! Oh, no! We have got a new system of ethics now since the country changed politically in its administration. Those who once filled the country with their complaints and denunciations, often imputing corrupt motives to men in high place, are now very sensitive concerning even the slightest complaint made as to officials of their own political faith.

It is not a question of methods; it is not a question of what has been done; it is a question of results, and I say to-day, and no one in this country who knows anything of the facts will dispute it, that the postal service is worse than it ever was. There never was a time since there was such a thing as a railway mail service that there has been such an utter and entire failure of that service to perform the purpose for which it was created as there is to-day.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I must confess my surprise at the charge made by the Senator from Texas that this is in the nature of making political capital rather than an earnest and honest desire to correct an existing evil. Certainly nothing that was said by myself the other day would warrant that assertion. I sought simply to present a defect in the administration of postal affairs in the State that I have the honor in part to represent.

I read letters that had been received by me from the editors of newspapers. I stated, not, perhaps, at such length as I should at the time, some of the personal complaints that had come to me, not only from those editing public journals, political journals, but from those engaged in all trades and in all professions. I perhaps should have gone further and should have said that my attention had been called to the matter by personal knowledge of the administration of the postal affairs of my own State. I am giving nothing at second hand, but I could very properly give here, if time would admit, my own experience as to the defects of the postal service west of the Missouri River.

I indulged in nothing in the way of complaint or censure of the Post-Office Department, but it is marvelous to me that in the presence of this record showing the character of the debate that occurred here the Senator from Texas should indulge in this sort of remarks. Why, Mr. President, I turn to the debate that was had here on the 1st day of February and I find that the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], not a Republican, but one in political accord with this Administration, followed in the line of the suggestions made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], and expressed his gratification that this resolution had been introduced recognizing that there were evils which demanded attention. I read one or two extracts from the speech of the Senator from Alabama. He said:

The clerical force to do this work has not kept pace with the increase of all mail matter carried over our lines, nor have the salaries that belong to the inferior officers in the service of the Government of the United States been increased sufficiently to enable them to do this additional amount of work.

Again he said that we not only ought to increase the pay, but we ought to provide for the increase of the number of these postal clerks. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] said:

Mr. President, I should like to say a word, if I may be allowed. I have looked into this matter with some care of late, and I am glad that the resolution is offered, and hope it will be adopted, because it is going to develop a great many things.

Again he said:

I hope all this will be gone into and developed, and then let us do something which will make the service good and efficient.

Here is pretty fair Democratic recognition, it seems to me, that the present service is bad and inefficient; and it is not that we desire to censure the present post-office authorities, but because we want to remedy these existing evils, that we press this matter. The Senator from Texas, authorized so to do by the Post-Office Department, in his speech delivered yesterday spoke of the complaint that was made by Mr. Rounds, who at the time of his death was one of the proprietors and one of the editors of the Omaha Republican, a Republican journal published in Nebraska. I do not think that Mr. Rounds in this presence needs anything in the way of indorsement. Every man here knows him from personal association with him to have been a truthful, honest man. I read from a letter by him in which he complained of the difficulties under which his journal labored along with other citizens of that town. I am told that all the foundation there was for that complaint was that some young men, three in number, one being discharged after another, who were employed by the Omaha Republican Company to attend to its mailing list, had neglected to place the address on the wrappers of the newspapers, and they had been thrown in the waste-basket, and in that way had miscarried.

It is quite likely that that complaint was made, but that complaint was made on the 16th day of June, 1887. The investigation immediately followed, and the report from which the Senator from Texas read is dated the 6th day of July of that year. But the letter I called the attention of the Senate to and that I read in part was dated the 26th day of November, 1887, and this is the complaint that is made:

Without any disparagement of our present post-office officials—

And so we say here. We do not disparage the competency of the gentlemen who are in charge of the Post-Office Department; we do not attempt to give the reason for this abuse, but we enter our protest in this, as we claim, the proper place for the entering of such complaints—

Without any disparagement of our present post-office officials, everybody knows and complains of the mail service here. Especially is this true as regards our paper, and, we presume, the others in this city, and we are in constant receipt of complaints from subscribers of the non-receipt or irregular and late receipt of their papers.

And I read a corresponding complaint from Mr. Hitchcock, the editor of the Omaha Journal, in which he said, after speaking of his own difficulties:

What is true of the newspaper is true of bankers, wholesale merchants, and others having heavy mails. The service is abominable, but the postmaster is not to blame. He and his force are up to their ears in mail-bags, overwhelmed with work and crowded into inadequate quarters.

Mr. President, where is the proper place to go with a complaint such as this? The Senator from Texas says we should go to the Post-Office Department. Why, that has been done unsuccessfully. It has been shown by the record itself that Mr. Rounds went to the Post-Office Department, and there was an investigation and a report made on the 6th of July, 1887, but the abuse continued, and it was near the 1st day of November after that that I received the letter which made complaint of this irregularity and improper service. And I will state for the information of the Senator from Texas that it seems to me a most desirable thing that when there is neglect of the public interest or an ignoring of the public demand by the Executive Departments of this Government, the citizen who has been aggrieved should come to this or the other body of Congress and make known the difficulty and demand a remedy.

It seems to have done most effectual service here in the cases in point, for the very next day after the introduction of the resolution by the Senator from Kansas and the debate upon that resolution I received a notification from the Post-Office Department that a railway mail service that had been sought after for some time, and the full details of which as to length of road and the number of post-offices upon the road were in the possession of the Post-Office Department, had been placed in my State; and a few days after, notwithstanding that there had been weeks and months of effort on the part of the Representative in Congress from the district in which Omaha is situated to obtain an increase of clerical force, after this debate, and I believe very largely as the result of this exposure, there came an increase to the number of six clerks in that post-office, much needed, and much more is needed. I repudiate the idea that so far as I am concerned I have been actuated by any desire to advance the interests of the political party to which I belong; I simply seek by this method, that I think is a legitimate one, to obtain the remedy for an evil under which we suffer.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I agree fully with the Senator from Nebraska that if the Post-Office Department or any Department of the Government is guilty of neglect of duty in any branch of its service and refuses to correct abuses, then it is right and proper to appeal to the political authority to see that it does its duty. I agree with him that far; but when that appeal is made it should not be made upon unverified, unsustained charges, loosely made, without giving instances of abuse. But if it is made, the men who make it, and who invoke the political authority to correct the abuses of the Executive Departments, ought to present here cases showing the abuse, showing the application for relief and the refusal of the Department to correct the abuse. Whenever that is done I will join the Senator in taking whatever action may be necessary to secure a correction of any abuses in any of the Executive Departments.

Mr. President, I am not given to telling anecdotes, but I am tempted in the presence of this great body to illustrate my idea of the position of the Senator from Nebraska by telling a short anecdote. Here come half a dozen Senators attacking the Post-Office Department; the newspapers of the country are attacking the Department; a simultaneous attack is made in the other House, and the Senator is astonished that any one should think of defending the Department. He reminds me of two small boys who were together, and one of them cried out, "Mamma, mamma, won't you come here and make Bill behave himself?" "Why, Johnny, what has been done?" "Every time I strike him on the head with my hammer he squalls out!" [Laughter.] So I suppose the Senator from Kansas had the hammer in his hand, and he thinks the Department ought never to "squall," however many times he hits it on the head.

I do not know that I need say anything further on this subject. All that I could say has been said when I state that whenever there comes a properly verified abuse and a showing that the Department has been applied to for a remedy and refused it, I will join Senators in trying to remedy the abuse; but when newspaper articles from all over the country are gathered up to smirch the Department without evidence, I shall beg to protest and to insist upon such rules as will develop fairness and justice.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I thought I had presented sufficient newspaper extracts. But having been reproached by the Senator from Texas with partisanship, I will contribute now the Democratic quota to the complaints against the Department. I will read first from a paper published at Pine Bluff, Ark., vouched to me as being a Democratic paper:

The large crowd in front of the post-office every morning waiting for a turn at the general-delivery window shows that the amount allowed by the Government for clerical help is certainly inadequate to the needs of the office. The niggardly style in which the postal affairs are run is not at all satisfactory to the public. Congress should do something to rectify this condition, and failing to do it, it will have some vicious things said about it. It is a serious thing for the laboring people of this city to be compelled to wait hours for a chance to get their mails. No blame can attach to Mr. Alexander, as we understand it, for this state of affairs, but the trouble lies in the small allowance made for clerical help. Pine Bluff is no village now. She is a city of about 15,000 people and growing fast.

To show that Congress is not responsible for this condition of things, I will repeat what I said before, that Congress allowed the Postmaster-General every penny he asked for clerical help.

To the foregoing I now add an extract from the Memphis Avalanche, a Democratic newspaper. It is headed "The Cause of the Trouble:"

There can be no doubt that Senator PLUMB had a partisan object in asking for an investigation of the mail service of the West and South, which was declared to be inefficient. But it is to be regretted that it did not pass. The service is not what it should be. There can be no doubt of the truth of that proposition. Complaints are numerous and well grounded, but the cause is not that ascribed by Mr. CHACE, who claimed it was due to the fact that 90 per cent. of the employés had been dismissed. Upon investigation it will be found that the trouble does not come from the ninety Democrats recently put in office, but from the ten Republicans who are allowed to remain.

I shall not make any remarks about the comparison between the strength and virtue and so on of ten Republicans as compared with that of ninety Democrats.

Every one of them would be glad to see a change, and few of them would hesitate, in a quiet and unobtrusive way, to put a spoke in the wheel of the Democratic wagon. By all means let us have an investigation of the affairs of the Post-Office Department as administered in the South.

I have also an extract from the St. Joseph Gazette, one of the leading Democratic papers in Western Missouri:

A postal clerk, who is not employed on the Central Branch, informed an Atchison Champion reporter lately that the principal cause of irregularities in the mail service on that road is the lack of car room and facilities. He says the letter mail is amply provided for, but this requires nearly all the available space in the cars, and there is no room to handle the newspaper mail. The Gazette would like to believe that numerous and constantly recurring irregularities in the newspaper-mail service of the territory in which it circulates depend upon causes so easily remedied as the one reported from the Central Branch. This would at least lend to a very damaging annoyance continually suffered by the press the hope that the trouble is not altogether irremediable.

It will be seen that the complaints are pretty evenly distributed between Democratic and Republican newspapers, and the Senator from Texas will have his labor for his pains if he seeks to make the people of the West and the South believe that they are having a good mail service when they know very well they have not.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I was very much pleased to hear the disclaimer on the part of the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Kansas of any partisan purpose in this resolution. As a matter of course we are bound to accept their disclaimer as Senators; but I desire to say to those Senators that the country will not put the same charitable construction on their action in reference to the Post-Office Department that we, their brother Senators, are bound to do. When Senators rise here and produce extract after extract, and have them published in the RECORD, arraigning a department of the General Government, without making any specific charge on their own part, but simply placing before the country the complaints of partisan newspapers against the present Administration, the country, if not their brother Senators, will say that the purpose was to arraign the Administration to which they were opposed. Of course we, their brethren on this floor, will accept their disclaimer, and regret that they should be put in a false position by the country in making this accusation against them.

But, now, is it any wonder that a department like this should be criticised?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will not ask that the regular order be laid aside at all. I can proceed to-morrow.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] is to have the floor on the regular order.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 3290) to amend section 685 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (H. R. 4964) to prevent any person or persons in the cities of Washington and Georgetown from making books and pools on the result of trotting or running races or boat races was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

INDIAN SCHOOL AT CARSON CITY.

Mr. STEWART. I ask that we finish Senate bill 1103, that was under consideration last evening, to establish an Indian school at Carson City. I think there will be no further debate, and we can take the vote. I ask that we may continue the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. If it is really to be only a matter of taking the vote, I have no objection.

Mr. STEWART. We will try it, and if it leads to debate I will yield.

Mr. BLAIR. I shall be obliged to call for the regular order if there is debate.

Mr. STEWART. I will withdraw the bill if it leads to debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside, and that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1103) to provide for an Indian school at Carson City, Nev.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill, the pending question being on the amendment reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, in line 4 of section 1, after the word "lands," to insert "not less than 200 acres;" so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept from the State of Nevada any lands, not less than 200 acres, which may be donated by that State to the United States for the purpose of establishing an Indian school, and also to receive from that State, or any corporation or person, any donation that may be made for the purposes of said school.

Mr. STEWART. I move to amend the amendment to correspond with the suggestion in the letter of the Secretary of the Interior which I sent up yesterday. In line 7, after the word "school," I move to insert "if in his opinion such land is suitable for that purpose."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the proposed amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada is not properly an amendment to the amendment, belonging as it does in another part of the bill.

Mr. STEWART. Very well. It is an amendment to the same sentence, and qualifies the sentence.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire how that would leave the bill. If the land donated is not accepted, would the bill take effect?

Mr. STEWART. I think it would.

Mr. DAWES. Without furnishing any land whatever?

Mr. STEWART. I think it would take effect.

Mr. DAWES. Ought not the amendment to be so framed that if the land donated is not acceptable they shall offer other land, so that it may not result in the United States being compelled to purchase land because the State of Nevada offered land that was not acceptable. They could very easily in that way compel the United States to purchase land.

Mr. STEWART. Just say "provided such land shall, in his opinion, be suitable for that purpose."

Mr. DAWES. Let the act itself rest upon the condition that the State furnish land, not less than 200 acres, acceptable to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that under the practice of the Senate the question should first be taken on the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, which will be again stated.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4 of section 1, after the word "lands," the Committee on Indian Affairs report to insert "not less than 200 acres."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I now move, after the word "school," in line 7, to insert "if in his opinion such land is suitable for that purpose."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that the Senator from Massachusetts offer an amendment at the end of section 2 which would cover the point in regard to the matter. Section 2 is—

That the sum of $50,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by the Secretary of the Interior for the erection of buildings and such other matters as he may deem proper, in establishing a school for the education of Indians at Carson City, in the State of Nevada, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe.

I would move to strike out "Carson City" there because the recommendations adduced show that that ought to be left to the discretion of the Indian Department. That may not be the best place. I had not observed that before.

Mr. STEWART. It is the place that the letters recommend.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think in as large a State as that, with a tribe of Indians not settled and located at any given point, we had better leave to the Department the selection of a location. I therefore move to strike out in line 6, of section 2, the words "at Carson City."

Mr. STEWART. I object to that, and hope it will not be done. That has been considered, and that is the point where the school is wanted.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to show that I am right in this, and that this is the recommendation of the Department. Why the Senator should come in here and fight against the express recommendation of the Interior Department in regard to this matter I do not understand.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senator from Nevada will allow this bill to go over.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Secretary of the Interior, in the letter which was ordered to be printed last evening, says:

The bill should, however, in my opinion, be amended so as to leave it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior whether any land or other donation made for the purpose of the school by the State of Nevada, or otherwise, shall be accepted and used therefor; so that the suitability of location or proposed advantages shall be within departmental determination.

I want to leave this just as the Secretary of the Interior has recommended as to the suitability of the location, and not fix the suitability of the location at Carson City or any other given point. Therefore I move to strike out the words "at Carson City."

Mr. STEWART. I do not want to kill this bill by prolonged discussion, but this question of the location has been well considered and the Secretary of the Interior has made no suggestion to take it away from Carson City. He only wants the suitability of the particular land there to be determined. There are six or eight hundred Indians right there at Carson City, and those are the Washoes. It is right between the reservations of the Piutes, numbering 8,000, and the Shoshones, still larger, the Washoes having at least 800 children of full age, and the Shoshones several hundred more. They are farther east and they would have to be transported.

It is only about 40 miles from either reservation, one north and one west, about half way between. It is at the junction of the railroads. The Indians in that State have been allowed always to travel free on the railroads; there will be no charge to them, and that particular vicinity is the place for this school. The people of Carson and of the county of Ormsby, in which the town is located, have petitioned the Legislature, have organized a society, and have got that county to contribute $10,000 The State authorized that county to raise money for the purpose of taking care of these Indians in this way, though they had been taking care of them for a long time. To adopt the amendment would be to say that Carson is not the right place, or at least to throw doubt upon it. Why should the people be willing to contribute to the Indians there? They have taken care of them. To strike this out would be a direct blow at the humane people who have this matter in hand.

I do not care about confining the Department to the land already bought; if you do not like that, take other land about there; but that that is the point to have the school there can be no doubt. They are people who have contributed their money to take care of the Indian children among them, and I hope the motion to strike out will not prevail. The success of these schools largely depends on the people that will take an interest in educating the children. If this bill is passed it will do great good, and Carson City is more appropriate than almost any other place for an Indian school. The circumstances are such that I am certain the money will not be wasted. I never have asked a dollar for Indians in my life before. I thought the Indians grown up had better work. This is the first time I have ever asked a dollar's appropriation for the Indians in my life, because I thought the money was wasted on grown-up Indians when they ought to work. These Indians have been left for years without any appropriation whatever, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs sends us a report that they are superior to other Indians. It is because they have not been pauperized by feeding them too much. Now, these children are there and must be taken care of. Good people there have undertaken it, and I hope the Senator from Missouri will make no further objection, and let us take the vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President——

Mr. BLAIR. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator to allow me to have a vote taken on a bill reported yesterday from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HAWLEY. I promised to yield the floor to the Senator from New Jersey for a technical correction of a bill already passed. I do that first.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NEWARK, N. J.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I desire to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed yesterday for a public building at Newark, N. J., simply to correct the bill before it passes from the Senate. I wish to make a correction in the text of the bill (S. 601) to authorize the purchase of additional ground in Newark, N. J., adjoining the custom-house and post-office building, and for the improvement of the building thereon and the erection of additions thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the vote passing this bill and also the vote ordering it to be engrossed for a third reading be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MCPHERSON. In the sixth line, second page, after the word "building," I move to insert "in Newark, New Jersey," so as to give a definite location.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, after the word "building," it is proposed to insert "in Newark, New Jersey;" so as to read:

Post-office building in Newark, New Jersey.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print additional copies of Executive Document 51, first session Forty-ninth Congress, on the subject of cattle and dairy farming, with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 1184) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek at the Woodley Lane road, in the District of Columbia; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following concurrent resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 15,000 additional copies of the Statistical Abstract of the United States for the year 1887, of which 5,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and 10,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CALL. I appeal to the Senator from Connecticut to allow me to have a vote taken on the joint resolution reported yesterday. It is a matter of great importance, and I think there will be no debate upon it.

Mr. HAWLEY. As far as I am concerned I am willing to yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the joint resolution will be reported, if there be no objection.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator can get the matter up this afternoon at a later hour.

Mr. CALL. It is Order of Business No. 297.

The Secretary read the title of joint resolution S. R. 35, appropriating $20,000 for the subtropical exposition at Jacksonville, Fla.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STEWART. What is that?

Mr. BLAIR. I call for the regular order. I can not yield to anything that will lead to debate.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator in charge of the bill insists on the regular order, and I rather think I shall be obliged to coincide with him.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. PLUMB.

Mr. HAWLEY withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). What is the pleasure of the Senate? The vote on this bill is by agreement to be taken to-morrow at 3 o'clock.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

Mr. STEWART. I ask now that the Senate resume the consideration of the bill to provide for an Indian school at Carson City, Nev.

Mr. BLAIR. If any one desires to address the Senate on the pending measure, I trust the debate on it will proceed.

Mr. HALE. I have been absent for the last three or four days and did not expect to reach Washington until to-night. Before going away I had indicated to the President of the Senate my desire for some time in the morning of to-morrow on this bill. I should be glad if that opportunity were accorded me, not for any extended speech, but to present some figures and some calculations and some observations that seem to me of importance in this connection.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senator will feel able to go on now. He must see that all the time for a week past has been given to the opponents of this bill, and a postponement made for their accommodation; all of them leaving town, and nothing being done; only two speeches really in the past week, and only an hour remaining to-morrow, given by the unanimous agreement of the Senate for debate, and that hour certainly the friends of the measure are entitled to; so that the Senator ought to make an effort to proceed to-night.

Mr. HALE. I have not the papers and figures here, owing to the circumstances of which I have spoken.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator must know the condition of the public service in the Capitol. This bill has been pending for a long time. I do not think that it is justice to this bill, and the friends of this measure, that we should submit continually to these delays. I hope the Senator, with his well-known ability and his familiarity with this question—he having been in the Senate during the seven or eight years it has been pending—will be able to make his remarks to-night. I should like the hour to-morrow myself, unless some other friend of the bill wishes to speak.

Mr. HALE. What I shall say is based on reports that I have sent for and figures that have been made up which I have not here now. I do not fancy that there will be any difficulty in an arrangement, as the Senate is very indulgent in such controversies; and I see the force of the suggestion that the Senator desires the hour to close the debate to-morrow. I will take my chance, with the indulgence of the Senate, in the morning hour, before 2 o'clock is reached, for thirty or forty minutes before that time, to get an opportunity to present what I have to say, so that the Senator shall not be deprived of his hour.

Mr. BLAIR. I have no objection to that; but I only desire to say that other Senators may have indicated a desire to speak in favor of the bill. There is but one hour of the time to-morrow that the bill can command unless by the courtesy of the Senate indulgence is given to the Senator from Maine before 2 o'clock. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has intimated to me his purpose to speak. I do not know how much time he would like. He may take the whole hour if he wishes. If the gentleman from Maine asks for time before 2 o'clock to-morrow, no doubt he will get it.

Mr. HALE. Under the circumstances I will take my chances in the morning before 2 o'clock, after the morning business, of being allowed by the Senate to be heard. If I had my figures here at present I should proceed now.

Mr. STEWART. I ask that the Senate, by unanimous consent, resume the consideration of the bill to provide for an Indian school at Carson City.

Mr. BLAIR. Let the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I should like to occupy some five or ten minutes in giving the reasons which will control my vote on the educational bill. I should very much prefer to give those reasons after the amendments are voted on, which I understand will be offered.

I wish to inquire now if the unanimous agreement will deprive me of that opportunity after the amendments are submitted and voted on. I shall not ask exceeding ten minutes, and if that is a violation of the agreement, I should like to ask unanimous consent that I may have not exceeding ten minutes after the present amendments are voted on, before the final vote is taken, to give my reasons for the vote I shall cast on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair of course can not construe the understanding of the Senate, but will say that his recollection of the agreement is that the vote on the amendments is to be taken without debate. Of course, that is a matter which is in the control of the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. That was the understanding arrived at after considerable discussion. There is no doubt, I suppose, that that was the understanding. Could not the Senator make his remarks hypothetically with reference to the amendment he has in mind?

Mr. BERRY. I have stated that I prefer not to make my remarks until that amendment is presented and voted on. If I am deprived of that privilege, I shall ask the Senator from New Hampshire to yield me ten minutes of his time.

Mr. BLAIR. If I have an hour between 2 and 3 o'clock to-morrow, I will yield the Senator ten minutes.

Mr. BERRY. I would much prefer, however, if the Senate would consent to it, that I have the time after the amendments are voted on, or some of the amendments. If that is not granted to me, as a matter of course I will yield to the will of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a matter which the Chair can not determine.

INDIAN SCHOOL AT CARSON CITY.

Mr. STEWART. I ask that the present bill be laid aside temporarily, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1103.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the bill under consideration be informally laid aside, and that the Senate resume the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Nevada to allow me to get a vote on the joint resolution providing for representation at the subtropical exposition in Florida.

Mr. STEWART. I have been obstructed so much in this that I think it is a matter on which I can not give way further. Under any ordinary circumstances I should yield; but I think we can get a vote in a few moments. I do not think there will be any further discussion of any length.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1103) to provide for an Indian school at Carson City, Nev., the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. COCKRELL, in line 6 of section 3, after the word "Indians," to strike out "at Carson City."

Mr. COCKRELL. I made that motion because of the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior which was read yesterday evening when this matter was up, and there are some other amendments which ought to be made to the bill in addition to the pending one.

It seems that there was previously a bill pending here, and the Legislature of the State of Nevada offered $10,000 for erecting buildings for a school at or near Carson City. This bill ignores that $10,000. That $10,000 was offered as an inducement for the getting up of this project of an Indian school, and now it is abandoned and the Government is asked to give $50,000 without respect to the $10,000 appropriated by the Legislature of the State of Nevada. I should be very greatly obliged to the Senator from Nevada if he would explain why it is that this appropriation by the Legislature as an inducement to get Congress to take up this question and legislate upon it is now abandoned.

Mr. STEWART. I will answer the question very directly. Nevada has had less appropriation for Indians than any other State of the Union according to the number of Indians within her limits. Nevada ought not to contribute a cent. The places where the great Indian schools are are named in all the great appropriation bills and specifically provided for; but Nevada has stood back and allowed her Indians to take care of themselves until, as I said, a large number of children have grown up, amounting to at least 1,500, in the western part of the State who would go to this school. Carson City, which is pretty much all of Ormsby County, took the matter in hand. About 800 of these Indians live there. They have been taken care of by the people. They took the matter in hand and asked the Legislature to allow them to issue bonds to the extent of $10,000 to start this school before they came here at all, and they have bought the land and are willing to donate that land, and they will take hold of the enterprise in earnest.

Now, we ask not to have an invidious mark put upon Carson, that has taken hold of this work. It is the capital of the State. Now, every school of this character is named in the act making appropriations for the Indian service. If this is not a straight and honest case, requiring the action of Congress, none can be presented in favor of educating Indians.

Mr. COCKRELL. In other words, this is to equalize the distribution of the surplus. Other States have received appropriations for Indian schools, and Nevada has not, and therefore she must have her share!

I do not think it is a legitimate or an effective argument in behalf of this appropriation of $50,000 that Nevada has not received her share of appropriations to be expended for the Indians within her borders. Missouri has not received a dollar, Iowa has not received a dollar, Arkansas has not received a dollar. Now, why shall Nevada get this money? Is it because we found it convenient to establish an Indian school in Kansas in close proximity to fifty or sixty thousand Indians? Is that to be a reason why we shall establish a school in Nevada? I think that we ought to give some encouragement to the liberal and generous spirit shown by the people of Nevada in proposing to expend $10,000 of their own. That was the foundation, that was the motive power which brought this whole thing into existence. Now, I do not think they ought to abandon that liberal offer, and I do not think that the Senator from Nevada is treating his State properly when he places it before Congress as abandoning that offer of $10,000, and I would like very much to put in the bill as an amendment a proviso providing that the $10,000 appropriated by the Legislature of Nevada shall be made available and placed at the disposition of the Secretary of the Interior. If the Senator will put that amendment in, I shall be perfectly willing to leave the location of the school at Carson City.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is, whether we shall strike out "at Carson City" and leave the selection of the site for this Indian school to the Secretary of the Interior, or whether we will confine it down to Carson City regardless of whether that is a convenient place or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question on the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAWES. If an amendment which has been suggested to the Senator from Nevada should be adopted, it would not be necessary to adopt this amendment, because an amendment suggested to him makes it optional with the Secretary of the Interior to accept this donation if in his opinion the donation of this particular tract of land is a proper one for the school. Therefore if they offer a tract of land not less than 200 acres in Carson City, and in his opinion that particular 200 acres would not be the proper 200 acres, of course he would not accept it. So then with the amendment which the Senator from Nevada has——

Mr. COCKRELL. That has not been adopted.

Mr. STEWART. It has been adopted.

Mr. DAWES. I understand the Senator proposes to offer it.

Mr. STEWART. It has been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that the amendment referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts has been adopted.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to this fact, that the amendment adopted, which was not the amendment he has suggested, but that of the Senator from Nevada, applied to the first section. Now, if the Senator will read the second section he will see that the appropriation is made and the Secretary directed to go on independent of the first section.

Mr. DAWES. The amendment to which I allude is another amendment which I suggested to the Senator from Nevada to be added to the second section.

Mr. STEWART. I intend to propose that as soon as we get rid of this amendment.

Mr. DAWES. It is an amendment to the second section, the result of which will be that if the Secretary of the Interior is not satisfied with this offer of 200 acres of land in Carson City he will not accept it, and the act falls.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be offered now.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator from Missouri will listen to the amendment he will see that his is not necessary.

Mr. STEWART. I will send the amendment to the Chair to be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will withdraw the other temporarily, if the Senator will offer it.

Mr. STEWART. At the end of the bill add——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for information, as it is not now in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I withdraw my amendment, which will make that in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have already been ordered upon the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. By unanimous consent it can be withdrawn. I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Missouri withdrawing his amendment, the yeas and nays having been ordered? The Chair hears none; the amendment is withdrawn. The Senator from Nevada moves an amendment, which will be read.

Mr. STEWART It is to be added at the end of the bill.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the second section:

Whenever the land shall have been donated and accepted in conformity to the first section of this act.

So as to read:

SEC. 2. That the sum of $50,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by the Secretary of the Interior for the erection of buildings and such other matters as he may deem proper in establishing a school for the education of Indians at Carson City, in the State of Nevada, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe, whenever the land shall have been donated and accepted in conformity to the first section of this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALLOWANCES TO GREELY ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent for the taking up of Order of Business No. 61 on the Calendar.

Mr. BECK. Pending that, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Kentucky to allow me to have a vote on the joint resolution reported yesterday.

Mr. CHANDLER. I prefer that this bill be taken up first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Kentucky to withdraw the motion for a moment.

Mr. BECK. We want a short executive session before we adjourn to-day. I withdraw the motion for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves the present consideration of a bill. Is there objection?

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. 937) for the relief of David L. Brainard and others was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment of $703.75, in lieu of commutation of fuel and quarters and extra-duty pay, to David L. Brainard, Julius R. Frederick, Henry Biederbick, Francis Long, Maurice Connell, David Linn, Joseph Elison, Nicholas Salor, William A. Ellis, Charles B. Henry, William Whistler, Jacob Bender, Roderick R. Schneider, David C. Ralston, Hampden S. Gardner, Edward Israel, Winfield S. Jewell, George W. Rice, and William H. Cross, of the United States Army, who were on duty with Lieut. A. W. Greely in the Arctic regions from July 1, 1881, to June 30, 1884. If any of these persons shall have died prior to June 30, 1884, the allowances for commutation of fuel, extra-duty pay, and quarters are to be computed at the rates stated to the death of such persons, respectively; and in such case the amounts found due shall be paid to the widow of the deceased, if any survive; and if none, to the children, if any; and if none, to the next of kin of such person lawfully entitled.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUBTROPICAL EXPOSITION AT JACKSONVILLE.

Mr. CALL. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution reported yesterday by the Committee on Appropriations.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. R. 35) appropriating $20,000 for the subtropical exposition at Jacksonville, Fla., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out all after the resolving clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall send such exhibits from the National Museum as shall be selected by him, and the Commissioner of Agriculture such exhibits of plants, shrubs, and flowers as shall be selected by him, to the subtropical exhibition at Jacksonville, Fla., for the year 1888, and for the purpose of paying the expenses of transporting such exhibits to and from said exposition, and of arranging and taking care of them while there, the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture, and to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read:

A joint resolution appropriating $10,000 for the subtropical exposition at Jacksonville, Fla.

COMPULSORY INDIAN EDUCATION.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 30, being Senate bill No. 1095.

The Secretary read the title of the bill (S. 1095) to provide for the compulsory education of Indian children.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length for information, subject to objection.

The bill was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any report with the bill? If so, I should like to hear it. It is an exceedingly important bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that there is no printed report.

Mr. DAWES. This bill is the result of the experience of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] in the management of the Indians. It was drawn by him and was submitted to the last Congress. It was recommended by all those who have administered Indian affairs—I mean this idea in substance—for a good many years, and it was formulated by the Senator from Colorado at the last session of Congress, and was approved by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate at the last session, and it has met the unanimous approval of the committee at this session. I was going to move an amendment striking out the limitation of five years on my own responsibility, at the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado.

I take it that the efforts to educate Indian children are advancing, and as the results are being demonstrated we are brought more and more every year to assimilate them, as much as possible, to the education of our own children in the common schools; but on many of the reservations there is a reluctance on the part of a portion of the Indians to let their children go to school. There are two parties on all Indian reservations, which may properly be described as conservative and progressive, old Bourbons and those who desire to make headway and adopt the ways of white men. The old Indians, however, are desirous of continuing the old state of things. They imagine that they can restore themselves to the condition of the Indian twenty-five years ago. Every innovation upon that idea meets with resistance. It is found among the old Indians, especially among the parents of the scholars, and they resist the taking of their children into the schools.

This is left discretionary with the Secretary of the Interior by the bill, so that he can apply it on one reservation and omit to apply it on another, apply it in one way in one place and in another way in another place. It is flexible and intended to be adapted to the condition of things wherever he comes to deal with any tribe or band of Indians. It is putting the power in his hands—that is all—to deal with the Indians as a State would deal with the children of the State, or as a town would deal with the children of the school district whose system they have control of. It does not require him to do anything of the kind; it only authorizes him to do it.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator how much this country has expended for the education of Indian children?

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know that myself.

Mr. DAWES. Not one-tenth part as much as the United States solemnly covenanted that they would expend.

Mr. BLAIR. But the amount?

Mr. DAWES. More than $5,000,000 to-day stand to the credit of eight different tribes of Indians as against the solemn covenant of the United States, and that is a debt——

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator, because I do not know, if by treaty stipulation the Government of the United States has bound itself to make appropriations for the education of the Indians?

Mr. DAWES. The Government of the United States made in 1868 eight different treaties with eight different tribes of Indians, in which they covenanted to furnish a school-house and a teacher for every thirty children between the school ages of each band. The Secretary of the Interior reported four years ago to the Congress of the United States that it would have cost the United States, had they fulfilled these obligations up to that time, between three and four million dollars.

Mr. HARRIS. Then, as I understand the Senator from Massachusetts, the Government of the United States committed itself by treaty obligation to furnish a school-house and the means of making a school and securing the education of the Indian children. I want to ask the Senator, though, if this bill does not go a step beyond that. I take it for granted that the treaty stipulation was intended to respond to a necessity which was recognized by the Indians for education. Does not this bill go a step further and propose to compel the Indians to attend the schools whether they desire to do so or not?

Mr. DAWES. It does put in the power of the Secretary of the Interior, on any reservation, a treaty reservation or one that is not a treaty reservation, the power to take the children and send them to school, precisely as the law of many of the States, including my own State, authorizes and requires the parents of the children to put their children between the ages of five and sixteen in school so many months in each year.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to sustain the bill, but I did not know but that the Senator from Massachusetts might be able to give us the items of expenditure for Indian education.

Mr. DAWES. I can tell the Senator that in 1878 was the first special appropriation for forty years, outside of treaty stipulations, for the education of Indian children, and that was $10,000. It was $10,000 the next year; it was $20,000 the next year; it was $30,000 the next year; it was $60,000 the next year; it was $120,000 the next year; it was nine hundred and odd thousand dollars—I speak in round numbers—three years ago. Two years ago it was $1,200,000, and last year it was $1,100,000, in round sums.

Mr. BECK. I rose to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question before he sat down. He has referred to the very large amount of money due by the United States to the Indian school fund. My recollection is that we engaged to furnish them with schoolmasters and schools, farmers and mechanics and other artisans, but very many of the Indian tribes were not fit to carry on their schools and farming operations or do any of the things provided for in the treaties, and therefore we had year by year a general provision authorizing the President of the United States to apply the funds appropriated for those purposes to the use of the Indians in such a way as he thought would best promote their civilization.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no.

Mr. BECK. That has been done time and again, I know.

Mr. DAWES. I do not want to arraign the United States as a debtor for three or four million dollars under these treaties. The excuse the United States make for never having expended a dollar under them is this: The phraseology of the treaties is that they will furnish a teacher and a school-house for every thirty children ready to attend school, and the response of the United States is that no thirty children have walked up arm in arm with book in hand asking for a school-house and a schoolmarm, and therefore they have not been called upon to expend that money. Nevertheless, without any regard to these treaty obligations, the United States have done a great deal both for the treaty Indians and the non-treaty Indians in the line of education, and they are not to be censured but commended for what they have done. For the last three or four years they have expended, in my opinion, as much money as they could economically and wisely expend in that direction. Nevertheless we must go on step by step, and this obstacle that is in the way of a wise expenditure of a million or more of dollars each year is because the parents of these children do not want them educated and will not send them to school. This bill proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to take them and educate them.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall move to add "with the consent of the parents."

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] that the Indian children are to be taken to school with the consent of the parents shows that he has not studied the Indian question. I am not going to find fault with the Government of the United States in regard to its dealings with the Indians. It has not dealt wisely with them, but it has dealt munificently with them; and there is not in the history of the world an instance where a people have been dealt with so generously as the Indians on this continent have been dealt with by the American people. All the talk that we hear about the outrages committed in taking their land is largely the result of ignorance and is not based on fact.

We have bought their lands and paid for them, as no nation ever bought lands of the aborigines before in the history of the world. But we have not been wise in our dealings with the Indians. If we had been, they would not be Indians to-day; we should have incorporated that great body of people, nearly equal now in number to what they were when the continent was discovered, into our body politic, and we should have raised them from barbarism and savagery to civilized life.

This bill I introduced after consultation with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It was to meet a case of this kind; and the Senator from Delaware will see at once that his suggestion would destroy the bill. On many of the Indian reservations we have day-schools and on some of them we have boarding-schools. We have established and maintained from time to time both day-schools and boarding-schools, and paid all the expenses, sometimes without a single pupil, and not infrequently not more than three or four pupils in a school that ought to have accommodated forty or fifty and sometimes one hundred. The Indians would all the time draw off the Government their support, doing nothing, absolutely supported and fed and clothed by the General Government—a munificence, I say, extended to them that is withheld from people of our own blood who are unfortunate, who are in poverty and in want, upon the simple theory that they were the original owners of this continent, a theory that never had lodgment in any brain except that of the American, and it ought to have no lodgment in any man's brain, for the earth does not belong to savage men; it does not belong to men who do not cultivate it and use it. It belongs to him who will from it wring substance for his support; and neither the Government of the United States nor any other power has a right to say that the land which the Almighty made for men to live upon and to cultivate shall be kept by Indians, upon which they shall subsist simply and not earn from it their living.

But we support these men, women, and children, giving them all their food and all their clothing, and we profess to educate them, and then we say to the savage, "Go to school if you see fit, and if you do not you need not." Thus year after year under these treaties we maintain schools at agencies where to-day there will not be found 3 per cent., and in some instances not 1 per cent., of the whole population that can be said to have been benefited at all by these schools. You may take some of the tribes that I could mention where we have from fifteen to twenty years maintained schools, where it is utterly impossible to find a full-blooded native who can read or write or sign his name. Why? Because we have sent out a teacher to teach who had not any special interest in getting in the children. The teacher got his pay whether the children came or whether they did not come. The agents had not any interest in it, the Indian had not any interest in it, and so the schools have not been taught, but the wages have been paid in many cases under treaty for at least twenty years.

Now, this bill is for the purpose of requiring these people to send their children to school, many of them living on the munificence of this Government, having no claim to the land, and never having had any claim to it, for all that region that we took from the Mexicans by conquest, or from the Spaniards by purchase, did not belong to the Indians. It is only the English portion of this continent where the principle is recognized of the right of the aborigines to the soil. No Indian in Mexico, no Indian in California, no Indian in New Mexico, no Indian in more than one-half of Colorado and Arizona and all that great section of country, was ever recognized by the authorities existing previous to the advent of the United States as having the slightest control or interest in the land; yet on that land contracted for with the Government from which we acquired this territory, where we may treat the Indians as they had been treated by the previous government, we have recognized their right to an interest in the soil, and we are maintaining thousands of them in idleness and in vice.

This bill says to them, "If you will not put your children in the schools you may keep them out, but if you keep them out you shall make your own living, you shall cultivate the soil, or get your living in some other way than from the Treasury of the United States." Does anybody say that that is unreasonable? Does anybody say that that is harsh or cruel? If we are to deal with these people at all, we must deal with them considering their lack of capacity to deal for themselves. Therefore, I hold that it is the duty of the Government to say to them—not simply that it is an advantage to the Government, but the duty of the Government to say, "You must educate your children, you must put them in a way to cease to be savages, you must put them on the road to civilization and progress." That is all there is in this bill, Mr. President. It is simply to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to say, "Now, here is a school-house, here is a teacher; you are getting your bread and your butter and your clothes from the Government, and we will cut off your bread and butter and clothes if you do not show some disposition to educate your children."

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado a question, if he will yield.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. What does he propose to do on reservations where there are no boarding-schools? How does he propose, under the provisions of this bill, to take the children away from the wigwams and teach them and carry them to a district school, and then return them to the parents at night?

Mr. TELLER. The whole matter is left to the discretion of the Secretary. He will not do it if he has not the appliances.

Mr. VEST. The Senator has been Secretary of the Interior. Does he propose now for us to pass this bill, and put in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior the power to take as much money as he sees proper out of the Treasury to establish boarding-schools and industrial schools where they do not exist? That is the point.

Mr. TELLER. No. The Senator is not serious when he asks that question. He knows that there is not the power to draw money by any executive officer from the Treasury of this Government, however full it may be, except he has the legislative sanction of Congress. He knows very well that you may impose a duty upon any public officer, but if you withhold from him the money he is not to execute that law. It is only when you have given him the money, when you have said, "Here is the means to do this," that he is required to do it. With the million of dollars or more every year that is appropriated for Indian schools under treaties that are now in existence, where teachers are maintained, but not the schools, the Secretary of the Interior may under this bill, if this bill should become a law, put the children into a day-school or in a boarding-school, as the opportunity may be presented to him. If there is a boarding-school, he will put them in a boarding-school; if there is a day-school, he will put them in the day-school, and if there is neither he will not put them in either. Whether this shall become an efficient and valuable law will depend upon the Appropriations Committee very largely when they come to report to the Senate the appropriations for Indian schools and Indian education.

Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire asked how much we had expended on Indian schools. I have not the exact amount. The Senator from Massachusetts made the general statement. Up to 1880 practically we had expended nothing except what we had expended by virtue of treaties. Since that time we have expended, as he stated, as high as $1,200,000 in a year. For more than ten years consecutively, since the close of the great war of our rebellion, for ten straight years, every month of the year, we paid out more for Indian wars than we paid in any one year for Indian education, and in one six months, any six months during those ten years, we paid more money than we have paid since 1880 for the education of the Indian children.

I do not insist, as a great many people do, that because we have the Indian lands we are bound to educate the Indian children. I deny that we have robbed the Indians. I deny that we are now under any legal or moral obligation, except in a case where we have made a treaty to furnish them provisions, clothing, etc.; but I say it is to the interest of the General Government that we should do this, for the six millions that you pay out every year you will pay out until the end of time unless you do educate the Indians so that they shall become self-supporting. No Indian will be self-supporting until he is taught to work. I think that experience has shown that a mere book education does not make an Indian self-supporting. I would not give a cent for all the Indians in the country if they had a classical education, for if they are not taught to work they will be vagabonds, and they will always be vagabonds just as long as the Government of the United States expends its six millions a year for their support. If we are to do nothing but leave them in this course, let things go on as they are doing; if we propose to make them self-supporting and make them ultimately citizens of the Republic, then we have got to take them with the strong hand and compel them to get education.

And, Mr. President, I believe in the doctrine of compulsory education for white men, and black men, and red men alike. I hold it to be the duty of the government, I do not mean the General Government now, but the State is charged with this—I hold it to be the duty of the State whenever a parent shall so far neglect his duty to his family as to leave his children to grow up in ignorance and vice, to provide a method by which he shall be compelled to put them in the schools that the State furnishes to give them an education. I would not do anything for the Indian here that I would not do in my own State for the white children of my State if the parents were so disregardful of their duty as to fail to educate their children.

Mr. President, we may dally with this Indian question as we have been dallying year after year. To-day the Indians are increasing. There are more of them than there were last year, and more of them than there were twenty years ago, and with the peace that we have compelled them to observe one with another they are increasing quite as rapidly as the white people of this country, and in some tribes very much more so. Now, what is to be done with this great mass of people who are growing up in ignorance? Are we discharging our duty when we leave them outside of the schools because they say they do not want to go to school? I do not think so. I am satisfied, after a great many years of observation and some years of experience, that there is but one way to settle the Indian question. It never will be settled in any other way until you compel the Indian to blister his hands. I repeat what I have said here before and what has been repeated until it has become trite in the Senate, that no people ever yet emerged from barbarism that did not emerge through labor. No people have ever been civilized by outside efforts, and no people ever will be. It is only when you compel the people themselves to support themselves that they come up; and you may send your teachers to the Indians and you may keep them even in the schools, if you do not with this compel labor, the education that will enable them to support themselves, and ultimately say to them, "Having thus educated you, you must now take care of yourselves"—if we do not do that we shall have the Indian problem with us for all time.

Increasing in number, increasing in expense, increasing in degradation (for the wild Indian to-day is not better in any part of the continent than he was previous to his contact with civilization), he has picked up the vices and few of the virtues of civilized life; but if you take hold of the Indian, put him in school where he can be taught not simply to read but to work, beneficial results will come. You should teach him the English language, and then teach him to work, and if he goes out of the school with those who think and work, although he does not know a letter, though he can not read a page, and though he can not sign his name, if he can speak English and knows how to hoe corn and to plow and when to plant and when to reap, then he is on the road to progress and he can take care of himself, and then it will be the duty of the Government to say to him, "Having given you this start, now do just as my white people do, either support yourselves or go to the wall."

If they go to the wall they will do what thousands of savage people have done in their progress to civilization. Many of them will go to the wall, but some of them will come up, and they will come up, I repeat again, just as all other people have come, when they themselves will it and when they themselves determine it, and they will not come without that. This bill looks to this one step. It is a little step, a short step, but it is a step in the direction of putting the hand of the Government on these people and putting them in the way in which they should go and compelling them to go, or, if they choose not to go, then say, "You shall no longer share in the munificence of this Government," and when the Indian is met with starvation or civilization, he will take civilization every time, and he will not do it much before, in my judgment.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I suppose the Senator from Massachusetts will want to be heard again on this very important bill, and I hope we may now have an executive session for a little while. Therefore, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

ROCK CREEK BRIDGE.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Kentucky, if the Senator in charge of the pending bill will consent, to suspend that motion until the Chair lays before the Senate a House bill that I shall ask to have considered, if it leads to no debate, as I presume will be the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee appeals to the Senator from Kentucky to withdraw his motion.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Kentucky consents?

Mr. BECK. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (H. R. 1184) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek at the Woodley Lane road, in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read twice by its title.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, on the 7th of February the Committee on the District of Columbia, on the recommendation of the commissioners of the District, instructed me to report substantially and almost literally the bill that has passed the House and come to us. I ask the Senate to consider it at this time.

Mr. MORRILL. I think that bill ought to be printed, so that we can all see what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects to the present consideration of the bill.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BECK. I renew my motion for an executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 15, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 14, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. Dr. BRUSH, president of Dakota University.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the reading of that portion of the Journal relating to the introduction and reference of bills will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The remainder of the Journal was read and approved.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were read a first and second time, and referred as follows, namely:

The bill (S. 279) making an appropriation for the purchase of ground and the erection thereon in the city of Washington of a building to be used as a hall of records—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (S. 1938) making an additional appropriation for the relief of the poor in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 1346) to authorize the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 5514) to amend section 4883 of the Revised Statutes, to enable the Assistant Secretary of the Interior to sign patents; and

Joint resolution (S. R. 50) appointing Andrew D. White a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BARRY, on account of sickness.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. House bill No. 5899, entitled "A bill for the relief of the American Postal Machines Company," has been referred to the Committee on Claims, to which it really properly belongs under the rules of the House. But the Chair is advised that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads has now under consideration the subject to which it relates, and it is requested that this bill be referred to that committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. I did not hear the subject of the bill to which the Chair refers.

The SPEAKER. It relates to the bill which provides for the use by the Government of the machine for the cancellation of stamps. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads has the subject under consideration, and the Chair thinks this bill should take the same course.

Mr. DOCKERY. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads directed the reference to the Committee on Claims, I think.

Mr. COLLINS. That was done under a misapprehension of the facts. This is on its face a mere claim, it is true, but it involves the question of the use of the invention; and as the whole subject is already before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads it is hardly necessary, it seems, that the matter should be divided between two committees.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the reference will be changed as indicated.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ADDITIONAL DAY FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolution to set apart two days in each month for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, has had the same under consideration, and reports back a substitute therefor with the recommendation that it be passed.

The substitute is as follows:

Resolved, That the second and fourth Mondays in each month, after the call of States and Territories, shall, when claimed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, be set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented by said committee.

Mr. MILLS. Under existing rules the District of Columbia has but one day set apart for the consideration of business reported by it—that is, the second Monday in each month. Owing to the increase in population and business of the city, it has been found that the time thus allotted to the District Committee is not sufficient for the transaction of its business; and as this is the only legislative body that can attend to its business, the committee believe this additional day should be granted. They requested that another day be given to them, and the Committee on Rules, after considering the matter, have agreed to report this substitute, allowing them the fourth as well as the second Monday in each month.

If there be no desire to discuss the matter I shall ask for a vote.

Mr. ADAMS. What committee has the fourth Monday now?

Mr. MILLS. It is not assigned to any committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas in this connection whether the Committee on Rules has considered the amendment pending before the committee to give to the Territories one day in the month?

Mr. MILLS. That is not up now. We will have it up hereafter. We are only reporting such matters as we have acted upon. A number of matters are still pending before the committee.

I ask a vote.

The substitute was agreed to; and the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. MILLS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON THE LIBRARY.

Mr. MILLS. I present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Rules reports the following amendment to Rule X, as amended at the present session, to wit:

Strike out the words "the Committee on Library, to consist of five members," and insert the words "the Committee on Library, to consist of three members."

The committee finds that the statute prescribes that the Joint Committee on the Library shall consist of three members from the Senate and three from the House of Representatives, and as the Senate committee now consists of but three members, the increased number upon the part of the House has occasioned some embarrassment in the transaction of business. The committee therefore believe it is better to reduce the number of members on the committee from the House, even if it be conceded that the House has power, notwithstanding the statute, to create a committee of five. If the amendment now proposed be adopted by the House it will be necessary to reduce the committee as now constituted, and it is therefore recommended that the member last named on the part of the majority and minority respectively be dropped.

Mr. MILLS. As explained by the report of the committee, the House Committee on the Library is composed of five members, while an act of Congress requires the joint committee to be composed of three members from the Senate and three from the House. It seems this law had escaped the attention of both the Senate and the House, and they had committees of five members in each body. The Senate committee is now composed of three members, so as to conform to the statute. The Committee on Rules proposes that the same shall be done as regards the committee of the House, and that two members shall be dropped from the committee.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to know whether the Committee on Rules concede at all the right of a statute to regulate the number of members of a committee, or whether the report merely is based on the idea of paying some deference to the view of the Senate.

Mr. MILLS. The report states in substance that, without discussing the question suggested by the gentleman from Georgia, it is best to make the committee of the House of Representatives forming part of the joint committee to consist of three members. We do not enter in the report into the question of the constitutional right of the House to appoint its own committees.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand that you simply waive that right, notwithstanding the statute?

Mr. MILLS. That is all.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. MILLS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. CANNON. I present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to which was referred a proposed amendment in relation to the voluntary appearance of members during the call of the House, has had the same under consideration, and report the following substitute therefor, with a recommendation that it be adopted:

That Rule XV be amended by adding thereto the following:

"Members who voluntarily appear shall, unless the House otherwise direct, be immediately admitted to the Hall of the House, and they shall report their names to the Clerk, to be entered upon the Journal as present."

Much inconvenience and delay have resulted heretofore from the fact that members who voluntarily appear during a call of the House are unable to secure admission to the floor, unless accompanied and reported to the House by the Sergeant-at-Arms. If the amendment now proposed be adopted, members who thus appear will be at once admitted, and upon reporting to the Clerk, their names will be entered upon the roll of those present, and consequently it may be possible to secure a quorum in many cases without waiting for the action of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. CANNON. The report sufficiently explains the necessity for the rule. I move its adoption.

The resolution reported by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BILLS, ETC., INTRODUCED BY REQUEST.

Mr. CANNON. I present another privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The report of the Committee on Rules was read, as follows:

The Committee on Rules has had under consideration a proposition to amend the rules so as to provide that when a bill or resolution is introduced by request the words "by request" shall be entered upon the Journal, and reports the following substitute therefor, with the recommendation that it be adopted:

"When a bill, resolution, or memorial is introduced 'by request,' these words shall be entered upon the Journal."

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. CANNON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CANNON. I present another privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to which was referred a proposed amendment in relation to the call of the roll of members of the House, has had the same under consideration, and report back the following substitute therefor, with the recommendation that it be adopted:

Amend clause 1 of Rule XV so as to read as follows: "Upon every roll-call the names of the members shall be called alphabetically by surnames, except when two or more have the same surnames, in which case the name of the State shall be added, and if there be two such members from the same State the whole name shall be called; and after the roll has been once called the Clerk shall call in their alphabetical order the names of those not voting, and thereafter the Speaker shall not entertain a request to record a vote or announce a pair."

Mr. CANNON. I move the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to hear some explanation of the proposed change in the rule.

Mr. CANNON. I think the report explains itself, and I do not know that I can state it any better than it is stated in the report itself. I call for the reading of the report again.

A MEMBER. What is the proposed change of the rule?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the only change in the rule proposed is that when there is more than one member of the same surname from the same State, the State shall be called as well as the name.

Mr. LONG. Suppose a member does not hear his name when it is called, what will be the effect of the rule in that case?

The SPEAKER. There is no change in the rule with respect to that.

Mr. LONG. I thought from the reading of the last part of the amendment that it changed the present rule in that respect.

Mr. OATES. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois this question: What is the necessity of retaining that portion of the rule with reference to calling the names of members a second time as regards members who are absent by leave of the House?

Mr. CANNON. I apprehend more time will be saved by calling the names than by finding out who are absent by leave of the House.

Mr. OATES. Is it not to be presumed that the Clerk is informed who are absent by leave?

Mr. CANNON. I suppose that may be presumed, but I do not know that the Clerk has the memorandum always before his eyes. I presume he can call the roll more speedily by calling all the names than by keeping track of the leaves of absence.

Mr. OATES. I simply wanted to know what the reason was for the proposed change.

Mr. BREWER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] whether it is not a fact that the last clause of the rule is violated every day when the roll is called?

Mr. CANNON. I can not say as to that.

Mr. BREWER. Does not the gentleman know of his own knowledge that members are permitted to vote after the second roll-call?

Mr. CANNON. I know that the Speaker, under the construction of that rule, has been in the habit of taking the word of gentlemen that they were present, paying attention to the call of the roll, and did not hear their names called, and I can readily see how the Speaker would feel bound to take the word of a gentleman touching that matter under such circumstances.

Mr. BREWER. As I understand it, the Speaker asks the member if he was present during the roll-call, but does not ask him whether he heard his name called, and if the gentleman says that he was present, then he is permitted to vote.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman can see at once that the rule is plain and direct, but when we come to put the rule in practice, I can not conceive how the Speaker could very well afford to refuse to take a member's word upon a question touching his right to vote.

Mr. BREWER. Then the rule itself is inoperative?

Mr. CANNON. I think not.

Mr. ADAMS. If my colleague [Mr. CANNON] will allow me one observation, I think that what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BREWER] desires to call attention to is that under the rule as it exists no man would be allowed to record his vote even if he were in his seat during the roll-call; so it is not a question whether the word of a member shall be taken, but whether the rule shall be stretched so as to allow even members who were in their seats to vote, a thing which the rule by its terms does not permit.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I apprehend that the Speaker could speak much more authoritatively on this subject than I can, but while my colleague [Mr. ADAMS] is correct so far as the text of the rule is concerned——

Mr. ADAMS. That is all I spoke about.

Mr. CANNON. While my colleague is correct so far as the text of the rule is concerned, I apprehend that the rule could not stand for a moment if it was so construed as to prevent from voting a gentleman who was present in his seat and giving attention to the roll-call, but who failed to hear his name called. When a member who was present and failed to hear his name, rises in his place and makes that statement, if he could still be debarred from voting the rule could not stand. The rule must be construed reasonably, so as to advance the business of the House and protect the rights of members. As the gentleman [Mr. BREWER] has asked me the question, I will say that I believe there is an abuse of the rule in some cases. I have known members to say that they were present during roll-call, when in fact they were not present during the whole of the call, but were present for a few moments while the roll was being called, and in that way satisfied their consciences in making the statement.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no occasion for any misapprehension about the effect of this proposed rule. It does not change at all the existing rule, except in two particulars. Where there are two members of the same surname it provides that the Clerk shall call the States from which they come. If there are two members of the same surname from the same State, then the rule proposes that the full Christian names of the gentlemen shall be called. There is no other change, and the discussion which has arisen here is not necessary. The report recites the old rule because that seemed to be required in order to make the report intelligible.

Mr. CANNON. I move the adoption of the report.

The report was adopted.

Mr. CANNON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION OF COMMITTEE REPORTS.

Mr. RANDALL, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Rules reports the following amendment to Rule XXIV, to wit: After the word "Delegate" in the third clause in said rule insert the following words: "if requested in writing by the Member or Delegate."

Under the existing rule the Public Printer mails to each member of the House a copy of all the reports made by its committees, and the consequence is that the supply of such reports in the document-room is very frequently exhausted before the subject comes up for consideration in the House. Members of the House usually receive their mail at their residences, and the reports are sent there, and consequently are not accessible when needed at the House. Under the proposed amendment, any Member or Delegate who desires the reports sent to him can, at the beginning of a session or afterwards, notify the Public Printer in writing, and thereupon it will be the duty of that officer to send them to him as heretofore. The committee recommends the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I think this report is sufficiently explicit to make plain to every member the effect of the proposed change of the rules. At present there is mailed to every member of the House a copy of every printed report. Inconvenience has resulted from this, because sometimes too small a number of reports is thus left in the House document-room, so that when bills come up for consideration members can not obtain from the document-room the reports they desire. Many members no doubt wish to receive these reports at their residences, because thus they are enabled to acquaint themselves with a report more readily than if they received it during the sessions of the House. Those who wish still to receive the reports in this way can do so. It will only be necessary for them to send a notification to the Public Printer. In the absence of such a notification the member's copies of reports will go to the House document-room. I call for the previous question.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether this rule, going into effect immediately, will require notice to be given at once in cases where members desire to receive these reports at their rooms for the remainder of the session?

Mr. RANDALL. This amended rule will go into effect at once.

Mr. DINGLEY. And members must give notice at once if they desire to receive these reports at their residences?

Mr. RANDALL. If they wish to have that arrangement continue they must give notice to the Public Printer.

Mr. DINGLEY. Precisely.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the Committee on Rules was adopted; there being—ayes 110, noes 8.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPRINTING OF BILLS, ETC., REPORTED ADVERSELY.

Mr. RANDALL. I am further instructed by the Committee on Rules to submit the report which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules reports the following proposed amendment to Rule XLVI, to wit:

Amend Rule XLVI by adding thereto the following: "Unless ordered by the House, no bill, resolution, or other proposition reported by a committee shall be reprinted unless the same be placed upon the Calendar."

Under the rules of the House as they now exist, 100 copies of each private bill and 500 copies of each public bill are printed when the bills are introduced, but when any bill, either public or private, is reported back from a committee, either favorably or adversely, it is again printed, and in the case of private bills 500 copies are furnished. The committee is unable to see the necessity or propriety of reprinting bills and resolutions which are reported upon adversely and laid upon the table. There is no further consideration of such bills, and the printing is entirely useless. The proposed amendment as now reported will prevent the reprinting of any bill, resolution, or other proposition unless the same be placed on the Calendar of the House, or unless specially ordered by the House.

Mr. RANDALL. The effect of the amendment proposed in this report will be to dispense with the reprinting of bills which are reported adversely and do not go upon the Calendar. When so reported a single member has the right to demand that the bill shall go to the Calendar, and in such a case the bill would be reprinted; but where no such request is made, the bill, having been reported adversely, is practically dead, and there is no occasion for printing copies of it in addition to the original number printed upon the introduction of the bill, being 100 in the case of a private bill and 500 in the case of a public bill.

Mr. OATES. As I understand, this proposition will prevent the reprinting of bills and reports when the report is adverse.

Mr. RANDALL. If a bill reported adversely goes to the Calendar it will be reprinted; but if it goes to the table no additional copies will be printed.

Mr. OATES. Ought there not to be some method by which members whose bills are reported adversely may have them placed upon the Calendar subsequently to the presentation of the adverse report?

Mr. RANDALL. I take it for granted that whenever a member is interested in the subject embraced in a bill he is on the alert when the report is made. In every case the bill is printed upon its introduction.

Mr. OATES. As I understand this proposition, it is a good amendment to the rules, though it would seem to require a greater amount of "alertness" than members are accustomed to exercise.

Mr. RANDALL. Even where a bill reported adversely goes to the table and not to the Calendar, the House, if it so chooses, can order the printing of an additional number.

The question being taken, the report of the Committee on Rules was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMPILATION OF REBELLION RECORDS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in response to a resolution of the House calling for information relative to the plan and scope of the compilation of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, and transmitting a report thereon from Lieut. Col. H. M. Lazelle, in charge of the publication of war records; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SUPPORT OF PRISONERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Attorney-General of an additional appropriation for support of prisoners for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSE, ETC., AT CASTLE HILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a deficiency estimate from the Light-House Board of appropriation for the establishment of light-house and fog-signal at Castle Hill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.
